No industry has advanced more rapidly in the past ten years than the manufacture of pianos. Nor has a greater revolution taken place. Twenty-five years ago there were but few makes of any wide reputation and they made but few instruments. Then the Jesse French Piano & Organ Co. were comparatively unknown. Now they are the best known firm in America, with branches in many of our leading cities, and one of, if not the largest, manufacturers and dealers in the U. S., as their output this year is expected to reach nearly 6,000 pianos. They manufacture the three well-known popular pianos, namely, the celebrated Starr, Jesse French and Richmond, household names from ocean to ocean, and the lakes to the Gulf, favorably known for their artistic merit and and great durability, being made and sold on honor under a full guarantee. The secret of their success lies in the fact that they have always made it a rule to furnish the best goods at lowest prices—and we feel assured that any of our readers contemplating purchasing a piano will do well before buying to drop them a line; a two-cent stamp may save you many dollars. JESUS REJECTED AT NAZARETH.*

The chronology of this period of Jesus' life is very uncertain, and we can only follow the order of events that seems to us most consistent, conscious that others will differ from us, and for what they will count the best of reasons. Happily, the chronology is not essential to the value of the story of Jesus' life, however satisfactory it would prove to have these questions settled. To quote the words of Farrar: "We shall never know all that we could wish to know about but we will still be the children of God and the disciples of his Christ if we keep his sayings and do the things which he commanded."

'The sinless years
That breathed beneath the Syrian blue,'

Without assuming, therefore, absolute certainty for our conclusions, we will take it for granted that the event of our lesson occurred very soon after Jesus' entrance into Galilee. After a stay of two days in Samaria, resulting in the acceptance of his claims by a multitude of the people, he came to the city of Cana, the home of Nathanael and the scene of his first miracle. Here he performs a wonderful cure upon the son of a "nobleman," or "royal officer," whose home was in Capernaum. The feature of especial interest in this miracle was the faith of the nobleman, and the sign was the more significant because it showed the power of Jesus to work his mighty deeds without regard to the presence of those whom he would heal. It is possible that this officer was Chuza, Herod's steward, whose wife ministered to the necessities of the Lord, as told by Luke, chapter 8:3. If it was her son whom he healed in this way, her gratitude knew no bounds.

From Cana Jesus went at once to Nazareth. Though his family had probably taken up their abode in Capernaum before this time, the place would still be dear to him as his home for nearly thirty years. He would go first with his message to his old friends and neighbors, though he knew well the general truth of the old proverb, "A prophet is without honor in his own country." His first opportunity to speak to them was at the service of the Sabbath day in the synagogue. These houses for worship orignated during the captivity, while the pious Jews were debarred from going to the temple at Jerusalem, which, indeed, had been destroyed. On their return to Palestine they erected synagogues in every city and town in their own land and in other communities among the Gentiles wherever there were a sufficient number to form a congregation. These synagoges afforded a convenient center from which the apostles afterwards sounded out the gospel in every city of the Roman Empire.

Jesus, "as his custom was," went to the Sabbath service. He might have made an excuse of the barren formality of the synagogue ritual, or the utter hypocrisy of the Pharisees and scribes, who led in the worship, or even the manifold corruptions of doctrine through the traditions of the elders, and refused to attend worship at all. There are many who would now claim the sanction of his example. But he did not so. He was found in his wonted place, conscious that the sincerity of his own heart would make his worship pleasing to the Heavenly Father. The fame of Jesus, which had already reached his former home, would make it natural that the authorities of the synagogue should invite him to conduct the service for the day. The ritual of prayers and chants being ended, he stood up to read the passage from the prophets, upon which the day's discourse should be based. Unrolling the parchment which contained the Book of Isaiah, he found the passage with which the 61st chapter opens and read it as we may believe with utmost impressiveness. He closed his reading with the words, "To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," omitting the following clause: "And the day of vengeance of our God." He would bring a message of grace, and the yearning of his own heart found no place for the thought of vengeance at that hour. With breathless attention the auditors listened to his discourse. We are given only the opening sentence: "To-day hath this Scripture been fulfilled in your ears." This was a startling introduction, for the Jews all understood this passage in Isaiah to refer to the ministry of the Messiah. But his "words of grace" that followed came with such sweet persuasiveness that their souls were lifted up into the region of exalted hopefulness, and they began to rejoice together in the immediate promise of the Messiah's reign of mercy and peace.

But human nature could not be at once transformed, and bitter prejudice would not be dispelled, even by superhuman wisdom and grace. These Nazarenes, as he neared the close of his discourse, were reminded that this young man, who arrogated to himself such awful dignity and power, was one whose whole life had been spent in their streets. How could it be that he had lived among them all these years unidentified? It were easier to deny the truth of his words, wonderful as had been their secret power over their minds, than to confess their lifelong blindness. "If he is Messiah, why does he not do the works here which we have heard he did elsewhere?" Charity begins at home. The physician ought surely to heal himself and his own people first. Jesus read their hearts and knew how they were repeating these devil's mottoes and he administered severe and swift rebuke. Pointing them to the stories of Elijah and Elisha, as found in the 17th chapter of 1 Kings and the 5th chapter of 2 Kings, he showed them how the Lord had before passed by the chosen people to bestow mercy upon the uncircumcised. They were not ready for the healing ministry of the Christ till their hearts were renewed by a sincere faith in the Scriptures of their own prophets. Their unbelief would forbid his working among them the deeds of mercy which they would interpret only as the acts of an ambitious wonder-worker.

His rebuke filled them with wrath. What! would he liken them to the heathen of Sidon? Would he dare compare the residents of his own city to the loathsome leper? This was too much to bear. Their anger burst all bounds and, seizing him with rude hands, they poured out of the synagogue and hurried, a tumultuous mob, up the steep hill at whose foot the city lay, purposing to hurl Jesus from the top of a steep cliff. How cruel has religious prejudice and intolerance ever been! No words of grace are sweet enough to rob the selfish heart of its bitterness, and they who a little while ago were marveling at his gentle and divine discourse are now hastening to defile their city and crimson their hands with his innocent blood.

How often, in after years, must these men of Nazareth have recalled this occasion, and with what thankfulness would those who had then accepted Jesus as the Messiah remember how they were balked in their evil purpose. His hour had not yet come; and while the Master let them proceed with their base and riotous design until they reached the brow of the hill, he then turned his face upon them with that silent gaze of majesty before which men ever and always quailed. They could not carry out their purpose, their hands fell from his person, their feet refused to obey their behest and follow after him, and the Son of God passed untouched through the midst of his enemies and went his solitary way. Once more he visited Nazareth, perhaps a year later, but he did not tarry, and they again let him depart without recognizing their Lord and Savior. "He came unto his own and his own received him not." O, how many hearts are still blind and hear unmoved the gracious words of Jesus, without recognizing in him their promised Redeemer. How important that the hearts of the children shall be opened for his entrance before the world has filled them with its vain and sinful ambitions and pleasures. We are his own, for he has bought us with his precious blood. Let it not be said of us that "he came unto his own and his own received him not."

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 25.

THE STRENGTH OF HUMILITY.

Strength is generally exerted to rise or to raise, either to elevate oneself or others. Our Scripture declares that the means of rising or of raising lies in the truest sense in humility; for it is he that humbleth himself that is to be exalted. The best means of elevation, then, is by self-abasement, yes, self-effacement; for when selfish considerations and self-exaltation are put entirely aside, then and then only is true exaltation possible.

How many a person's truest success has all been ruined, or at least curtailed, how many a one's efficiency has been crippled, by an undue estimate placed upon his own importance. How often are we all conscious oftimes, or at least how often are we able afterwards to look back at times when we have lost power by the thrusting forward of self into our work.

Phillips Brooks said that, in his preaching, so long as he entirely lost himself in his work, all went well; but as soon as he began to think, "How am I saying or doing this? what impression shall I make by this?" at that moment he connsciously lost power. And is this not true of all work that any of us engage in? Our work only reaches its highest dignity and power when self is effaced, and the work is done "for the joy of the working" and for the advancement of the work.

There is nothing that so blinds our eyes and palsies our hands as for self to get between us and our end. We used, at old Bethany College, to walk prison fashion in lock-step on the old corridors, singing our college songs. A friend used to walk oftentimes in front of me, a very dear friend, who was as broad as he was long, which is saying a great deal, and who shut out all the view in front of me. I could not see the green trees and grass, and the hills and valleys that surround old Bethany, but could only see a broad expanse of gray back. I had to run round the side to catch a glimpse of the beauties of nature. So isn't it true that self—however dear—often gets between us and the light of life, obscuring beauties and limiting the outlook to a pitifully dull, grayish and monotonous hue? The only salvation is to run around self and get in front.

Nothing more quickly wins the hearts of men than selfless, gentle, kindly humility. Nothing more quickly repels men's hearts than a self-assertive and presumptuous bearing. This is not saying that one should fail to put a just estimate upon one's powers, far from it. Indeed, the greatest men have often, though thoroughly humble in their bearing, been entirely conscious of their own greatness, power and genius. Jesus himself is our best example. Altogether unassuming, but altogether self-confident, he uttered some of the most stupendous "I's" that men's ears have ever heard.

True himility is not self-depreciation; it is self-appreciation. It is not underestimating oneself, but estimating oneself at one's proper value. Such self-estimate is never offensive to others. Its calm, judicious equipoise is precisely what wins entrance to men's good graces. He that humbleth himself shall have exalted places in the hearts of men; not, of course, by seeking, for this same high place fleeth like the will-o'-the-wisp from those who seek.

Bethany Reading Courses.

OUR STUDY OF MISSIONS AND THE MARCH OFFERING.

By J. Z. Tyler, General Manager and Editor.

The scheme of study designed for the Bethany C. E. Reading Circle presents three separate and distinct courses: 1. There is a course in Bible study giving, first of all, a bird's-eye view of the sixty-six books of the Bible and the line of history by which they are united; then taking the life and teachings of Jesus as the very heart of the New Testament; 2. There is a course devoted to the plea and history of the Disciples, briefly sketching the rise of this nineteenth century reformation, making clear the principles that guide it, briefly sketching the lives of some of its principal pioneers, and finally setting forth the biblical basis upon which its chief distinctive doctrines rest; 3. There is a course in the study of missions giving, first of all, a wonderfully compact yet clear view of the entire subject, then taking up the missionary work of the Disciples in all its departments, and finally giving a thrillingly graphic sketch of a number of the great heroes of modern missions. These are the three separate and distinct lines of study pursued in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses. Readers are at liberty to take any one, or to take all three, just as they may think best.

I wish to speak just now of our course in the study of missions, with special reference to the offering to be taken in the month of March. The course is not devoted exclusively to Foreign Missions, but deals impartially with every part of our missionary operations, both at home and abroad. From the very first until now it has received the most cordial support of all our missionary secretaries and boards, and is coming to be recognized, more and more, as an important, fundamental factor in the development of the missionary spirit among the Disciples. It is coming to be understood that if we ever develop into the great missionary people that we ought to be there must be a diffusion of missionary intelligence, and that this diffusion must begin among the young. They must know the great fields, the great facts, the great forces, the great heroes in this, the greatest of all the struggles of the ages. The history of missions is the profoundest part of human history. All the surface progress of the race, the noise and commotion, are as nothing compared with the deep spiritual movement known under the general name of missions. There are no heroes equal to the heroes of the mission field. There are no motives so vital in their nature or so vast in their sweep as missionary motives. In all human enterprise there is no scheme so magnificent in its ultimate purpose. There is no department of education upon which more emphasis ought to be laid, just now, not only in our colleges, but in all our churches. Our young people need to feel the greatness of this enterprise; they must be made familiar with its great facts. To aid in this is one of the chief purposes of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, and it is gratifying to its promoters to know that the large fruitage is already appearing. The rising generation will be more enthusiastically and intelligently missionary, because of this more general diffusion of missionary intelligence.

Our three handbooks on missions are admirable condensations. The one prepared by Archibald McLean, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, has been pronounced by specialists as the best outline of the whole subject in the English language. It is a marvel of compactness and clearness. It is not a mere skeleton, but throbs with life. Beginning with the basis of missions in the Bible itself, with the knowledge of a specialist and the skill of a master he marshals and groups the main facts with thrilling interest. We are just now issuing the seven thousandth edition of this admirable handbook; there ought to be a call for at least seven thousand copies more during this Silver Jubilee of the Foreign Society. He who can devise some scheme by which the merits of this book may become well known to our entire brotherhood will render a fundamental, far-reaching and fruitful service. Coupled with this handbook, forming a special appendix to it, is William J. Lhamon's summary of the "Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples," in which are presented all the fields and forces, the methods and results of missionary enterprise as prosecuted by our people. The book is unique. There is no other book in existence which undertakes to cover the field so completely and accurately covered by this. It is an up-to-date book, tracing our missionary history from its beginning down to our great Jubilee Convention. It ought to be in every household where a Disciple of Christ is to be found. Our latest handbook is from the same gifted author, and briefly tells the thrilling story of some of the "Heroes of Modern Missions," among whom appear Count Zinzendorf, David Brainard, Hans Egede, William Carey, Henry Martyn, Adoniram Judson, Robert Morrison, Robert Moffat, David Livingstone and many others. The prodigious energy, the Christly self-sacrifice, the divine patience, the triumphant faith of these heroes lift us above all sordidness and link us to the truly noble. These are the books we are engaged in circulating among our young people, and we feel that every friend of our missionary enterprises, when they come to know this, will gladly aid us in the circulation of these handbooks. As the price of the three is only one dollar they are within the reach of all.

But the work already done should begin to bear fruit in an increased offering to missions. The thousands who have already taken this course, and who are now taking it, ought to feel an increased interest and to be of greater assistance in the taking of the March offering. They ought to see that announcements are made, that the claims of missions are set forth, that ample provision is made for the reaching of every member of the church, and that a very liberal offering be secured. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses wish to vindicate their claim simply by the fruits they bear.

IMPORTANT ARTICLES.

Anti-Trust Legislation.

Since both political parties will probably try to make capital out of the popular antipathy to trusts in the next campaign, it is important to consider what further power Congress has for restricting trusts. David Willcox, in the Forum, maintains that the present anti-trust law, the Sherman law of 1890, exhausts the power of Congress. All the authority which Congress has in this matter is what is conferred by the clause of the Constitution which empowers it to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states. The trusts can, therefore, be touched by legislation only in so far as they act in restraint of international or interstate commerce. But the Sherman law provides fully for this case, and the cases which have arisen under it have given the courts opportunity to define clearly what constitutes interference with interstate commerce. In the Sugar Trust case, in 1895, it was decided that the control of the production of an article which would later be shipped from one state to another did not constitute a restraint of trade within the meaning of the law. In the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange cases, in 1898, it was held that the anti-trust law did not apply to trade in commodities after they had been shipped from one state to another. On the other hand, it was decided in the Traffic Association cases, in 1897-'8, that an agreement of railroads to maintain fixed rates constituted a restraint of trade, and it was decided last year in the case against the Addystone Pipe Co., that it is illegal to make agreements preventing the sale and shipment of goods already manufactured. In brief, Congress has power to legislate for the control of commerce, but not of manufacture. The existing law effectually prohibits every kind of combination or trust which restrains trade between states. Further anti-trust legislation is therefore impossible.

The Mormons.

In the February magazine number of the Outlook, Charles B. Spahr writes of the Mormons in his series on America's Working People. The most interesting and instructive part of the article is that in which the author speaks of the Mormons, not as a religious sect, but as an industrial community. It cannot be said that Mormonism owes its hold on the people to the provision which makes it for their material welfare, but it is a fact that the founders and administrators of that community have shown unusual wisdom in dealing with the practical problems of agriculture, industry and commerce. The Mormon Church is a democratic theocracy, whose activities cover almost as wide a field as the advanced Socialists would ask for the state. The hierarchy takes the place of the civil courts in settling quarrels between individuals, carries on in a thorough and comprehensive manner the work of education and poor relief, and conducts a multitude of co-operative enterprises. All members of the church pay into its treasury precisely a tithe of their income, not always in cash, but in produce. Co-operative stores are maintained. In Salt Lake City the co-operative store, called Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution, has to some extent lost its co-operative character, having only about 800 stockholders, but in smaller towns the proportion of stockholders to patrons is large. Brigham Young, who was the author of these co-operative schemes, planned that each family should own a share. Other enterprises are conducted on the same plan—saw-mills, flour-mills, canneries, sugar-refineries and irrigation systems. These are not owned by the church, but by small stockholders, and the tendency is for them to fall into the hands of a few. Whatever socialism there may have been in the Mormon community at the beginning is dying out with the influx of Gentile population, but the co-operative enterprises played a valuable part in opening up the country.

Railroads as Educators.

It may not be as generally known as it should be that the Western railroads are carrying on a considerable amount of directly educational work. Recognizing the fact that the prosperity of the railroad depends upon the prosperity of its actual or potential patrons, it is reasonable for the railroad to take an interest in the welfare of the farmers along its route and to help them to make the most out of their land. The activity of the railroads in promoting colonization in the new territories is well understood, but it is equally to the interest of the railroad to see that the largest possible crops are raised. Mr. Theodore Dreiser, writing in Harper's Magazine, tells how the agents of the great railways secure examinations of land by the Department of Agriculture to determine what crops can be raised most profitably, and then send men through the district to give lectures to the farmers on the subject. In this way important changes have been effected in several districts of considerable size to the satisfaction of all concerned.

The Causes of the War.

The immediate occasion of the war in South Africa is a matter of common knowledge, but the underlying causes go farther back than the matter of the naturalization of Outlanders. Mr. Montagu White, who was consul-general of the South African Republic in London until the outbreak of war, and is now in this country trying to secure funds for the aid of the Boers, writes in the North American Review of the Mistakes of the British. In his view the great mistake which has characterized Great Britain's policy in South Africa from the beginning has been personal rule in the hands of the High Commissioner of South Africa. For the last quarter of a century the High Commissioners have, with the single exception of Sir Hercules Robinson, persistently maintained such an attitude of hostility or disregard to local sentiment, as to render themselves and the government which they represented thoroughly obnoxious to the Dutch, not only in the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, but even in Natal and Cape Colony. "Sir Alfred Milner has had magnificent opportunities for doing beneficent imperial work in South Africa. But instead of using his great influence in removing the distrust and unrest which were intensified by the clumsy diplomacy of Mr. Chamberlain after the raid; instead of checking and sternly repressing mischievous and reactionary organizations like the South African League, of which Mr. Rhodes is the president; instead of ignoring and discountenancing the frenzied efforts of the local newspapers, which are largely controlled by Mr. Rhodes, he appears to have utilized all these baneful forces for the purpose of bringing about this disastrous war in South Africa, the far-reaching consequences of which no man is able to foresee."

A Defense of Great Britain.

In the same number of the North American Review, Henry Cust, former editor of the Pall Mall Gazette and a man who has resided long in South Africa, presents a justification of Great Britain's course with the Transvaal. The root of the whole trouble lies in the Boer character, according to Mr. Cust, from which flows naturally and inevitably their attitude of unjust oppression toward the Outlanders. It may be frankly admitted that Great Britain's course in the past has been marked by many features of which no Englishmen can be proud, but the responsibility for the present situation rests wholly with the Boers. "By ignoring utterly and ostentatiously those engagements upon which their national existence has depended; by refusing the least of political or even municipal rights to that majority of the inhabitants who paid nine-tenths of the income of the country; by using vast sums of money so obtained to enlist the enemies of England, and to equip themselves with an arsenal of arms against the power which created and maintained them; and, lastly, by declaring war against her—by these things the Boers have made South Africa what it is to-day."

Some Practical Pointers.

Benjamin Franklin, Elijah Goodwin and J. K. Rogers are names which are known, or should be known, in every household among us. They were pioneers, men who endured hardships and labored valiantly. Their labors bore wonderful fruitage; they left a glorious heritage to us. No Disciple of Christ should be ignorant of the lives of these men. No preacher's library, certainly, should be without the volumes which tell of their work. The Christian Publishing Company is making a special offer—considerably less than half price—of these volumes. "The Life and Times of Benjamin Franklin" is offered at $.90, the original price being $2.00; the Life of Elijah Goodwin, which has always been sold at $1.25, is reduced to $.40; the "Memorial of J. K. Rogers," by O. A. Carr, is reduced from $2.00 to $.60. The simple mention of these books and the low prices should be sufficient to clear out the entire stock.

"Prison Life in Dixie" is what is known in the book trade as a "seller," a term which cannot be applied to one book out of a score published. The narrative of the author (Bro. J. B. Vawter) never loses interest. Mr. Vawter was a sergeant in Sherman's army, was captured and sent to Andersonville, and was a spectator and a participant in the many vicissitudes of life in the great military prison. The Christian Publishing Company has reduced the price of this book from $1.00 to $.50. It is cloth-bound and illustrated.

The Christian Publishing Company desires to again announce that the price of the Moffett Church Register has been reduced from $3.00 to $2.00. This announcement has been previously made, but some people evidently overlooked it, for they have been ordering the book and sending three dollars with the order. This must be stopped. Let our patrons distinctly understand that we will not accept $3.00 for the Register. It may be worth $3.00, and we may need the money, but we have advertised the book at $2.00 and we are going to sell it at that price. Ultra-conscientious persons who feel that it would not be right for them to secure so superior a book at such a low figure may send the extra dollar to the Foreign Society, P. O. Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

Gibson City Rally Day.

On Sunday, Jan. 30, the Christian Church of Gibson City had a Rally Day which was a pronounced success, at least three-fourths of the membership being present. At this service the financial reports of all the different departments of church work for 1899 were read, these reports showing a flourishing condition of the church. The grand total of finances collected by all departments during the year was $2,014, of which $333 went to different kinds of mission work. A roll of the membership was called by the clerk, and nearly all present responded with verses of Scripture. Two newly elected elders and four deacons were installed with impressive ceremonies by Bro. J. Fred Jones, Secretary of Illinois State Missions. Bro. S. E. Fisher, the new pastor, is doing a successful work here, and the church seems to be advancing in usefulness and spirituality.

AINSWORTH.

Died, on December 10, 1899, in Tulare County, Cal., Edward Ainsworth. Mr. Ainsworth, who was only 22 years old, was one of the leading teachers of Tulare County. He was a relative of Clark Braden, the celebrated religious debater of the Christian Church. He died three days after a surgical operation for invagination of the bowels. Mr. Ainsworth aspired to a high position in his profession, and had carried a number of his pupils through the ninth grade, some of whom are now teaching. The people of the part of Tulare County where he was born and raised and where he did all his teaching feel the loss greatly. They simply idolized him, for they regarded him as an honor to their country. He possessed a bright mind, ranking as one of the best mathematicians. His papers on methods of teaching have seldom been surpassed in the county, being nearly perfect. During his vacations he employed every moment of his time. Edward Ainsworth fought a good fight and did not live in vain.

DOUGLASS.

B. S. Douglass, of Allison, Lawrence County, Ill., died Jan. 9, 1900, at the home of his stepson, A. L. Eubank, in Kellogg, Ia. Bro. Douglass had come to Iowa with his wife on a visit, when he was taken ill with pneumonia. Deceased was 63 years of age, was the son of a Baptist minister and had been a member of the Christian Church for 37 years. He was at the time of his death a deacon in his home congregation. He leaves a wife and three sons. Services were held in the Christian Church at Kellogg, conducted by the writer.

MOORE.

The church here is in gloom. On Sunday, Jan. 7th, we buried Bro. and Sister J. H. Moore. Bro. Moore was a charter member (40 years) and his his wife became a member soon afterward. He was always active. All but one year of this time he was a member of the church board. When he left us he was chairman of the board, church treasurer, chorister of both Sunday-school and church. Always genial and loved by all, he certainly is most sadly missed. Sister Moore, a native of Connecticutt, has lived in Scranton since her marriage. Though mostly confined to the house she was ever prayerful for the success of the church. They both knew they must soon meet Him, and both died serenely happy. Sister Moore died about 48 hours after her husband. Their three daughters, together with the husbands of the two married ones, are all children of our Father, and their confidence in him in their trial was such as to lead others to the same Father as well as an inspiration to those who already trust him.

NOGGLE.

Sister Christa Belle Noggle passed from among us to the land of rest Feb. 2, leaving a husband and four children, two sons, two daughters and many warm friends to mourn her loss. Sister Noggle was in the 46th year of her age. She had lived a faithful life to her Master for 25 years, loved and respected by all who knew hear. The consolation given to those around her bed was, "God is calling me. I must go. Be good all of you."

Arkansas State Mission Notes.

One of our most encouraging things connected with our state missionary interests of late is the contribution of $100 from Brother and Sister S. H. Baldwin, of Knox County, Mo. They have done much for the cause of Christ and to help the needy. No donation has been made that will give a richer return than this addition to the much-needed mission funds of Arkansas.

Brother Crutcher recently closed a good meeting in Paris. That is an important field, and they should keep a preacher all the time, who can build up the cause there and in the country round about.

Brother Rama at this writing is in a meeting at Siloam Springs. Hope they will soon have a preacher.

Brother Marley, of Missouri, recently held a short meeting at Beebe. The people were much pleased with his preaching.

Brother Jordan, of Rogers, is now in a meeting at Newport. Probably he will engage with them. The church house at Amity will add greatly to the efficiency of the church at that place.

Brother J. N. Jones reports for December 30 days, 20 sermons, $110 raised for building, $28 for his own work. He reports nine churches with a membership of 282. Bro. Jones says: "I am trying to supply every church with regular preaching, either by myself or others; aim to see that all lines of church work are kept up. I think that the work is in better condition than ever before. The aid given by the state co-operation has made this and work at other points possible.

Brother J. M. Donham, of Junet, sends a good report. He will send, ere long, full reports from the churches in his district.

Hope every church in Arkansas will make good contributions to the foreign and home work. Remember March and May. In the meantime don't neglect the state work.

Good alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Remember that March 31st is the last day during which our offer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in clubs of twenty-five for One Dollar is in force. Do not neglect this until too late.

A flood of subscriptions, singly and in clubs, continues to pour in upon us. More new subscriptions were received during the past week than our records show for any similar period in the past.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in clubs of twenty-five or more, $1.00 a year.

Words of encouragement and appreciation are and always have been helpful to us, but when they are accompanied by long lists of subscribers, as they generally are at present, they are positively exhilarating. Brethren, "this is the way we long have sought;" but "be not weary in well-doing." No, no; keep it up!

If you want to be benefited by our club rate, your order should be in this office not later than March 31st.

And now Central Church at Des Moines takes a turn at sending subscriptions to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Forty-three new ones added is the first section of the report. Verily, brethren, the daily papers of your city will be growing jealous directly. Our list in that city is approaching very near three hundred and fifty.

Just a little more than a month for churches to avail themselves of the chance of securing a club of subscribers for about one-half price.

Springfield, Ill., reports thirty-one subscriptions as a starter from that city and Springfield, Mo., adds fifteen to its already large list.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has stated that the Current Reformation is a movement and the brethren are saying, "Amen!"

If a club of subscribers has not been formed in your congregation, better see to it at once. March 31st is "the last day of grace."

Bedford, Ind., has just held a great meeting with one hundred additions to the church.

The brethren there have shown their wise purpose to make the results a permanent blessing by sending us a club of thirty new subscribers.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST strives to strengthen the faith and increase the spirituality of its readers.

We have warned you that March 31st is the last day on which we can receive clubs of twenty-five at the One-Dollar rate. Don't find fault with us if you fail to heed the warning.

Kansas City does not like the idea of taking second place to Des Moines in the matter of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and so adds twenty-five to the list already large. But that is only a slight movement of the waters. We hope to report larger things shortly.

Washington, D. C., adds twenty five to their list and promises many more.

Terre Haute, Ind., sends us a list of twenty-five and Holden, Mo., does the same.

Marshall, Mo., always to be depended upon, reports a club from that city.

There is no reason, brethren, aside from idifference, why every congregation of any considerable size should not have a club of twenty-five readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This is a general statement and there may be exceptional cases. If your case is one of these tell your troubles to us. Perhaps we can suggest a remedy.

PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

We have them on all subjects, in all sizes, at all prices. We own and publish the great majority of the tracts that have been written by our own men, and which set forth the plea of the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Out of our list of One Hundred and Ten different Tracts and Pamphlets which we publish, we here call attention to the following:

Sabbath or Lord's Day? Dungan.	.25	Troubles of Beanville Church.	.05
The Liquor Traffic. Crutcher.	.25	Higher Criticism: What it Is. Garrison.	.05
Church Discipline. Hayden.	.15	Christian Experience. Franklin.	.05
First Principles of the Gospel. Errett.	.15	The Word Divided. Garrison.	.05
Baptism in a Nut Shell. Ingels.	.10	Our Position. Errett.	.05
Disciples of Christ, Their Purpose, Principles and Progress. Garrison.	.10	The Resurrection. Reynolds.	.05
Union Movement. Franklin.	.10	Spiritualism Self-Condemned. Errett.	.05
Our Movement. Garrison.	.10	Union and Victory. Garrison.	.05
		Harm of the Dance. Hopkins.	.05

We also have tracts at lower prices---as low as twenty-five cents per hundred. We have many at two and three cents each. We will be glad to send complete list and catalogue, gratis. If you cannot preach the gospel from the pulpit; if you cannot carry the gospel into dark African jungles or darker American slums, you can at least secure an assortment of these little booklets and give them an intelligent and judicious distribution. Special prices for quantities.

CURRENT EVENTS.

To all appearances the tide has turned in South Africa. Events are happening more rapidly than they can be narrated. The most important news of the week is the relief at Kimberly, but this is only one step in the working out of a far-reaching plan. From the main British position south of Modder River, a flank movement, led by Gen. French, crossed the Modder and its tributary, the Riet, passed between the two Boer positions at Magersfontein and Jacobsdal and entered Kimberley from the east without material opposition. Both Magersfontein and Jacobsdal have since fallen into the hands of the British. Gen. Cronje, who was for a time cut off from retreat toward Bloemfontein, slipped through and began a retreat in that direction, while Gen. French was operating north of Kimberley. Gens. Kelly-Kenny and Kitchener are now in full pursuit of Cronje's retreating army, and it is not improbable that an important battle may be fought before they reach the Free State capital. Meanwhile, events more favorable to the British have been transpiring in Natal and Cape Colony. Gen. Buller is making his fourth attempt to relieve Ladysmith, or at least to keep his antagonists too busy to allow them to send reinforcements to their hard-pressed allies in Orange Free State. He has succeeded in checking the aggressive movements of the Boers and driving them back north of the Tugela. Fighting has been going on in the vicinity of Dordrecht, a Cape Colony town held by the Boers, and the British captured by a bayonet charge, an important position commanding the town. The most striking fact revealed by the events of the past week is the increased mobility of the British army, which has hitherto appeared slow and unwieldy in comparison with the quick-moving Boers. The credit for this change is given chiefly to Gen. Kitchener, who has been reorganizing the forces and has effected important changes during the past three weeks. Gen. Roberts has issued a proclamation to the Free Staters, reminding them that Great Britain's relations with them have always been friendly and warning them against further participation in the war.

The British Parliament is developing plenty of criticism of the government, but not much opposition to it. The House of Commons has adopted the millitary scheme, carrying the appropriation recommended by the government, by a vote of 239 to 34, the opposition coming almost entirely from the Irish members. In the House of Lords, Lord Rosebery has made a spirited speech, emphasizing the critical character of the situation and the urgency of the need for immediate action, and reproaching the government for its proposal to do something after awhile. He stated clearly his opinion that, aside from South Africa, England's foreign relations were not in a satisfactory condition. "It does not appear that the friendship of France would bear any great strain, and as to Russia, events have been recently witnessed in Persia about which England formerly would have had something to say, but which she now passes unnoticed." Perhaps the most sensational utterance in Lord Rosebery's speech was his assertion that the British Government made urgent overtures last December to Germany and the United States for an alliance, but that neither of these powers showed enough inclination toward an alliance to justify England in pressing the matter. Mr. Macrum has been making dark allusions to a secret alliance between Great Britain and the United States, but a public statement by Lord Rosebery in the House of Lords is a more serious matter. The two statements, however, contradict each other, one claiming that an alliance exists, the other that England's attempt to get it was a failure. President McKinley and Secretary Hay both say that, so far as they know, England never made any overtures looking to an alliance, and that, of course, no such alliance exists. The modus vivendi in regard to the Alaskan boundary dispute, which was agreed upon last December, and the substitution of the Hay-Pauncefote convention for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, indicate that England desires our good will, as well she may, but no alliance has been asked.

Mr. Macrum, late United States Consul at Pretoria, has at last broken the silence which he has maintained in spite of many attempted interviews during his homeward journey and since his arrival. The public knew only that Mr. Macrum had left Pretoria and returned home, and that Adelbert Hay, a son of the Secretary of State, was appointed in his place and reached his post before Mr. Macrum reached this country. Secretary Hay refused to see him when he called at the department, and turned him over to one of his assistants. In the public statement which Mr. Macrum has issued he gives his reasons for coming home. The Americans in the Transvaal were casting in their lot with the Boers. Obeying his instructions, he issued the order that they should remain neutral. In spite of this, even the vice-consul surrendered his place and took the oath of allegiance to the South African Republic. They were all "in utter despair at the apparent attitude of our government." His official correspondence was opened by the British censor. This fact he communicated to the authorities in Washington and at the same time asked permission to return to explain to the department the true situation in South Africa. The permission was refused. Again and again he cabled the same request, stating that the reasons for his return was imperative but could not be communicated, but no answer was returned. His fourth cable to the same effect brought a second refusal. Then, when he had decided to stay, he received orders to come home, which he promptly did, and was surprised to learn on arriving that this meant his dismissal. The most serious item in Mr. Macrum's statement is the assertion that his official mail was opened by the British censor, that he reported this fact to headquarters and that no attention was paid to it. This is a grevious charge, if true. The truth of it has been neither proved nor disproved as yet. An investigation of the records will show whether or not such a report was made. The House of Representatives has passed a resolution calling for information. Just what that state of affairs was which made his return necessary, Mr. Macrum has not yet stated. It looks, on the surface, very much like a case of panic. On the other hand, one cannot but feel that the department owed it to him to hear his story before dismissing him, or at least to let him know at once that the permission to return meant dismissal.

The belligerent spirit appears to have died out in Kentucky. The election contest is now entirely in the hands of the courts and neither party seems disposed to question their final decision. But the dual government still exists and will continue to exist until the courts decide. Judge Taft, of the United States Circuit Court, refused to grant the injunctions asked for by the Republican officials, on the ground of no jurisdiction. He held that a court of equity, such as the United States Circuit Court, could not hear an appeal from a state court on a question involving the right to hold a state office. Though the case was not presented to him in the form of an appeal, it was virtually that, for the injunctions asked were directly opposed to that which had been granted temporarily by Judge Cantrill. The appeal, therefore, will be carried before the United States Supreme Court. Notice has been given that this appeal will be taken. After Judge Taft's decision had been rendered, Judge Cantrill, of the state court, made permanent the injunction restraining Taylor from interfering with the meeting of the legislature at Frankfort. Inasmuch as Taylor had already called the legislature back to Frankfort about a week before, and the Republican branch had resumed its sessions there, while the Democratic members were in session in Louisville, this injunction did not perhaps materially benefit those at whose request it was issued. The Democratic branch has also returned to Frankfort and the two sections are meeting in the same building, but both are carefully refraining from any act which imply a recognition of the officers of the other.

The Senate Currency Bill came to a vote on Feb. 15, according to previous agreement, and was passed by the unexpectedly large majority of 49 to 26. The principal speeches in the last stage of the debate were by Senators Allison, of Iowa, and Jones, of Nevada. The former, supporting the bill, laid stress on the fact that, as regards the standard of value, the present bill only re-enacts the law of 1873, and declared that it was not the purpose, nor would it be the effect of this legislation to withdraw from circulation any form of money now in use. Mr. Jones, on the contrary, accused the framers and supporters of the bill of insincerity, asserted that the purpose was to abolish the use of silver, and predicted that it would be followed by further legislation withdrawing greenbacks and treasury notes as soon as the Republican leaders considered such a move safe. He argued for the issue of an irredeemable paper currency. Before the passage of the bill the finance committee added an amendment providing that nothing in the bill shall be construed as placing any obstacle in the way of international bimetallism. The amendment was adopted, and it is one of the points which may cause some delay in the adjustment of the House bill and the Senate bill, which will at once be undertaken by the conference committee.

The meeting of the American Anti-trust League at Chicago came to a close last Tuesday. The League is supposed to be a non-partisan organization and the meeting was advertised to be a gathering to discuss ways and means for combating trusts without regard to politics. However one may interpret the fact, it can scarcely be maintained that the assembly maintained the non-partisan character which it claimed at the beginning. Resolutions denouncing the currency bills which have been passed by the Senate and the House were overwhelmingly adopted, with no dissent except from two delegates who withdrew, declaring that the whole thing was a partisan affair, gotten up in the interest of Democracy. Great enthusiasm was aroused in the convention when Mrs. Gougar denounced the President as "the most stupendous hypocrite that ever plotted against the welfare of the masses," if he signs the currency bill—which it is, of course, known that he will do—and recommended the election of William J. Bryan as one necessary means for accomplishing the overthrow of the trusts. This may be very true, but it can scarcely be said to indicate the calm atmosphere of non-partisan discussion of a great economical problem. Republicans claim that this cry of non-partisan agitation against trusts, accompanied by such outbreaks as this, is being used to throw dust in the eyes of the public in view of the approaching campaign. Democrats will reply that the Republican party has come to such a position that an anti-trust meeting simply has to be a Democratic meeting.

The bubonic plague which has been raging in Honolulu since last December has about run its course. In spite of the prompt establishment of strict quarantine measures the plague soon got beyond control by ordinary methods. In that part of the city which is inhabited by native Hawaiians, Japanese and Chinese, where there is no system of sewerage and no possibility of putting into operation the usual sanitary precautions, the plague spread rapidly. To check the pestilence it was found necessary by the Board of Health to burn the crowded and infected buildings of this quarter, covering a space of about forty acres, together with all their contents. This radical measure had the desired effect, but it also had the undesired effect of leaving about 8,000 people, or 7 per cent. of the entire population of the islands, without shelter or household goods. The value of the property destroyed is not much less than a million dollars, and it is desired that Congress make speedy provision for the relief of those whose possessions have been destroyed in the interest of the common safety.

The cotton market is enjoying a boom. Prices have been advancing steadily and by jumps during the past two weeks as it came to be more certain that there would be a shortage in the crop. It is now five dollars a bale higher than it was two weeks ago, and at this rate there have been large sales to foreign buyers. Upwards of eight cents a pound has been paid for several days, and in some cases sales have been made at nine cents. This means for the South about what dollar wheat means for Kansas and Nebraska. It is the highest price that has been paid for cotton since 1896.

A sententious statesman a few years ago justified the first "billion-dollar Congress" on the ground that this is a "billion-dollar country." It is more than that. It is a two-billion-dollar country. Last year, for the first time in the commercial history of the United States, the value of our foreign commerce passed the two-billion-dollar line, and on February 1, 1900, the amount of money in circulation in this country exceeded two billion dollars. The total amount of money of all sorts now in circulation in the United States is one-third greater than it was at the beginning of 1897, and the amount of gold coin and gold certificates in circulation is nearly two-thirds greater than it was at that time.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

V. STEPS CHRISTWARD.

In the great fundamental truths and facts to which we have called attention in this series of articles lie the supreme motives to repentance and the new life. Through these and through kindred truths, and the facts and experiences of our lives, the Holy Spirit convicts men of sin. The realization of any soul that it has sinned and that sin is a deadly peril, antagonistic alike to God and the highest interests of man, is the first movement of the soul Christward. This sorrow for sin and the hungering and thirsting for a better life, may, in some instances, come to one before he is prepared to fully accept Christ and publicly confess His name. There is a common ground, however, on which the winner of souls, and such a person as we have described, can always meet. Every rational soul recognizes the eternal distinction between right and wrong. No matter if one professes his inability to believe in Christ as the world's Savior; he does, nevertheless, believe that some things are right and some things are wrong; that some things secure the approval of his conscience and others are condemned by it. This, then is a meeting-place. "Are you," the spiritual instructor may ask, "loyal to your own convictions of truth and duty? Do you strive diligently to avoid those things you know to be wrong, and to do those things you know to be right?" The honest soul, thirsting for righteousness, will be sure to confess that he has fallen short of his own standard of righteousness and duty. He is, therefore, a sinner, judged at the bar of his own conscience. What he needs to do, what he must do, indeed, to increase his faith, is to begin to be true to himself and to follow loyally the light which he has. There is in every man a measure of light. It is concerning that light that the Savior says: "If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is the darkness!"

It is in this fact that the old controversy about the precedence of faith and repentance finds its solution. There is in every man a measure of faith. The stoutest infidel in the land believes there is a distinction between right and wrong, and he is conscious of being untrue to his own standard of right. If we can conceive of some one who believes nothing, who has no convictions about truth or duty, the first need of such an one would be, of course, a belief in something and some convictions of truth and duty. While we may conceive of such a person, we could not find one in a rational or responsible state. This is why, during the personal ministry of Jesus, he said to a certain class of persons, "Repent ye, and believe in the gospel" (Mark 1:15). This explains, too, why Paul preached "both to Jews and Greeks repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 20:21). This does not disprove our position as to the precedence of faith to repentance, but rather confirms it. It does, however, discriminate between the common or universal faith of men in a supreme

Being, in a moral law, and in the moral order of the universe, and the Christian faith which accepts Christ as the Son of God and as the full revelation of His character and will. Christian faith has a repentance of its own, which is deeper and broader than any repentance that is possible to him who does not accept Christ. A Christian repentance, i. e., a repentance that is required by Christ, must of course spring out of faith in Christ. Repentance must, in the nature of things, be limited by the degree of faith which inspires it.

What we are insisting upon as exceedingly important in bringing men to Christ, is that they shall be loyal to the light that is in them and to the faith which they already possess, and that this involves the forsaking of such evil ways as are condemned by their own standard of right. This is a condition precedent to a larger faith, even faith in Christ. We have here an explanation of the whole ministry of John, the forerunner of Christ. He was to "prepare a people for the Lord." That is, he was to prepare them to believe on Him when He should appear. He did this by preaching repentance to the people, and he baptized them when they gave evidence of repentance, saying that they should believe on Him who should "come after him." The impenitent condition of the people was an insuperable barrier to their faith in Christ, and by bringing the people into a condition of repentance, or of loyalty to the right, as they understood the right, they would be prepared to accept Christ. When they did accept Christ and received the full light of His doctrine, this no doubt led them into a more thorough repentance and to turn themselves more fully to God and righteousness. Had John believed in the impossibility of repentance before faith in Christ, he would have had no mission to the Jewish people until after Christ had come and fulfilled his ministry, and had given evidence of his divine character and mission. The Jews, however, believed in God and had the knowledge of his moral law as revealed through Moses. The Gentiles believed also in some supreme power, and while they did not all have the moral law as revealed through Moses, they were "a law unto themselves in that they showed the work of the law written in their hearts, their consciences bearing witness therewith, and their thoughts one with another accusing or else excusing them" (Rom. 2:15). So that both Jew and Gentile, apart from faith in Christ, were sinners, and stood in need of repentance.

We would say, then, that the first movement of the soul Christward is that condition of soul upon which Jesus pronounced his first beatitude, when He said: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of God." It is otherwise described by the Savior as "hungering and thirsting after righteousness," and the promise to such is that they "shall be filled." It is, in other words, the soul's recognition of its poverty and a yearning after a truer, fuller and better life. Blessed is the soul that has these experiences. It may not be in the kingdom of God, as yet, but it is moving in that direction. There may be spiritual emptiness, yet, but there is the divine promise that the soul shall be filled with spiritual blessing. This step is usually unseen by the human eye, but God notes it as the dawn of a new life, the morning star that heralds the coming day. It is the prodigal coming to himself and becoming conscious of his need and of a longing for something better.

The next step, as we have seen, will be the breaking away from those sins which are seen to be displeasing to God and at war with the soul's highest interests. The grosser sins, and those most obviously in violation of the moral law, would naturally be the first to be abandoned. We have no right to expect faith in Jesus Christ to coexist with indulgences in known sin, or to regard it as possible to one who persistently disregards the moral light which he posseses. In turning away from these sins the soul puts itself in an attitude to receive greater light and to become a believer in Christ. Let us not make the mistake, as spiritual believers, of supposing that we have no message to men who are unwilling to confess faith in Christ, except to present to them the evidences of Christianity. What men generally need, much more than evidences of the truth of Christianity as they are usually presented, is to be shown that they are not true to what light they possess, and that it is in obedience to that light that they are to come into larger light and into larger faith. It is in the soul's struggle to be true to its highest moral ideal that it comes to the consciousness of its need of Christ, and his ability to satisfy the deepest longings of the human heart. Not to recognize and utilize this univseral moral law, written by the finger of God on the human heart, is to lose an important vantage ground in winning men to Christ.

"I AM WITH YOU."

It is Christ's promise to the church that is doing what it can to carry out His last and great commission. It is His promise to each individual disciple who is enlisted in the work. "I am with you alway." It is a wonderful promise. No church has ever died that had Christ with it. Churches die because Christ is no longer with them. No church can live and grow and exert a saving influence in the community that does not have Christ's presence. No church can have Christ's presence except it be engaged in His great enterprise of subduing the world unto Himself.

This is something worth remembering in connection with the coming annual offering for Foreign Missions. There will be churches pleading this or that excuse for omitting the offering entirely, or making it a merely formal matter. Let such churches face this question: "Are you able to get on without Christ's presence and approval?" If they answer the question affirmatively they will probably make no offering for world-wide missions. But if they feel that they cannot afford to dispense with Christ's comradeship and blessing, let them see to it that they co-operate with Him in this work of evangelizing the world.

It has been truly said that it is not simply a question of saving the heathen; it is a question of churches saving themselves. This they cannot do without an effort to save the lost. This promise of Jesus explains why. He is only with the church that is trying to do what He established the church to do, and the church that is not doing that is dead already, though it may have a name to live. It is not, then, a question of ability to make an offering for this cause, it is a question of loyalty to Jesus Christ, and that is a question of life or death. All churches have not equal ability, but they are all under equal obligations to do what they can, whether large or small, rich or poor, housed or unhoused.

"Lo, I am with you alway." This is the great promise accompanying the great commission. It should be the highest aim of every church to realize the fulfillment of this promise. Christ's presence in a church means a great deal. It means unity, brotherly love, the spirit of devotion, fidelity to its various meetings and enterprises, growth in numbers and in spiritual power. It is more to be desired than wealth, social position, an eloquent pulpit, the finest architecture or the most exquisite music. Indeed, the only thing that no church can dispense with and thrive, spiritually, is the presence of Christ, and this promise is made to churches that co-operate with Him in the work of sending the gospel to all nations.

If we expect, then, and desire above all things, that Christ shall be with us as churches engaged in a great reformatory movement, let us be with Him in our missionary offerings and efforts to save the world. It is from considerations of this kind, as well as from the needs of the heathen world, that we hope our churches, with great unaniminity, will participate in the March offering for Foreign Missions.

Hour of Prayer.

OUR SILVER JUBILEE OFFERING.

(Ps. 67:2; 2 Cor. 8:1-9.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer meeting Topic for February 28.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: God's "saving health for all nations" is the gospel of Christ, and it is the supreme duty of the church, which has received blessing and mercy from God, to send this gospel to all the kindreds and tribes of earth.

That is a beautiful prayer of the Psalmist and one that finds a response in all our hearts:

> God be merciful unto us, and bless us,
> And cause His face to shine upon us.

Every heart feels the need, at times at least, of God's mercy and blessing, and to have God's face shining upon us is the highest and noblest aspiration of the soul. The shining face of God implies both His divine favor and the divine light. This petition has been remarkably fulfilled to the Christian in the person of Jesus Christ, the image of God, in whom God is causing the light of

His face to shine upon us. "Seeing it is God that said: Light shall shine out of darkness, who shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6). God has indeed, then, caused His face to shine upon us, and has filled our lives and all the Christian centuries with the light of His countenance, shining upon us through Jesus Christ.

But if this is a great petition to make—asking God for his mercy and blessing, and even that He might cause His face to shine upon us—it is asked for a great purpose. Note well what that purpose is:

> That thy way may be known upon earth,
> Thy saving health among all nations.

This is an unselfish prayer. It asks blessings of God, not simply for the sake of the petitioner, but to the end that God's saving health, the glorious gospel of his grace, might be known among all nations. This prayer challenges our admiration for the largeness with which it asks, and for the breadth of sympathy in which it is conceived.

It is worth while for us to remember, in connection with our Silver Jubilee Offering for Foreign Missions, that the gospel is God's saving health. Salvation is wholeness; it is bodily and spiritual health. Sin is a moral disease that has fastened itself on the souls of men. The gospel is the divine remedy. It brings healing and health to soul, mind and body. In proof of this, only compare the conditions in the heathen world with those in Christendom. There is no remedy for the diseases, squalor, wretchedness, superstition and idolatry of the heathen world but the gospel of Christ, the saving health of God.

If, then, the churches have received mercy and blessing from God; if they have been cheered by the light of God's face shining upon them, let them know that the end of this is that the gospel may be extended among all nations. This involves the grace of liberality, which the Apostle Paul urges upon the Corinthian Church in the passage above cited. He speaks there of churches that gave out of their "deep poverty" and this giving "abounded unto the riches of their liberality." One of the great dangers in this offering which we are about to make for Foreign Missions is that many individuals and many churches will excuse themselves from uniting with their brethren in this great work on the plea that they are poor. But this poverty is the very opportunity by which they can make their gifts abound unto the riches of their liberality.

The apostle cites the example which, above all others, ought to incite Christians to liberality: "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through His poverty might become rich." If our silver offering for the extension of God's saving health among the nations shall be made in the light and under the inspiration of this supreme act of self-denial on the part of our Lord and Savior, it will be a worthy offering—one that will enrich our own hearts and prove a blessing to the perishing nations.

In the words of a beloved and lamented brother who, in leaving us, gave us his parting exhortation, "Quit you like men!" In the great effort that is soon to be made to make an offering that shall be worthy of our numbers, of our great plea and of the riches of God's grace which He has abundantly shed upon us, let us remember this exhortation and be stirred by it to heroic giving. The needs of our missions demand it. The command of Christ enjoins it; His example enforces it. The proof of our love requires it.

PRAYER.

O God our Father, we thank Thee for the riches of Thy grace which Thou hast shed upon us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Lord. We praise Thee that Thou hast, through Thy Son, made known Thy way to us and Thy saving health. May a deep sense of gratitude to Thee for what Thou hast done for us lead us to larger sacrifices that Thy way may be known upon earth, and Thy saving health among all nations. Stir up, we pray Thee, delinquent churches and members to make an offering for this holy work, that Thy face may shine upon them in the future and that they may enjoy a larger measure of Thy divine favor. We ask it in Christ's name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our issue of this week bears the date of George Washington's birthday. It is pleasing to note that the great characters in our national history are not forgotten, but that the annual return of their birthdays is made the occasion of renewing the memory of their lives and labors. Pre-eminent among the nation's heroes must always stand the name of George Washington. The affectionate designation, "The Father of his Country," expresses the unique relation which he sustains to this nation. His fame is partly dependent upon the time in which he lived and upon the great events in which he was the dominant factor. But had he not possessed the character and the ability to cope with the duties and responsibilities of his time, his name would not have come down to us with the halo of his fame that surrounds it. It was a happy conjunction of a great opportunity and a great character. It would be impossible to estimate the influence which Washington has exercised over the history and development of this government. He has never ceased to be a potential factor in our national life. He has remained throughout the life of the republic its ideal statesman and incorruptible patriot. Nor have we yet reached a point in our national development when we can afford to dispense with the influence of his example or with the far-seeing wisdom of his advice and teaching. Our nation has no doubt outgrown anything he ever dreamed of in his fondest imaginings as to extent, population, wealth and possibilities, and issues have arisen, no doubt, which neither he nor any other statesman of his time could have foreseen. But if the same spirit of disinterested patriotism and of high regard for the rights of men, together with the sound principles of political wisdom which he applied to the problems of his day be applied to those of our own time, we shall reach a happy solution.

The New York Presbytery, by a decisive vote, has determined not to bring Prof. McGiffert to trial on acoount of his recent work, "The Apostolic Age," but to let the matter rest with the repudiation of his teaching on the disputed points, which the General Assembly has already given. This case has been a very puzzling one to the Presbyterian body. On the one hand, there was a strong desire to guard the church against what the majority regard as erroneous and dangerous teaching. On the other, there was a strong disinclination toward plunging the church into the excitement of another great heresy trial. It seems to us, from our point of view, that the New York Presbytery has done wisely in deciding to let the matter rest with an official disclaimer of any approval of, or responsibility for, the teaching in question. This carries the whole weight of the influence of the Assembly against such teaching, and what more could a trial and condemnation accomplish? If Prof. McGiffert has been led into wrong conclusions, which affect the integrity and authority of the Scriptures, this fact is sure to be made apparent soon, if it has not already been done by other Christian scholars, who are at work in the same field of inquiry. Prof. McGiffert himself, after maturer investigation, may see some things in a very different light. If we will only have patience, time and further investigation will settle a good many of these difficult questions for us, and meanwhile, the agitation brought about by such teaching will be sure to result in a more general enlightenment on the issues involved, and in the long run in a more unshaken faith in the integrity of the sacred writings.

Perhaps there is no greater test of our faith in the gospel than the measure of our liberality in sending it to those who have it not. There are many prudential motives that would lead a man to give to the support of his local church and for the evangelization of his own country. But why should people concern themselves about the salvation of pagan nations? This is the very spirit of philanthropy which the gospel inspires. It is that supreme unselfishness by which the church in all ages has given the highest evidence of its possession of the Spirit of Christ. It is true that the world is getting smaller by reason of the rapid methods of communication and travel, and that each nation is affected more or less by the moral and material condition of every other nation, and that the more Christianity prevails in the world to the exclusion of idolatry and superstition and to the bringing in of a higher and better civilization, the better it will be for the Christian nations of the earth, who must supply their multiplied needs. But this motive does not appeal with great force to many people. Nor is it the highest motive. When we make our offerings for the evangelization of the heathen world because the same love which constrained Christ to give His life for the world constrains us to make this sacrifice that others may have the knowledge of this salvation, we are being moved by the divinest motive that can influence human action. The people who are capable of being influenced by this love of humanity are those who give to foreign missions, and hence our gifts to world-wide evangelization become a sort of measure of our spiritual advancement, an index to our religious status. We may not approve the theology of a religious body because it gives the largest amount per capita to missions, but we cannot doubt the genuineness of its religion. We live truly only as we live unselfishly, and we act nobly only when our actions are prompted by unselfish motives. There is the losing of our life in order to find it, and there is the saving of life which results in losing it. Because Christ laid down His life for the world He lives to-day in the affectionate remembrance of millions of the human race, and is destined to become the universal King. We aid in that coronation as we assist in the world's evangelization.

Questions and Answers.

1. Should we approach the study of the Bible believing firmly in it as the Word of God, or should we regard it simply as a book which probably contains the Word of God?

2. By what right does any one apply historical tests to determine the authenticity of any part of a book which he has already received as the Word of God?

3. If men can prove, by a process of historical and literary analysis, that a part of the Bible is spurious, what assurance have we that all of it cannot, by the same process, be shown to be spurious? Fraternally, T. Davis.

Boonsboro, Ia.

1. We must approach the study of the Bible with such faith as we have, in some cases more, in some less. A majority of people receive, traditionally, from their parents and teachers, their faith in the Bible as the Word of God. This is perfectly right, but sooner or later the time comes in the history of every thoughtful and growing mind when it examines the Bible for itself, to find out what it is.

2. This is only another way of asking by what authority any one investigates the Bible to determine its character and origin. The Bible claims for itself no exemption from the examination and investigation which we give to any other literature. Our right to apply historical and other tests to its various parts is an inherent right growing out of the fact that God has given us the power to think and investigate. He has used human beings in giving us the books of the Bible, and this fact brings them within the range of human investigation. Experience shows that they are quite able to stand such investigation.

3. The only assurance that we know of apart from the self-evidencing power of the books, is the assurance that comes from the investigations of scholarship, which show us what is spurious and what is genuine. The same scholarship that has determined that certain passages in the Bible are spurious, or interpolations, and has expunged them from the accepted text of Holy Scriptures, has determined that the rest of the text is genuine. This question seems to imply that the Bible will not bear sifting and should therefore be let alone. But this is far from being the case. The most scholarly investigation has only served to give additional assurance of the authenticity and the supreme value of the literature of the Bible.

When there is a serious grievance existing between two brethren of the same congregation and the elders fail or refuse to take notice of it, or if they do try to settle it act unjustly and arbitrarily, what is the remedy? Is there no appeal to the congregation?

R. W Fleming.

Alamo, Tenn.

The congregation is always the ultimate court of appeal in such cases. If any person or persons feel that that they have been wronged by the action of the elders, they have a right to make a respectful appeal to the congregation to correct the error. The elders, in such case, ought to consent to such investigation, which can generally best be carried out through the appointment of a disinterested committee, that will hear the evidence, pro and con, and report its findings to the church for its approval. Elders are not infallible, but their recommendations in any case should not be lightly set aside. There ought to be good reasons why an investigation by another committee should be had, and when such reasons exist, the congregation has an undoubted right to reverse the action of its elders or their findings, if the evidence in the case seems to justify it in so doing. It is a much simpler way, however, for two brethren having a grievance to settle it between themselves, without taking it either to the elders or the church.

A man who was once a member of the Christian Church, but who in late years has made no profession of Christianity, dies. The family announce that the obsequies will be held under the auspices of a fraternal organization, to which the deceased belonged, and then calls the minister to come and eulogize the departed. What ought the minister to do under these circumstances? Minister.

A minister would hardly be justified, unsuch circumstances, in refusing to conduct religious services, but he should of course exercise his own judgment as to the nature of the eulogy. If the family should require him to say what he could not conscientiously say concerning the deceassd, and should make that a condition of his officiating, he would be justified in refusing to officiate. As a rule, however, a minister may utilize an occasion of that kind in a way to advance the interests of religion and should avail himself of the opportunity so to do. It ought to be understood, however, that a funeral discourse is not primarily for eulogy. It is to comfort the sorrowing and to warn the living.

Was it the decision of the Jubilee Convention that the offering on the first Lord's day in March should be for world-wide missions, or is it to be for Foreign Missions only? Something in your last issue seems to indicate the first, though the mission board is sending out the usual circulars. C. E. Smith.

Bethany, W. Wa.

The offering called for on the first Lord's day in March is for Foreign Missions, to be expended under the direction and control of our Foreign Missionary Society. The object of this society is to promote world-wide missions. There should not, therefore, be any distinction made between Foreign Missions and world-wide missions. The missions will be as "wide" as the offerings of the brethren will permit. Let the churches see to it that the offering for the month of March exceeds that of any previous year. We resolved at the Jubilee Convention to raise $200,000 this year for Foreign Missions, and the various offerings should be made on that scale.

Current Religious Thought.

A writer in the Literary Digest, some weeks ago, in emphasizing the undogmatic character of present-day Christianity, made the sweeping statement that Lutherans no longer believe the theology of Lutheranism and that the so-called Calvinistic churches do not hold to the doctrines of Calvinism. This was repudiated by two other writers representing respectively two denominations which claim to be the one Lutheran and the other Calvinistic. The latter maintained that Calvin's doctrines of reprobation etc., are still believed by the entire body of the Presbyterian and Reformed churches, with only a few individual exceptions. This may or may not be an accurate estimate. But the question of chief importance is: What attitude do those who hold to the theology of Calvin maintain to those who do not, and vice versa? Are the two classes willing to grant to each other Christian fellowship and live peaceably together in the same communion?

The following from an article by Rev. John Woods in the Interior contains much sound sense and a suggestion worth thinking about. The name of almost any other religious body, our own included, might be put in place of "Methodist:"

Are there too many ministers? No, not if those who preach the gospel have been "moved thereto by the Holy Ghost." Are there too many ministers? No, not for the conversion of the world. Compared with the greatness of the harvest, the laborers are few. The root of the trouble will be found in the divisions of Protestantism, leading to an undue multiplication of churches, to rivalry and competition, tremendous waste of forces and of means, and loss of prestige and influence by the church as a body. I once heard a presiding elder say, in a public meeting, that he did not consider any town or village complete without a Methodist church, and that he would organize one in every community in which he could get a foothold, regardless of existing conditions. That was sectarian zeal with a vengeance. Several Methodist ministers who were present repudiated the sentiment. They thought the day was past for that sort of thing. It is the policy which has resulted in the present distress, producing congestion in one place and deficiency in another. No one denomination is going to take the whole country; and the sooner the various religious bodies come to understand that fact, and adjust themselves to it, the better it will be for the cause of Christ in our land.

Missionary.

THE MISSIONARY RENAISSANCE.

CHARLES LLOYD GARRISON.

The latter half of the present century has witnessed the birth of a new and splendid idea. The future church historian may designate it not inaptly, The Missionary Renaissance. It is revolutionizing the whole trend of religious thought; it is marking a new era in Christian progress. It is a revival, it is a new birth, it is a resurrection, it is a transition from the old state of stoical indifference, scholastic contemplation and creed-building, Alexandrian mysticism and universal lukewarmness, into a bright, hopeful, normal period of Christian activity. Men are looking at Christianity from a new point of view, and withal a wider point of view; they are beginning to see that the propaganda of the gospel is essential and vital. And in direct ratio to the clearness with which they apprehend this splendid idea, their thought and life and activity take on largeness, fertility, attractiveness of form and durability of character. It is the grandest idea that has dawned upon the mind of man for centuries. Thus far it is in the first stage of its infancy. But the child is vigorous. There is life, virility, possibility in it. It was conceived in heaven; there is, therefore, the germ of immortality within it. The truth of this assertion is vindicated by the fact that it lay in embryo for two thousand years, struggling in the womb of time, abiding the hour of its birth, till in the fullness of time it was brought forth. And now that this idea has seen the light of day, the most sanguine imagination of man cannot forecast what it will be in the full maturity of its splendid manhood. The mind of man cannot measure the far-reaching, fructifying, transforming power which resides within it.

By way of reinforcing this message, I have thought it well to recite some familiar history showing the dearth of great ideas, their character and their influence upon the lives of men.

(1) In the first place, ideas of any kind are very rare. Hundreds and thousands of men have been born into the world, waxed fat and prosperous, propagated their species, disseminated their opinions and gone to their graves in blissful ignorance of the melancholy fact that they never had an idea in all their lives. Why, whole nations of men have lived and moved under the blue canopy of heaven, enjoying national peace and prosperity and lifting up their heads among the nations about them, which haven't had a great idea for centuries. Indeed, the old human family does very well if if she gets a really great, uplifting, fortifying, fructifying, transforming idea once in the course of four or five centuries.

(2) Another strange thing about great ideas is that they occur, not to one man alone, but to many men simultaneously and in different quarters of the globe. They seem to be in the very atmosphere. Men of mediocrity and even dullards catch the prevailing sentiment. It sets them on fire. Under the powerful stimulus of a great idea they do something or say something that is really worth while. Under ordinary circumstances they would have lived and died in obscurity, but they had the good fortune to be born in an age which was vitalized and glorified by the presence of a great and dominant idea, which everywhere throbbed at the heart of life.

(3) Another significant thing about a great idea is its diversity of expression. It breathes out its soul in lofty strains of music; it lingers in tints of glory upon the canvas; it moves in the light tripping measure of the lyric, or the sonorous tread of the epic; its more salient features of beauty crystallize into marble; it embodies itself in the high-vaulted roof, the column, the arch, the architrave, the stained-glass window. But express itself it must and will, in an endless variety of forms.

It was thus with the Pagan Renaissance which had its rise in Italy in the 14th century, and gradually spread westward over all Europe. It was simply the birth of a new idea—splendid, fertile, magnetic, dynamic, regnant, inundating nations with its transforming power and expressing itself in every conceivable form.

For long centuries humanity had been laboring under a morbid misapprehension which stultified their minds and paralyzed their efforts. "For seventeen centuries a deep and sad thought had weighed upon the spirit of man, first to overwhelm it, then to exalt and to weaken it, never losing its hold throughout this long space of time. It was the idea of the impotence and decadence of man. . . . For a thousand years universal ruin incessantly drove still deeper into their hearts this gloomy thought."—Taine's His. Eng. Lit., Vol. I. Under its baneful influence life degenerated. There was no self-confidence, no heroism, no originality; but rather cowardice, submission, corruption. "From the fourth century," says the same author, "gradually the dead letter was substituted for the living faith. Christians resigned themselves into the hands of the clergy, they into the hands of the Pope. Christian opinions were subordinated to theologians, and theologians to the fathers. Christian faith was reduced to the accomplishment of ceremonies. Religion, flowing during the first centuries, had become hardened and crystallized, and the coarse contact of the barbarians placed on it, in addition, a layer of idolatry." Now this deplorable condition of things was the inevitable outgrowth of causes which ought to have been removed: (a) A false and pernicious theocracy; (b) the unholy inquisition, established by Pope Gregory IX.; (c) the monopoly of the clergy, made possible by the union of church and state; (d) prohibition of the Scriptures, which denied the Word of God to the masses; (e) that most subtle and pernicious form of idolatry in the form of image worship, picture worship and reverence paid to shrines and relics and trinkets; (f) and finally, the sale of indulgences. Is it any wonder that "a thinking society ceased to think," and that "philosophy was turned into a text-book?" Life was necessarily robbed of its significance and perennial hopefulness. Men ceased to be men and became blind, submissive puppets in the hands of remorseless taskmasters.

The whole trouble with the Middle Ages was that they had no great, fortifying, uplifting, fructifying, transforming idea. But in the 14th century such an idea began to dawn upon men. The recovery of the classical Greek and Roman literature gave birth to the revival of learning, and the revival of learning in its turn begot the idea that man was not an impotent puppet, but a man—a Godlike being—with bodily and mental powers and boundless susceptibilities. And that great, luminous idea dispelled gloom, inspired hope, stimulated, fortified, electrified the mind. That idea was too vast for Italy. It spread over France, Spain, Flanders, Germany and England. And what stupendous miracles it wrought! Navigation, geography, astronomy, together with the experimental sciences, began to yield a vast and varied fruit. "Art and literature shot forth like a harvest." A great, dominant idea was beating at the heart of life, stimulating and glorifying its every manifestation. Men opened their eyes as if for the first time and saw things. They begin to feel deeply, as men ought. Their intellections and their emotions are of a high order. Like vigorous, romping schoolboys, who have suddenly burst out of a hot, stupifying room, they appear to us at this day. They have thrown away their arbitrary and mechanical classifications; they no longer see things as disconnected fragments. They see things in their entirety, in their beauty, in their relation. They have a keen, appreciative, sympathetic spirit. They drank in truth like a sponge drinks in water. They comprehended it, they masticated it, they assimilated it. They had images, vital and vigorous, which must and will express themselves in adequate externals. They had great pulsating thoughts in the heart of them which must burst forth like volcanic fires. Silence those men? You had as well try to stop an avalanche! They just must sing, or write, or paint, or carve, or chisel the wild, deep message that stirs in the soul of them. Ah, that "was Europe's grand age, and the most notable epoch of human growth." Then there were giants in the land. Then flourished the great mastodons and missouriums of science or art, of religious thought: such as Shakespeare, Milton, Michael Angelo, Raphael, Luther, Ignatius Loyola, John Calvin, Wycliffe, Zwingli, Savonarola and a mighty host hardly less renowned.

Now the secret of the whole matter is, the Middle Ages got a great, fortifying, uplifting, transforming idea. It produced the renaissance.

About five centuries have passed, and lo, we have gotten another idea. It is vast and significant. It is a new idea of religion. We are learning that Christianity is not self-centered, but world-wide. We are learning that Christianity is not merely a culture, but also a mission. We are learning that the propaganda of the gospel is an essential feature of it. In consequence of this great idea, Christian thought and activity are taking on largeness, fertility, attractiveness of form and durability of character. Itis a revival, it is a new birth, it is a resurrection, it is a transition from the old state of stoical indifference, scholastic contemplation and creed-buiding, Alexandrian mysticism and general lukewarmness into a bright, hopeful, normal period of Christian activity and growth. It is the missionary renaissance. Now this is not actually a new idea. It was exemplified by the life of Christ; it was distinctly enjoined in the great commission which he gave to his disciples before he left them. The idea was known to the churches at Jerusalem and Antioch and Ephesus; it was incorporated in the lives of Paul and Barnabas and a host of zealous Christian workers in the first two centuries of the Christian era, but it seems the world was unprepared for the reception and retention of this great idea. So, for long centuries it lay dormant; but now it has come forth vital and regnant. It is stimulating the minds of men. They are beginning to open their eyes and to see. It is stirring at the hearts of men. They are beginning to broaden their sympathies and to feel. We are gaining a new and superior kind of knowledge concerning the Word of God. We are experiencing a new and superior kind of joy in the Holy Spirit. Men are mastering the great themes of redemptive love as they have never mastered them since the days of the Apostle Paul. They are going unhampered to the Word of God. They are no longer picking out isolated texts which chance to enforce their dogmas or harmonize with their creeds, but they are getting broad, comprehensive views. They are accepting its promises; they are heeding its commands. When they read the words of the Lord: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to ob erve all thing whatsoever I command you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," they are beginning to believe that the Master meant what he said. When they read the words of Isaiah: "As the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it to bring forth and bud, and giveth seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall my Word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the things whereunto I sent it" (Is. 55:9-11),—as they read that sustained and eloquent passage, they realize that there is something in it more potent and vital than eloquence—a great, overwhelming truth, with all the power of the throne of God back of it. And when they read that splendid optimistic strain of Paul in Philippians: "God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father," they realize that it is not rhetoric, but inspired prophecy. And what is yet more significent, they grasp the further thought that it is at once their lofty privilege and their solemn duty to co-operate with God in the fulfillment of that prophecy and in the accomplishment of that great design. The great missionary awakening of the nineteenth century is not only stimulating the thoughts of men, but it is stirring the hearts of men, it is enlarging their sympathies, it is bringing them into fellowship with an all-conquering Christ. This great missionary idea is putting new life in the church; it is delivering us from the emasculating power of selfishness; it is emancipating us from the stultifying power of ignorance; it is purging us from the pernicious results of the spiritual impotence and decadence. Thanks be unto God for the revival of this great missionary idea, which is resuscitating the church, spreading the kingdom of heaven among men and exalting the name of Christ.

GROUNDED FAITH IN MISSIONS.

ELLIOTT I. OSGOOD, M. D.

When one's mind encircles the world and finds in this last year of the nineteenth century so much of its surface occupied and ruled by dark heathenism,with so few Christian lamps to illuminate the darkness, is it any wonder that for a moment missions and the evangelization of the world appears at its best as a beautiful dream, but yet only a dream?

I. God's purpose is to save the world.

A Christian must have boundless faith in what shall be the ultimate outcome of God's plan. Not only a few are to be saved, but "a great multitude which no man could number, out of every nation, and of all tribes and peoples and tongues." In that great unsealed order Christ made the breadth of his desire very plain. "Even as I have all power, in it ye are to go to all men, and teach them all things, always." A lame man at the Gate Beautiful, a devout centurian, a religious fanatic, an immoral Corinthian, a dirty Chinaman, a naked African, a despised Jew, a millionaire, an infidel or a drunkard are all included in that great infinite desire.

Then why hasn't he saved them? Nineteen centuries have rolled on and the number of the heathen grows faster than the number of his followers. I would ask you, Christian, the question once asked of Frederick Douglass when he was presenting his gloomy views: "Is God dead?" Is God dead and his purpose annulled, that we should halt on the borders as we face a dying world and question the expediency of giving them life? The church cries out in sorrow, "O, God, how long?" but stops her ears lest she hear Christ's cry in patient waiting, "O, Church, how long!" God is not slack; it is the church.

II. Men are God's tools.

Abraham must begin the preparation of a place to which the Christ could come; Moses is used to deliver Israel; Samuel stands at Ebenezer; a prophet must take the message to David; Jesus must become a human as well as a divine Savior; Ananias, not an angel, instructs Paul; Carey sounds the war cry of missions; Livingstone must mirror Africa; Perry must open Japan; Barnabas Shaw must be forbidden to preach in Cape Town in order that the Hottentots coming south in search of the Word may be met by appointment of the Holy Spirit and given the Bread of Life. Men have not learned Christian living until they appreciate that every saved soul is to be a servant and tool of God.

III. By faith in him men are to go forward until his purpose is accomplished.

By faith Philip went to Gaza, Paul to Rome, John to Patmos. By faith David Brainard claimed the Indians for God, Livingstone walked without white followers in the jungle, the "Lone Star Mission" saw thousands saved, Judson escaped the power of the king of Ava and the China Inland Mission numbers over 600 missionaries.

Again, our faith wavers as we consider the few among the millions. We see Raymond Lull fall under the shower of Moslem stones in Bujia; we see Pattison drifting in his canoe with the five wounds like the wounds of his Master; we hear the wail of murdered ones in Armenia; the massacres in China and Africa rise before us; we see so many laying down their lives in the service. Shall we be dismayed, shall we hesitate? Nay, they are the call of God for more—more men, more money, more poverty, more persecution, more to burn out for Christ; always more, more until he shall reign supreme.

DOES IT PAY?

CHARLES E. MOLLAND.

The question frequently asked concerning missionary effort in this mercenary age is, "Does it pay?" Quite recently there appeared in a religious newspaper an announcement of the work of a prominont missionary society during one year. Expenditures in funds were tabulated beside receipts in converts, and by a simple arithmetical exercise each convert was found to have cost about $100. No amount was written off for possible depreciation in value through backsliding and no allowance was made for a possible rise in the market price of Christian converts through a probable growth in grace. There it was in black and white, $100 each—and it set me thinking.

Among those hundred-dollar converts there must certainly be some Judases, perhaps one in twelve. What a terrible waste of money to pay so much for them. I could purchase them far cheaper than $100 per head.

But on the other hand, look at a miserable $100 for an immortal soul! ! What a fraud was perpetrated when it was purchased at so low a figure!

While I was musing the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue: "Lord, make us to know our end and the measure of our days, the value of our opportunities and the measure of our responsibility; make us to know the glory of the hope of our calling and to appreciate the value of those souls thou didst die to save. Make us all less mercenary and more grateful to thee; more loving towards those who cost thee so dearly!"

Does it pay?—a man to resign home, friends, prospects, to say good-bye to those dear ones whose hearts break, sorrowing most of all that they may see his face no more, and all to go to seek and save those who will despise and reject him? No! From a worldly standpoint a thousand times, No! Thousands of gold and silver would not compensate the sacrifice. But when He says "go" it pays to obey even as it paid him who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. He that holds the rope sacrifices little compared with him who descends; yet, what is the greatest sacrifice compared to his?

And yet it does pay. He is faithful that promised, "and every one that forsakes houses or brethren or sisters or father or mother or wife or children or lands for his sake receives a hundredfold and inherits everlasting life." Fields where we labored for years amid difficulties and dangers are now giving their harvest of hundreds and promise of thousands of souls.

I would not say the heathen make better Christians than Christians at home. Comparisons such as this are odious. We are alike. A touch of nature, depraved, has made us kin in sin; and a touch of God's grace through faith renews after the image of Christ.

There are many dear Chinese Christians around me to-day for whom, any one of them, it would have paid me to come to China. Many prove their love to Christ and his servants by throwing in their lot with us when it does not pay from a worldly standpoint to do so. They have borne the sting of contempt that has pierced so unkindly their sensitive souls, and have persevered when all have seemed against them, enduring the horrors of long and loathsome imprisonment for Christ's sake, for Christ who, being perfected through sufferings, became the author of eternal salvation unto them and us.

A shrewd business man of sterling integrity here in the Far East, was approached by a friend who asked his advice as to investing some money in a company with which the former was interested. The reply was, "They who invest much will gain much; they who invest little will gain little." As a result of his investment the investor realized about a thousand per cent. Yet, there was a risk in it and as an offset to the saying, "Nothing venture, nothing win," it may be added, "And nothing lose." With shrewdness born of spiritual insight we now present you a brighter prospectus than any earthly company ever dreamed of; we offer you a guarantee whose capital is "all authority in heaven and in earth," and we promise you, you will not be ashamed of your dividend in that day. Our bonds are "go" or "send."

INDIA'S ANCIENT CIVILIZATION AND THE GOSPEL.

W. E. RAMBO.

Back of caste, custom and tradition in India lies one of the most ancient of civilizations. This is the ground and pillar of heathenism. Caste and custom are but the visible product above the surface of this deep-lying root. And but for the latter the former would be as innocent as the superstitions of savage tribes.

The most prominent essential characteristic of civilization is established social organization. It is this that gives it strength. The lack of it makes savages weak. Civilization moves a nation as one man. Its strength is directly as the tenacity and permanence of the organization. In India time has so completely established custom as to make her social and religious position almost impregnable. The individual cannot be reached till the mass is broken up. Among savages the individual is accessible at once. Hence the greater success—apparently—among savage peoples.

India's civilization began with no higher light than human imagination. She has followed this firefly ever since. It has been said that Aristotle gave the Greeks the true logical method, and Jesus Christ the facts about God. They put the two together, and their speedy conversion followed. India has had no Aristotle. She has followed her erratic course so long that she has become wedded to it. She has no true method of reasoning. Hence the facts are not assimilated. Her methods are fallacious and evasive. Like a flea she cannot be made to take a stand. A sailor with a revolving compass, which always brings her around in the same circle, she has become crazed. She swears by her compass. The signals of passing ships are not heeded. At last, exhausted, her interest killed by the endless monotony, she founders in an adverse wind, having reached—nowhere.

Another vital disease in the Indian body is atrophy of the conscience. There is some knowledge of good and evil. But as a monitor which not only indicates the right and wrong, but impels men to do or to refuse to do, conscience has no practical existence in India. Let those who think they have found a mine in the Vedas and Shastras reflect on this fact. The senseless round of idolatrous rites satisfies in a vicarious way the natural instinct for the supernatural. There is no hunger or thirst for righteousness. Hence India is not filled.

I write not to discourage, but to call to arms. I would disabuse those minds which imagine that the few men and the pittance of money sent to India in a century should have redeemed her. India's statistics cannot be calculated by figures, nor drawn with the pen. But they are pregnant with hope of the dawn for those who have been in India long enough to discern the signs of the times. The victory will be, must be, for the truth.

What is the conclusion? The expenditure of men and money so far has been entirely inadequate to the demands. He who will compare the proportion of Christian workers in America to the population with the same in India, must see that this is so. There the trend is towards righteousness. Here it is the other way. I know there is a sort of sentimentalism at home that floods the missionary with divine light. He is supposed to have unlimited power and pity. He can therefore do more here than men at home. But he is only human, and at best not superior to his faithful brethren who send him. Add to this the difficulties of doing things where the motto is, "Do nothing to-day that you can put off till to-morrow," and the effects of a climate that robs the white man of half his wonted energy, and it takes no sage to compute the result. Truly, the church is playing in India. To mention Damoh, we have to cease asking for men and money when we think we have reached the limit of what we are liable to get. The work that is not undertaken is tenfold that which is. I will undertake to find work to-morrow for ten men in the station and fifty in the district, and will work each one so hard that he shall cry out. Given the missionaries, and I shall undertake to spend twenty times the money now spent, and guarantee a very small percentage of waste. Has it occurred to most people that one or two missionaries cannot reach a thousand villages with hundreds of thousands—sometimes millions—of people? Village work as I have seen it is mostly a hasty tour for a few months by one or two missionaries seeing many thousands of people for the first and last time, telling them a story and rushing on to the next. They never comprehend that Christianity is anything more than a nice little theory which is scarcely intended to be acted upon. A few rare conversions occur. But the mass remains as it was. So with school and educational work. One opportunity is grasped, much as the covetous gives a penny in the plate. It quiets his conscience. Yet, where one school is made to serve a district, a hundred are as badly needed as the one is. Still, we call such a station equipped. When will Christians go at this business as they go to war? Lord Kitchener could get millions to conquer the Soudan. But he more than returned it all. American money and youth were poured out to conquer Spain and free her slaves. It has paid her—morally at least. I believe an army with a mint back of it is the burning need of India. I believe there is nothing here that could withstand for a generation the onslought of such a force. Say what we will, the argument of numbers is powerful. Let it be realized that in every community the gospel is being both preached and its fruits made manifest, and converts would pour in faster than they could be cared for. But the blast must be sufficient to move and burn up the mass. The new civilization must in action supplant the old. The gospel both preached and lived will sweep away the dead fabric of heathenism.

Damoh, C. P., Iudia.

WHO CAN GIVE THE REASON?

STELLA FRANKLIN.

Why have we so few preachers in India? I mean men who have been set apart for evangelistic work. Men who are not bothered with other things, but can give their entire time and energy to the study of the language and to preaching the gospel?

When the famine is all about us, starving children must be taken in, and if we adopt children we must educate them and teach them trades. If people are dying about us with pestilence, we must doctor and nurse them well again. But aside from this necessary work, what can be so important as preaching the gospel to the people?

True, this may be done through school work and by many other means, but why wait so long? Have you ever stopped to count how few men you have in India who can really give even two entire days out of every week to preaching the gospel? My work this winter has made me feel this lack intensely. I had expected to go into villages, but I found the people in Damoh so eager to hear more, that I believe for the present my work is here in the town. Frequently I start down the street with a definite house in view, but before I can get so far I have been called to half a dozen places and find my time and strength all gone. Along other streets I will meet with similar experiences. Sometimes I visit the high-caste purdua women, but more often poor people, where any passer-by may stop to listen. This is generally where a certain caste, as weaver or some other low caste, lives. Almost any time of the day men as well as women will stop their work for twenty minutes to listen. They are attentive and often respond, "good," "correct," or "very true" to something I have said. I leave with a hearty invitation to come again, or to use their own idiom, "Be in the habit of coming to cause them to hear." But other calls will be so important that perhaps for two weeks or more I cannot return.

If Mr. and Mrs. McGavran return next fall they will probably give their entire time to village work, but they cannot possibly visit all the villages even once during the camping season. And what does that mean for people who have never before heard such teaching? People at home, where there are a dozen or more men, each one of whom is as capable as the average missionary, grumble if they can have a minister only once a month. Here we have villages all around us and our only evangelist is home for a much needed rest. We are living in a town of 10,000 and have only one woman who can devote her entire time to Bible teaching. People listen and are impressed. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." Other stations must have felt the same need, but I speak only of what I have seen. The time has come for evangelists. Why do not more of our young ministers at home feel the call? Are they needed at home as much as they are in India?

Damoh, C. P., India.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

W. B. MADDEN.

Shall Japan be a Christian or an infidel nation? In that glorious century just dawning shall the influence of this mighty people be used for God and the uplifting of the lands of the East, or shall it be arrayed against the progress of the kingdom of Christ? Fellow Christians! this is the question before us. The heathen religions of Japan are passing away and the Christian force is not strong enough to instruct the people in the way of the Lord. From many gods to no God is a terrible change, and we cannot stand by and see this nation, possessing so many elements of power, take such a reckless and woful move, when by quick action we can prevent it and turn the mighty stream into the way of holiness. Japan is now in a formative state. Despite the great advances made in all material lines, there is a feeling of uncertainty. There is no foundation. There is no solid rock beneath the feet of the leaders in any of the walks of life. Just now is the time when all the force of the followers of Christ should be applied. Just now the balance is hanging. Which way will it turn? Friends of Jesus, partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light! what shall the answer be?

I was amazed when I read that it was impossible to get young men to come to Japan. Can it be possible that there are no young men going forth from our colleges and universities upon whose hearts the burden of the perilous state of this nation rests and who must feel, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel"to the Japanese people? Young men, I write to you because you are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you. Think of this great people! Say, soon, "Here am I, Lord; send me." The influence of a missionary is more telling now than it has ever been. The doors are open. We meet in close association all classes of people. We are asked to teach, to lead, to guide. It is not rash to say that the opportunities to do large work for God will be greater in Japan in the next decade than in any other part of the world.

Our force of missionary workers must be increased at once. Double the present number will be too small. Treble the number will not begin to occupy the great centres. School work must be begun at once with a vim, force and equipment commensurate with the great need. Without a place in which to train evangelists and workers, both men and women, we are doing but shallow work; we are facing ultimate failure. To do this work the appropriations to Japan must be greatly increased. If the $200,000 is raised, this can be done. I am sure if all felt the extreme urgency of the work in Japan, you would unite in your might and rescue a nation for our risen and glorified Lord. This is an opportunity that will not long be available to the Lord's people. To wait is to lose. To the help of the Lord! Let the coffers be opened! Let the volunteers present themselves for the service, accoutered for victory! May the Lord open our eyes to the awfulness of this present moment.

THE MISSIONARY JUBILEE.

GEO. L. SNIVELY.

Our church has just been blessed by a visit from Bro. G. L. Wharton, and two addresses by him on "Sad India."

In the evening he spoke on India's need of bread, and from a tearful audience, without a collection, received many generous gifts for the relief of our suffering brethren there. It was the most affecting appeal to human sympathy and benevolence our people have ever heard.

In the morning address, with wonderful vividness he portrayed India's need of Christ. The degradation of her people, the pollution of their bodies by leprosy and other foul diseases, their moral depravity, their idolatrous ignobleness, intellectual acumen, and the naturally religious temperaments were shown to be constituent elements of that unhappy land's paramount need of Christ.

These expositions he blended into a trumpet call for a royal celebration of our missionary jubilee on the first Lord's day of March.

The work of redemption is there awaiting the church. The Lord has commanded his disciples to go forth and perform it.

Dying myriads are moaning, "Come over and help us." Heroes of the cross are lingering here only till money is forthcoming to transport them to the field. The lack of nothing but mere money that we can only control for a few years at the longest stays the bursting of a great light upon the nations so long in darkness.

The All-seeing Eye is watching the attitude of every congregation collectively, and of each preacher and other Disciple individually, toward the March offering.

Brethren, let us inspire a noble enthusiasm in the hearts of all to go beyond the $200,000 mark in this Jubilee Year!

Political orators declare it would disgrace our nation to pull down our flag from where the hand of bravery has placed it. There may be differences of opinion about that dogma, but none will question its being a shame because a crime to call back a single one of our 239 crusaders who, mustered in by the Foreign Missionary Society, commissioned by the brotherhood and led on by Christ himself, are conquering this world for God and heaven.

Let us now drill faithfully and pray fervently to the Lord of Hosts, and then on that crucial the first Lord's day in March, in the language endued with added meaning by the heroic A. M. Atkinson, "Acquit us like men."

Jacksonville, Ill.

To Wash Brushes and Combs.

To wash hair brushes and combs, dissolve a tablespoon of Gold Dust Washing Powder in boiling water; when it is nearly cold, dab the bristles up and down, without allowing the backs of the brushes to become wet; when the brushes are clean, dip them in plain cold water, and dry them either by the fire or in the open air.

Soap turns the ivory-back combs or brushes yellow, but Gold Dust does not injure them.

Our Budget.

—Foreign Missions March 4th.

—We give considerable space this week to missionary literature.

—We make no apology for this, as it makes very profitable reading.

—The question for each church is, "What is our share of this $200,000 for the silver offering for Foreign Missions?"

—Our correspondence department will be found quite full this week, but several original contributions have had to give place to the claims of the March offering.

—"Leaves from the Mission Field," by N. M. Ragland soon to be ready for mailing. Look out for it, and order a copy to assist you in the appeal for the March offering.

—February has given us some real winter weather, but it does not seem to have cooled the ardor of our friends in raising clubs for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—In most churches less than one-half of the members are present at any one service. The absentees should be seen and informed about the March Offering for Foreign Missions and urged to contribute. If a thorough canvass of the church is made the results will prove most gratifying.

—The church at Palmyra will entertain all delegates attending the Lectureship and Ministerial Association, from March 19 to 23. If you expect to attend these meetings please send your name at once, to M. McDonald, Palmyra, Mo.

—The Foreign Society asks for a gift from every member and an offering from every church. These gifts should be worthy of the cause of world-wide evangelism; they should be on a much larger scale than ever before. As new workers are sent out and new stations opened, new expenditures will necessarily be incurred. These expenditures must be met or the work will be crippled.

—"Bells of Eastertide," a cantata for Easter, will be issued by the Christian Publishing Company in a few days. The music is by W. J. King and the poems by Jennie Wilson, Birdie Bell and E. E. Hewitt. Sunday-schools desiring to make Easter Sunday (April 15) a day of glad rejoicing and celebration should correspond with this company at once in regard to this cantata.

—"I do not see how you are to continue the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, at its present low club rate, and its present high grade of material and literature, without loss." We have made no pledge to continue this club rate indefinitely. This is a season of special grace to our patrons. "Strike while the iron is hot." "Make hay while the sun shines." Don't lie awake of nights trying to figure out how we can afford it, but ask your friends how they can afford to do without the paper at the present low price.

—The partisan virus is beginning to get in its work now. We warn our readers against it. Stand by your parties and political principles to your hearts' content, but do not become so blinded by partisan prejudice that you cannot see things in their true light. An old reader has just sent in a complaint because he thought we did not denounce the destardy deed of Mr. Gœbel's assassination in sufficiently strong language, and he inferred sympathy with that act! No sane man, without the virus of partisanism in his veins, could possibly have come to any such conclusion. This paper has always denounced violence in any form, as a means for punishing crime or of correcting political or social wrongs, regardless of what section of the country it is in which the lawlessness occurs.

—Thirteen new missionaries are under appointment. They expect to leave for their fields before the year closes. Their outfit and traveling expenses must be provided. It will be seen that more churches should give this year than ever before, and give larger amounts.

—The new converts should be instructed in all that relates to the cause of world-wide missions. They will do their part if properly instructed. If they are started right in future years they will give much more liberally than the average Christian now gives.

—A compliment which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST appreciates as highly as any it has received of late is sent us by one who received it in a private letter from an aged sister, who said in her letter: "You can never know how much I enjoy reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I feel that I love the whole brotherhood when I am reading this religious paper". That is the spirit we are trying to instil into all our readers—a breadth of love that includes the whole brotherhood without regard to differences of opinion.

—The title of the paper to be read by F. G. Tyrrell at the Lectureship, Palmyra, Mo., March 19-23, is not "Practical Christian Communion" as it appeared in the program published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week, but "Practical Christian Communism." There is some resemblance in the outward appearance of the two words communion and communism, but they are wide apart in their meaning. We are informed that D. R. Dungan has kindly consented to take Prof. McGarvey's place as reviewer of Clinton Lockhart's paper at the Lectureship.

—Within the last few days the Christian Publishing Company has received a telegraphic order for one thousand copies of the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1900 from a publishing house of another religious body. This is probably the largest single order from an outside house ever received for one of our books. The same house had already taken several hundred copies of the Commentary in smaller lots. We are now printing the fourth edition of this book for the current year. We are not surprised at this, in view of the adaptation of the book to the needs of the average teacher and Bible student. This volume grows in popularity year after year. Bro. Dowling's skill in meeting the practical wants of teachers and students is unequaled among us, and unexcelled anywhere.

—But our Christian Lesson Commentary is not the only book that has a demand outside of our own brotherhood. Last week we received an order for five hundred copies of "Alone with God" from the leading publishing house of another religious body. This little book, now in its 17th edition, shows no signs of abatement in its popularity. It is rather coming into increased demand of late, although this is the tenth year since its publication.

—If any persons are omitting the reading of Brother Power's series of articles on "Pioneer Disciples," it is to their great detriment. Anything about which Brother Power writes is interesting. To read of our pioneer preachers from such a pen is, therefore, of the highest interest and importance. The article this week, the third of this series, treats of the first visit of Alexander Campbell to Washington, and the beginnings of the Church of Christ in that city. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses' management are certainly vindicating their high calling in these masterly articles from these able writers and command the attention and co operation of the brotherhood in the extension of this splendid system of education. Send for the C. E. R.C. handbooks and enrich your mind from their abounding treasures.

—The Northeast Iowa District Convention will be held in Rockwell City, Ia., March 19-23.

—Charles R. Scoville's great meeting with W. J. Lhamon, Allegheny, Pa., recently closed, resulted in 272 additions to the church. This is remarkable success, but these are added to a church strong enough to hold them up until established in the faith. Bro. Lhamon and his assistant, Bro. Fillmore, will see that there shall be the least possible falling away of these new members.

—A special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from Charles Reign Scoville, who is now in a meeting in Central Christian Church, Pittsburg, Pa., announces 37 additions on last Sunday. Twenty-four, all confessions but two, at the night service. The meeting in Allegheny City was a most remarkable one, and now the indications point to an equally great or greater meeting with the Central in Pittsburg. Surely, the Lord is in this work.

—From a letter from Dr. B. B. Tyler, our correspondent at Colorado Springs, Col., we glean the following itinerary for the next few months: He leaves Colorado Springs March 26; will stop at Cedar Rapids to attend District Missionary Convention, and will remain at Cedar Rapids ten days, preaching for Bro. Rudy. After a short stop in Chicago he goes to New York to attend a meeting of the International Sunday-school Committee. April 15 he begins a meeting with E. Jay Teagarden at Danbury, Conn. After that he will visit some of the New England churches and will attend the June meeting of the Disciples in Boston, probably remaining in the East until July.

—The reception of thirty members at regular services at Clark's Hill, Ind., recently, mostly by confession, reported by J. L. Sharitt, is said to have so surprised the brethren of that place that they could not sleep that night. We should like to hear of a few more such surprises; yea, many more.

—The following announcement of the death of C. S. Long, Dunmore, Pa., appeared in the Scranton Tribune of the 14th inst.:

Rev. C. S. Long, pastor of the Tripp Avenue Christian Church, Dunmore, who assumed the pastorate of the church on January 1, died yesterday morning at 4 o'clock of pneumonia, after an illness of ten days. Rev. Mr. Long was 55 years of age and is survived by his mother, wife, married daughter and two brothers. He had been in the ministry for twenty-five years, seventeen of which had been passed at Lock Haven, Pa., where he had been pastor of the First Christian Church. He was also corresponding secretary of the Missionary Society of Eastern Pennsylvania, connected with that denomination, and was Eastern editor of the Worker, published at Pittsburg in the interest of his people.

"Uneasy Lies the Head That Wears a Crown."

But such are not the only uneasy heads. Overworked housewives, harassed business men, anxious teachers, ambitious students — all ages and both sexes are uneasy with aches, pains, impure blood, disordered stomachs, deranged kidneys and liver. For all such, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the effective and faultless cure. It infuses fresh life and health into all parts of the body through purified, vitalized and enriched blood. Try it.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

—It will be a great advantage to the work if the offerings of the churches are promptly forwarded to the mission rooms. The managers of the work will then know what to expect and what appropriations they can make. Sometimes it happens that the offering is not sent forward at the time, and because of the postponement never reaches the mission rooms at all; the treasurer forgets all about it, or the money is used for some other purpose.

—Some days ago W. T. Hilton, pastor of the Grant St. Christian Church, Omaha, Neb, banqueted the male members of his congregation, of which the following brief account is from the World-Herald:

When the guests arrived they found the auditorium of the church cleared of chairs and in their stead tables covered with snowy white linen were spread. Upon these tables were all of the articles of food that go toward tickling the palates of hungry men. Of course this food was prepared by the women, who were present to do the serving, but there their duties ended and the balance of the entertainment was in the hands of the men. Promptly at 9 o'clock Rev. Hilton bade his guests gather about the table and after discussing the menu and disposing of the bounteous supply of food, he assumed the role of toastmaster, and in neat speeches introduced the orators of the evening. Those responding to toasts and the subjects handled were: "Christ and the Law" Judge W. W. Slabaugh; "The Church and Education," Prof. Woolery, of the Omaha high school; "The Church and the Press," William M. Maupin, of the World-Herald; "The Church and the Business Man," George T. Wallace; "The Church and the Physician," Dr. W. O. Henry; "The Church and the Workingman," Arthur Chase. All of the speakers argued along the line that business, the professions and the church go hand in hand and that in all pursuits the church has a tendency to make men more honest and better. In every instance special stress was laid upon the statement that there is nothing in the teachings of the church that will interfere with business that is conducted upon business principles. So successful was the banquet that Mr. Hilton announced that no matter where he may be called to labor he will make this an annual feature of his ministry.

Frank G. Tyrrell.

Frank G. Tyrrell, whose picture will be found on our first page, this week, and who is at present pastor of the First Christian Church, Chicago, was born at Ferndale, Cal., August 21, 1865. He became a member of the M. E. Church in 1879, his father being a Methodist minister. He graduated at the State Normal School, San Jose, in 1883. He began the study of law and was admitted to the bar at Harrisonville, Mo., in December, 1887. Soon after he began the practice of law, he became acquainted with the teaching of the Disciples of Christ, and united with that body, and was ordained to the ministry by the Harrisonville Church, S. W. Crutcher being pastor, in August, 1888. He was married to Edna Burford Scott, September 5, 1888. He became pastor of the church at Cameron, Mo., January 1, 1889, and was called to the Central Christian Church, St. Louis, in September, 1890, at a critical time in the history of that congregation. He served this congregation for more than eight years, making it one of the strongest congregations in the city or state. In May, 1899, he was called by the church at Chicago, where he began work May 10, where he is at present. Bro. Tyrrell's characteristics as a preacher are too well known to require mention here. He enjoys a wide reputation for a young man, both as a preacher and lecturer, and has given considerable attention to the study of social problems. He is at present our Chicago correspondent. He has a wife and three lovely children, and his domestic life is well-nigh ideal. His whole-hearted devotion to what he believes to be right and his unsparing denunciation of what he believes to be wrong and mean makes him some enemies, as well as many strong friends. If his life is spared he will be more widely known and his influence more deeply felt as the years go by.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Realize The Danger You Are In?

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakeable evidence of kidney trouble. It is nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the world famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, smarting or irritation in passing, brickdust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart-beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys an bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure and say that you read this generous offer in the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root.

George F. Scott.

A young soldier, unable to proceed further, was removed from the train to the waiting room of the depot at Kearney, Nebraska, and died in a near-by hotel, a few hours later. The boy had been en route for home, in Washington, D. C. Ere death came the parents were wired by the kind-hearted landlord. Joseph A. and Elizabeth Scott, leading members of the Ninth St. Christian Church, landed at Kearney, but too late to meet their child in life. All that their brethren in Christ and the G. A. R. could do was done to moderate the bitterness of their disappointment. Their son's company had been detailed to accompany General Lawton's body East; and at the resound of every sudden footstep on the home threshold the mother's heart had bounded with the thought of George!

But with all the bitterness of regret at not having been permitted to minister to their noble boy in the last sad hour, how infinitely less their grief on account of their child having been, also, a Christian soldier! And if they bore up under their great loss with surprising fortitude (and they did), their own intelligence and greatness of faith must be the explanation.

W. T. HACKER.

We take pleasure in announcing to our readers that the late fire in St. Louis, while touching the Plant Seed Co.'s store, did so but slightly, and will not affect their business. The same prompt and faithful attention that has characterized this reliable house for the past 55 years will be given all orders. Their address is as always 814 and 816 N. 4th St. A fine catalogue will be sent to any address free on request of any reader.

Death of R. T. Mathews.

The recent death of Robert T. Mathews, of Covington, Ky., comes to us as a severe shock. Only a few days ago he returned some proofs to this office of a paper of his appearing in a book soon to be published by the Christian Publishing Company. We had learned that he was to submit to a surgical operation, but had learned nothing further until we received notice of his death. We have not the dates of the birth and chief events in the life of Bro. Mathews; these will appear in a later and fuller notice. He was a preacher, writer and thinker of more than ordinary ability. For a few years past he was more or less under a cloud which greatly injured his influence and which puzzled his most intimate friends, but through it all there were those who believed in his purity of heart and integrity of character. The nature of that trouble, as well as the cause of his death, are best set forth in the language of the physicians who operated upon him and who attended him in his last sickness. They have issued this statement to the public:

A thorough examination of Mr. Mathews revealed the fact that he was suffering from an obscure local diseased condition of which he was unconscious—brought on by a sedentary life—which, reflexly, profoundly affected his nervous system, and at times overmastered the will. In the opinion of his physicians and surgeons this diseased condition was sufficient to account for all those aberrations of conduct which were as much a mystery to himself as to those who knew him so well, long before his affliction. A surgical operation was deemed imperative. This was performed, and the most sanguine expectations of the physicians and surgeons were more than realized. He expressed himself emphatically as finding almost immediate relief from a long mental and nervous strain which had all but wrecked his life. He was confident that the seat of the trouble had been reached, and that the long struggle with an overwrought nervous system was over. On his return home after recovery from the operation, but while yet in a weakened condition, he was stricken with typhoid fever of a severe type. From the first his overtaxed heart behaved badly, and this became so pronounced that in about six days' time he succumbed to the disease, the immediate cause of his death being heart failure.

This statement serves to solve the mystery which has both puzzled and grieved the large circle of friends who knew and loved Bro. Mathews. The lesson which it suggests of forming charitable judgments in such cases is too obvious to need pointing out. Bro. Mathews leaves a widow and five children, who have our sincerest sympathy in this their sad bereavement. We are glad to learn that Bro. Mathews had life insurance and other assets sufficient to meet the immediate needs of the family.

Baghdasarian Fund.

The following additional sums have been received for M. Baghdasarian, of Persia.

J. Coop, Southport, England,	$24.20
Lillie Ball, Jacksonville, Ill.,	3.00

We have closed the account and forwarded $75 to Bro. Baghdasarian, Kalassar, Salmos, Persia, in the form of a draft on the Bank of England. We have written Bro. B. that it is the desire of those contributing to this fund that he use it in getting away from where he is to some place where he can earn his way. The fund is not sufficient to bring himself and family to this country, but he may be able to get to some part of Armenia where he has friends and where he can find a field of labor.

An All-Year Resort.

The Crescent Hotel, Eureka Springs, Ark., opens March 1, 1900. A most desirable, attractive and convenient resort for health and pleasure-seekers. Ideal climate, pure, sparkling water, best accommodations. Through Sleepers via Frisco Line. Write for particulars to Manager Hotel or to any representative of Frisco Line.

Personal Mention.

Chas. A. Burridge has located as pastor of the church at Rochester, Minn.

J. H. Collins, of Burlington, Kan., writes that he is in a position to supply churches wanting a protracted meeting on reasonable terms.

There have been 24 additions to the Central Christian Church in Denver since Bruce Brown became pastor at the beginning of the year.

T. E. Hotchkiss, of Parachute, Col., is in a meeting at Rifle, Col. It is probable that a church will be organized at that point as a result.

J. P. Dickerson has returned to Holden, Mo., from Texas and can be secured for protracted meetings by churches wanting the services of an evangelist.

C. E. Moore, of Clinton, Ky., a brother to Sherman B. Moore, of this city, preached in Liberty, Mo., last Sunday and visited his brother on his return to Kentucky.

Miss Mollie Mountain, agent for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at West Liberty, Iowa, has gone to Cumberland, Iowa, on a visit of two or three months' duration.

H. A. Davis, of Greenwood, Ind., became pastor of the Highlands Church, Denver, January 21st. He is 24 years old. The work starts off well. He likes the people and the people like him.

After seven months in Colorado, with the church at Monte Vista, E. G. Merrill has removed to Arapahoe, Neb. The Colorado altitude was too great for him.

B. F. Vaughan, of Horton, Kan., was expected to begin work at La Junta, Colorado, Feb. 18th. He is commended by J. Fred Jones and J. G. Waggoner, of Illinois.

Robert W. Elder, of North Middletown, Ky., has gone to Colorado. It is probable, so we hear, that he will locate at Trinidad. This is an important point.

A. M. McLain, of Clearwater, Kan., would like to correspond with any church in Kansas or Oklahoma that needs a pastor. He is thirty-six years old, married, and has had experience in the ministry.

G. M. Read, of Buffalo, Ill., writes us that his musings on a certain evening were suddenly interrupted by a call from about thirty members of his flock who before departing gave abundant evidence of their good will and fraternal spirit.

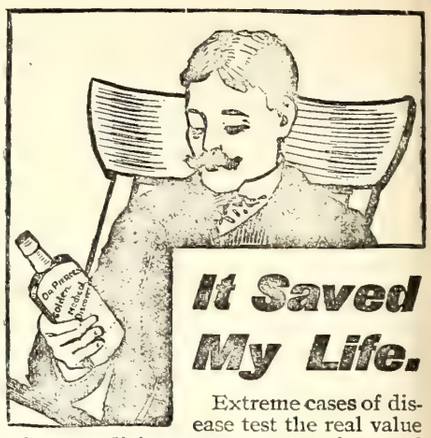
E. C. Harris will begin a meeting for the Christian Church in Eagle Mills, N. Y., toward the latter part of February. He will be assisted by Geo. B. Townsend, the new minister at the Christian Church in Troy, N. Y.

Last week J. S. Myers, of Philadelphia, Pa., was called to Sedalia, Mo., to see W. E. Bard in his last sickness, but the brother passed away a few hours before his arrival. Brother Myers remained to conduct the funeral services, and while in the city preached in his old pulpit to a large audience.

S. O. Burks who recently held a meeting in Brumley, Mo., is highly commended as an able preacher of the gospel by those who have heard him. He came to us from the Baptists about three years ago. J. C. Thompson, of Toronto, Mo., advises any church in need of a strong man to send for Brother Burks.

W. D. Ryan, of Lenox, Iowa, has accepted a call to become pastor of the church at Morgantown, W. Va. In addition to his church work Bro. Ryan contemplates taking a postgraduate course in W. Virginia State University, which is located at Morgantown. He expects to enter his new field of labor April 1st.

In writing of the meeting held in Bedford, Ind., by R. W. Abberly, of Columbus, O., James Small, pastor, says of Bro. Abberly: "The truth is, this young English-American has never been appreciated to the highest extent in our brotherhood for his ability as a true servant of God. Bro. A. Martin, of Muncie, accomplished a good work in Liverpool, England, when he led him into the light. The Bedford Church will remember him kindly, and strong men in the judgment will rise up and call him blessed. There is a great opportunity here for excellent work. The only regret we have is that Bro. A. could only remain with us four weeks. Human opinions are often wrong, but it looks like that if we could have continued two weeks longer we could have made 200 additions."



It Saved My Life.

Extreme cases of disease test the real value of a medicine. Many "tonic" and "stimulant" preparations, which have no real medicinal value, seem to brace up the users when they are feeling "played out." Any stimulant will do this whether bought at the liquor store or drug store. The true test of a medicine is when life itself is staked on its remedial power. In hundreds of such cases Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been the means of saving life when even the "family doctor" had pronounced sentence of death.

"I had been a great sufferer for several years, and my family doctor said I would not be a living man in two years, but, thank God, I am still living," writes Mr. George W. Trustow, of Lipscomb, Augusta Co., Va. "Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is what saved my life. I had heart trouble so bad that I could not lie on my left side without a great deal of pain. I was nearly past work when I commenced your medicine, but I can do about as much work now as any man. I cannot say too much for the benefit I have received."

Many diseases, named for the organs affected, as "heart disease," "lung disease," "liver complaint," etc., are perfectly cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which cures through the stomach diseases which originate in the stomach.

ALWAYS HELPS, ALMOST ALWAYS HEALS.

J. P. Lucas is in the evangelistic field. He is now in a meeting in Cripple Creek, the world-famous Colorado gold camp. Bro. Lucas is a good man and a good preacher. "A visit from him to any church will result in spiritual profit." So says B. B. Tyler. Address Bro. Lucas at Colorado City, Colorado.

At the request of W. S. Lowe, Superintendent of Missions in Kansas, Frederick Wyatt, of Kansas City, recently visited Ottawa, Kan., and before leaving baptized four persons. He informs us that O. P. Cook had been heartily called to become the pastor of the church in Ottawa and has accepted the call.

P. J. Rice, for seven years pastor of the West Jefferson St. Church of Christ, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has concluded his ministry there and will be succeeded by E. W. Allen, of Chicago. Bro. Rice delivered a very impressive closing sermon, extracts from whice were published in leaflet form with a fine picture of the retiring pastor on the front page, for distribution as a farewell souvenir.

R. J. Bamber, of 6601 Tenis St., Pittsburgh, Pa., says: "In connection with the work at Rowan Ave. I am also pastor of the new Christian Church in Turtle Creek. I shall take much pleasure in looking after the spiritual interests of any who have moved there or are members of the Christian Church elsewhere who are living there for a time. Do not neglect this. If you know of any one, write me a card telling me where they live. This is the place where the great Westinghouse Works are located. There must be many young men from other places employed here. We shall be glad to do anything we can for them."

A PURITAN VIEW OF THE STAGE.

Some questions never subside. From generation to generation the theater problem is being agitated without any prospect of any settled and common understanding among the Christian people. I myself am constrained to acknowledge that I cherish a deep prejudice against the theater as an institution. But I frankly admit that many of the finest men and women whom God has called and chosen are not in agreement with me. Therefore I may be quite wrong. My antagonism to the theater is accompanied by a delight in the drama so far as literature is concerned. I constantly read Shakespeare, but have never seen Henry Irving and Ellen Terry on the stage, nor have I seen Shakespeare acted by any performer. I have often been challenged by kind and intelligent friends to explain why it is not right to attend theaters, if I consider it right to read dramatic literature. My reply is simple enough. The theatrical profession appears to be one of greater peril than any other to those engaged in it. At this very time loud complaints are being made by people familiar with the back of the stage and the green room, that instead of the English histrionic art being refined and elevated it is shamefully deteriorated. In France the stage is a sink of impurity, and for years past insidious efforts have been incessantly made to degrade the English stage. Mr. Spurgeon used to say that "the church must destroy the theater or the theater would destroy the church." To judge by appearances it must at this hour be the church not the theater which is in danger of destruction. I have known several Christians who retained beautiful spirituality while frequently enjoying histrionic amusements. But these, in my experience, have been exceptions. Usually a theater-goer will on no account attend a prayer-meeting, and in time drops out of the church into the world, led captive by the devil of indifference.

DR. GUINNESS ROGERS ON THE THEATER.

I am led once more to refer to this never-settled topic, to which I have formerly alluded in these letters, because of a remarkable discussion in the London magazine, The Puritan (not the organ as that of the same name in America). The ablest disquisition in the course of this current controversy is the article in the February issue by Dr. Guinness Rogers, the veteran Congregationalist, who is just retiring from the active ministry at an age a few years past 80. He is the fiery and vigorous leader of debate that he has always been. His magnificent church at Clapham in South London will miss him, but he will be much seen and heard for many a day in the public fight for righteousness. His article is entitled "A Puritan View of the Stage." He shows that, speaking broadly, the Puritan idea as to the theater is that of Nonconformists in general in Great Britain, while tolerance of the drama, or indeed constant patronage of it, is the almost universal rule amongst the people identified with the Church of England. I have just spoken of the view of the late Mr. Spurgeon. That is the typical view of English Dissenters from the Established or Anglican Church. The typical attitude of the devout Anglican was seen in Mr. Gladstone, the grandest Englishman ever seen, as many of us think. His religion was one of the most saintly type. No one who knew him could doubt his high-toned religious character. Now, the pleasure which this seraphic-souled man always took in the theater is adduced by Dr. Rogers as being one of the strongest that can be adduced by partisans on behalf of the stage. But as the Doctor proceeds to argue on the other hand it is not easy to imagine a Nonconformist of similar character and position taking an exactly opposite attitude toward the stage. The difference is ascribed by Dr. Rogers to the diversity of early training and surroundings. To Mr. Gladstone a visit to the play meant no more than a ride in the park, or a row on the river. The one was as innocent and as natural as the other. Mr. Spurgeon, on the contrary, was accustomed to regard the theater as an influence to be dreaded and therefore eschewed. "And yet," Dr. Rogers goes on to say, "that the Nonconformist attitude has materially changed during the time of my own ministry is patent to every observer. The fact is that the matter has in its roots nothing to do with Nonconformity. It is distinctly Puritan. Many of the Anglicans in the Middle Ages were rigid Puritans. Of these the noble phalanx came out, after the tyranny of King Charles II. had been brought to bear on them with its accursed weight, who are known as the "Two Thousand." Congregationalism as it has since existed began with them, as distinguished from the older independency of Cromwell. To these Puritans it was not only the theater that was abhorrent. Their condemnation extended equally to card-playing and dancing, and to all the many pleasures which were in general terms described as being "worldly." Indulgence in them would have been regarded in those days, and down to about a half century ago, as a sufficient reason for exclusion from church fellowship. But it was impossible that such a code could be maintained permanently. It was arbitrary and capricious, and what was worse, had no sound basis in either reason or Scripture. Consequently, the sentiment of uncompromising antagonism to the stage has been powerfully affected by the reaction which has set in during modern times against the Puritan idea. There are some who hold fast by the old tradition, but there are only a few who would to-day suggest that theater-going is a sin to be placed in the same category as offences against the moral law. Dr. Rogers remarks that in his early days the reading of Scott's novels was an offence only less mild than going to see a performance of a play of Shakespeare's.

WHAT I THINK ABOUT IT.

To my own mind the main point is generally missed in discussions about the stage. It seems to me that the solution of the problem lies in the nature of man. It is not a religious or even an ethical question at the bottom, whether the stage is a beneficial or an injurious institution. It is a philosophical question. It is a question of sympathy. The capacity of cherishing sympathy, so as to hold it in reserve in abundance for use in the world of manifold need, is inestimably precious. Now, I have noticed that habitual theater-goers are apt to gush with sentimental effusion during the performances which they witness. People return from the theater and seem to delight in complacently relating how they have wept during the wonderful acting of some stage star. Many such people are also insatiable devourers of exciting fiction. This makes further heavy drafts on their stock of sympathetic feeling. They enter into the imaginary sufferings and adventures of people who never had any existence at all, and laugh and weep with gusto or distress as their various emotions are worked on alternately. But what are these jaded sentimentalists, as a rule, fit for in practical life? They become worse than useless. They have no compassion left for real suffering as they see it all around. They have no sympathy to spare for those who piteously need their help. Their hearts grow callous and cold. It is not the stage-loving people who build the alms houses, the infirmaries, the orphanages. Not by them are the missionary funds of the churches supported. It was the great imaginary sentimentalist, Sterne, who wept over a dead ass, and wrote a pathetic elegy over the expired donkey, who allowed his old mother to starve, although that author of the famous "Sentimental Journey" was a reverend clergyman of the Church of England and rector of a Yorkshire parish. My main objection to the theater is that Christian people cannot afford to waste on it their most precious faculties. Human life is one vast drama enacted all around us, with ourselves as actors. "All the world's a stage." So says the bard of Avon. But the apostle also says: "We are a spectacle to the angels," the Greek word translated "spectacle" in that text being theatron. Yes, we with the mingled grave and gay, tragic and comic, sorrow and joy, shifting and changing in our lives, form the vast theater on which clouds of unseen spectators look.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Two of my nephews, dear and loving boys, are among the soldiers in South Africa. One of them is shut up in Ladysmith. The other is in the central army under French. The first campaign is virtually over. The British have so far failed to drive the Boers out of our own colonial territory. But though we are disappointed, there is no dismay. All the disputes as to the causes or excuses or merits connected with the genesis of this sad conflict are dying out. The whole empire is committed to the task of driving the Boers out of Natal and Cape Colony. The failure has been caused by the interference of the politicians with the generals. The second campaign is shortly to commence by the march of a strong expedition through the center of the field, not amongst impregnable kopjes and granite mountains, but over the open veldt. What most impresses me is the overwhelming condemnation of Boer policy by ministers long resident in South Africa.

St. Louis Letter.

How to estimate a given religious movement in a great city is governed largely by the view-point. To look upon the dozen small Churches of Christ in St. Louis from without, they suggest a very weak and feeble folk. Three thousand people worshiping in a dozen small houses in a city of three-quarters of a million souls is not very suggestive of a religious revolution, in the near future at least. And yet such an event transpired in the city of Jerusalem about the year 31 of the Christian era.

In the first place, the best of our houses of worship are but as schoolhouses by the side of those of some other religious bodies. Then over against us on every side are the great mountains of sin, some of which are fortified and strengthened by municipal, state and national laws. But what is worse still, all of the greater currents of the city are against even the stronger churches. Man may be a religious creature by nature, but he seems, for the same reason, to dislike the kind that necessitates moral restraint or self-denial. At least the crowds do not naturally flow toward the churches for worship. Ordinary religion is not popular in these days, much less that which is pure.

But when you go into one of our churches on Sunday and find it full of sunshine, activity and devotion, you will easily see that we occupy at least a niche in this great city. Then if you will note the attendance of over 2,000 children at our Sunday schools each Lord's day and hear the songs and prayers of more than 500 Christian Endeavorers, and then see the ushers carrying chairs to seat the audiences in some of our churches, and full houses in others, morning and evening, each Lord's day, to say nothing of the work of Junior Endeavorers, mission bands, auxiliary, aid and other societies, you will see that the niche we occupy as a religious people in St. Louis, is by no means the smallest one in the city.

But it is not from the numerical, commercial or social standpoint that we estimate our strength or importance in the life of our city. We are still the only people whose exclusive plea is the restoration of primitive Christianity. And so conspicuous have we made this plea, and ourselves, as a religious body, that we are now generally admitted to be both orthodox and evangelical, and worthy of a place in their general councils. These victories have been won upon the platform of primitive Christianity.

And yet our numerical development in recent years is worthy of note; it has attracted the attention of the older and stronger religious bodies. When the writer came to St. Louis, in in 1885, the fourth congregation of Disciples of Christ in St. Louis had just been born; now there are twelve. There was not a Christian Endeavor Society in one of the four congregations; now there are eleven. Then there was no concert of action in city mission work; now we have a city mission board expending from one to two thousand dollars a year in city mission work. Then we were giving but little toward state, Home or Foreign Missions; last year more than $2,000 was given for these fields. Then we had but two houses of worship, which, with lots, were worth about $15,000; now we have thirteen houses, worth, with real estate, $150,000. Then we had five or six preachers in the city in all; now, in all, we have more than 20. It is no wonder, then, that we have constrained the attention of our religious neighbors and, in a measure, of the city. Such advancement in a decade and a half is noteworthy and encouraging.

Our churches are fairly well located in the city and fairly well organized for co-operative work. There is very little overlapping of parishes, but there is probably not that division of wealth and workers that their respective fields and a closer co-operation necessitates; but there is constant improvement in these directions. Some day we hope to better illustrate our plea for oneness in Christ by our oneness in the city.

Of our various lines of co-operation the chief one is our City Mission Board. This is a representative executive committee or board composed of the pastor and two members from each church. This board collects and disburses funds, holds property in trust, helps the weaker churches and looks after new mission fields. Its regular meetings are held in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office on the first Saturday in each month, at 4 P. M. It now has an evangelist employed, A. J. Marshall, of whom we have written. All appropriations to missions or weaker churches in St. Louis from the state board are made upon the recommendation of our city board.

There are other lines of co-operation, such as the Christian Endeavor and the C. W. B. M. quarterly union meetings and the preachers' Monday meetings. These are all helpful, but do not exhaust these opportunities nor fully meet the demands. There ought to be at least a 16-page journal, CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST size, devoted exclusively to their local and united interests. True union and sympathy, like faith, comes by hearing, reading, knowledge. Such a paper properly edited and distributed by the thousand every week would be a great propaganda of our plea and feeder to churches, and we hope that the preachers of our city can one day give this matter proper consideration.

Another matter in which our churches have a common interest and feel "the tie that binds," is the work of the Benevolent Association; especially that branch of it known as the Christian Orphans' Home. In this work our churches, Sunday-schools, Endeavor Societies, mission bands, auxiliaries, aid societies and preachers have fellowship and hold in sacred remembrance annually. The Benevolent Association has been a great blessing to the Churches of Christ in St. Louis, but its benign influence is by no means limited to one city or even to one state. It is now rapidly becoming a national affair, and its heavenly spirit will one day brood over all our cities as a hen over her young. In fact, no religious body is equipped for work in a great city until it has homes for the helpless, hospitals for the sick, relief stations for the needy and institutes for the young. But of these we cannot now speak. W. W. H.

Alaska Worker

GAINED 44 LBS. BY LEAVING OFF COFFEE AND TAKING POSTUM FOOD COFFEE.

Some people in Alaska have work to do. A widow woman Mrs. Adda Crossley, of Juneau, says she has been doing the cooking for eight men through the winter, and during the summer for fifteen more. She went to Alaska an invalid, and had been in poor health four or five years before going. It seems that her sickness was caused and kept up by the use of coffee. When she finally discovered the real cause she abandoned coffe, and finding Postum Cereal Coffee in the stores, took up its use.

She says: "I commenced using it once a day for two months, then twice a day. I only weighed 80 pounds when I started, and could hardly get up and down the stairway. After leaving off coffee and beginning the use of Postum, I took up the work for eight men. I improved steadily, and in December last weighed 124 pounds, which is more than I have weighed for 20 years. My face is round and ruddy. Friends say if it was not for my gray hair I would pass for 30 very easily. There is no doubt that the words on the famous trademark, 'It makes red blood,' are true."

Colorado Letter.

The First Christian Church in Kansas City, Mo, closed a meeting of four weeks' duration, Lord's day evening, February 4th, with more than 40 additions to its membership. The Society of Christian Endeavor rendered valuable service during this campaign. The preacher and his wife, Brother and Sister W. F. Richardson, were ceaseless in their efforts, and they were as discreet as they were diligent. In fact, it would be difficult for even a dyspeptic to find fault with anybody in the the church. All were ready to do their part. The co-operation, so far as a stranger could see, who was in a position to know a good deal of what went on, was general and hearty. The preacher is fortunate who has a body of helpers such as W. F. Richardson has in this church. It remains to be seen whether the meeting was successful or the reverse. The influence of a successful meeting will be felt and seen in every department of the church's life. Time alone can answer the question: Was the meeting successful? Some of the most successful meetings bring only a few persons into the fellowship of the church. There have been meetings in which the number of additions was great, which were exceedingly hurtful to the cause of Christ. If the meeting produces more Christly living it is successful; if it does not produce this result it is a failure. By their fruits protracted meetings, as well as individuals, are to be judged. Christly living is the need of the hour.

The Orphan School Record is the name of a paper, issued once a month, during the school year, by ten young ladies of the Christain Orphan School, at Fulton, Mo. Its motto is: Buy the truth and sell it not. This paper is conducted in a manner which would reflect credit on any school with which it might be connected. J. B. Jones, Jr, is the business manager; he is a son of J. B. Jones, the president. There are more than a hundred young ladies in this institution. There are in addition about twenty day pupils. President Jones is peculiarly well qualified for this position. He is an experienced teacher. The only thing I ever heard against him was that he openly denounced a bad man in a high place. It is not an exaggeration to say his soul abhors moral filth. This is the fourth year of his connection with this school. During this time all expenses have been paid. Not a dollar of debt has been incurred since J. B. Jones became its executive head. And besides this an old debt of $1,000 has been paid. The expenses per annum are $15,000. There are a dozen teachers. The income is from a small endowment, from tuition fees and from the free will offerings of friends. The work of the school has, for some years, been hindered by a considerable debt. This old obligation is now in a condition which encourages the hope that it will in the course of time be liquidated. So mote it b. The property is worth $40,000. The building is 200 feet long by 100 feet deep and stands in the midst of ten acres of ground. Forty acres of land in the vicinity are the property of the school. There is accommodation in the building for 100 boarders. The original purpose was to make this institution a strictly orphans' school; but the meager endowment has, to the present time, rendered this impossible. The original promoters were benevolent in their aim. Their desire was to educate girls who without this school would probably not receive an education. The horizon is brightening. The future is promising. The teachers are efficient. The school is distinctly and emphatically Christian. Friends are rising up on all sides and in unexpected places. In this important work Mrs. J. B. Jones, wife of the president, is one of the most important agents. She is a daughter of John Rogers, a friend and companion of B. W. Stone.

The Christian Church in Fulton is in excellent condition. It is in sympathy with the Orphan School. R. G. Frank is the preacher. He came to Fulton from Nicholasville, Ky., last fall. Recent repairs have been made on the house of worship. The audience room is most attractive. The wife of Bro. Frank is a daughter of the late C. S. Lucas. The people love them and they are worthy of their affection. S. D. Dutcher, the successful pastor of our church in Mexico, Mo., began a meeting in Fulton Monday evening Feb. 5th. The list of topics for two weeks, now in my hand, indicates that there will be no claptrap, no foolishness, in this meeting.

Westminster College, in Fulton, is a Presbyterian institution. Dr. N. L. Rice, who debated with Alexander Campbell in 1843, was for some years president of this college. A son of Dr. Rice is now a professor in this school; a daughter is a teacher in Colorado Springs. Westminster College has an endowment of $200,000. There is also in Fulton, a Synodical School for young ladies; so the Presbyterians are well represented in the town. These notes are the result of a brief visit to Fulton in the early part of February.

A grandson and a granddaughter of B. W. Stone are residents of Kansas City. The former has a letter written by his grandfather but a short time before his death—possibly the last letter ever written by the good man. In it he refers to his physical condition and speaks of the possible issue of his illness. A bit of hair taken from the head of the old saint after his death is also in the possession of the grandson, with a fine portrait taken from life. There are a number of mementoes, of no intrinsic value, but on account of their associations, of inestimable worth.

A volume of the Christian Messenger, edited by B. W. Stone, was given the writer by the granddaughter. It is the volume for 1830. The topics discussed at that time, with the manner of discussion, are exceedingly interesting. There is not space in this letter to more than refer to the subject.

But why should any person care for the relics of B. W. Stone, or Alexander Campbell, or Walter Scott, or Thomas Campbell, or John T. Johnson, or John Rogers, or Raccoon John Smith? Why? For this reason: They rendered a Christly service. They were unselfish. Their lives were holy. They so lived and wrought that whatever they touched is in a sense sacred. Their interest in others was so intense as to cause them to forget self. We are their debtors. They laid down their lives for their fellows; and thus in the truest sense they saved them.

May God help us to so live that when we shall have passed into the unseen the things that we now handle will be esteemed precious heirlooms. Amen!

Chicago Letter.

A missionary conference under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Union was held in the First Baptist Church of this city, Jan. 30 and 31. Some of the subjects discussed were "The Primitive Principles of Missions the Conservator of the Primitive Faith," "Christian Stewardship," "Education in Relation to the Kingdom," "The Goal of American Christianity" and Woman's Touch and Impress on Christian Expansion."

The event of the month of February is the Anti-Trust Conference at Central Music Hall, Feb. 12-14. As its name indicates, this conference is unitedly against the trust. A similar conference, held under the auspices of the Civic Federation, some months ago, was purely deliberative in character, and in it both sides of the controversy were represented. The present conference is composed of "the enemies of private monopoly." The purpose is declared in their call: "We believe the criminal conspiracies in restraint of trade, commonly known as trusts, which so alarmingly characterize the present time, are a menace to liberty. They close the doors of business opportunity to all but the rich and powerful. They impoverish the producer and consumer. They degrade labor. They have seized upon the avenues of transportation and poisoned the fountains of public information. They debauch the elective franchise"

The call is signed by the executive committee, M. L. Lockwood chairman, and two or three hundred citizens from all sections of the country. Some of the prominent names are Frank S. Monnett, ex-Attorney-General, Ohio; Hon. Chas. A. Towne, Minnesota; Senator Pettigrew, South Dakota; Hon. J. B. Weaver, Iowa; Gov. Poynter, Nebraska; Jas. R. Sovereign; Rev. J. P. Pinkerton, Jefferson City, Mo., and ex-Governor Lewelling, Kansas. Editors, labor leaders, politicians, preachers, commercial travelers, farmers and lawyers are to be seen among the delegates. They come from the extreme East and West and South, though not in very large numbers, probably less than a thousand from outside the city. Two men quit in disgust, because of the alleged partisan character of the conference. Bryan and free silver received much applause. Yet, it is not by any means a convention dominated by one idea. There seems to be practical unanimity of opinion that trusts are created and fostered by special privileges, and that they are to be annihilated by the abolition of special privileges.

The ideas advanced by speakers and discussed in committees are embodied in the platform or resolutions adopted. They condemn the telegraph monopoly, protection on goods manufactured by a trust, monopoly of the issue of paper money and private ownership of railways. Congress is called upon (1) to "take immediate steps under the power or eminent domain or otherwise," in any event paying the just value of the property taken or condemned, "to establish the telegraph and telephone systems of the United States as adjuncts of the post office department;" (2) to defeat and repeal all measures whereby corporations may acquire control of the volume of the circulating medium and create a banking trust; (3) to place on the free list all articles the sale of which is controlled by a trust; (4) to take, own and operate (just recompense being paid) the interstate rail highways, now owned and operated by railway corporations; (5) the resolutions close with a recommendation for the adoption of direct legislation.

Whatever one's political or economic views, it must be admitted that the Anti-Trust Conference has made a careful and thorough diagnosis of the trust evil and that the recommendations are not only such as promise relief to industry, but that they are the reforms of the immediate future. There were some significant incidents; for example, the mention of Henry George and his "masterly logic" was greeted with cheers. One speaker compared the ownership of the rail highways to the private ownership of roadways; declared that the private owners would exact a toll from every one for walking or riding over them; that legislators, having it in their power to embarrass the owners, would doubtless receive free passes, and preachers, as teachers of the people whose silence would help the monopoly, would at least be entitled to half fares! This sally was greeted with loud laughter and derisive applause. It remains to be seen whether this conference has been able to crystallize reform sentiment sufficiently to influence the platform-building and candidate-naming of either party.

Under a recent modification of the organization of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, all executive power is lodged in the hands of a board of seven men, and the society holds quarterly rallies. The first rally was held Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at Kimball Hall, corner Jackson and Wabash Avenues. The hall filled up and overflowed. A most delightful program of songs and special music had been arranged and there were two addresses, the principal oue by Benj. L. Smith, who hails from Cincinnati. J. H. O. Smith presided. You have heard of the Church-building Syndicate, composed of those who subscribe five dollars to be paid for every mission chapel erected, and go into a permanent loan fund; it is Church Extention localized, or municipalized. Twenty-five subscribers had been secured by previous effort, and under the urgent and eloquent solicitation of B. L. Smith, about thirty-seven more were enlisted. It was a gratifying rally in every respect.

J. H. O. Smith is engaged in a meeting with his own forces, having rented the Leavitt Street Congregational Church for week-nights. Jno. L. Brandt, of Valparaiso, preached for the West Side Church, Feb. 11. The First Church has moved from 40th and Indiana Avenue to the northwest corner of Grand Boulevard and 47th Street, into a beautiful hall; all bills are paid and money in the treasury.

STARVED HAIR

Slow growth of hair comes from lack of hair food. The hair has no life. It is starved. It keeps coming out, gets thinner and thinner, bald spots appear, then actual baldness.

The only good hair food you can buy is —

Ayer's Hair Vigor

It feeds the roots, stops starvation, and the hair grows thick and long. It cures dandruff also. Keep a bottle of it on your dressing table.

It always restores color to faded or gray hair. Mind, we say "always."

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"I have found your Hair Vigor to be the best remedy I have ever tried for the hair. My hair was falling out very bad, so I thought I would try a bottle of it. I had used only one bottle, and my hair stopped falling out, and it is now real thick and long."

Letter from Cuba.

No. 7 Tenth St., Vedado, Havana, Cuba,
January 30, 1900.

My Dear Bro. Garrison:—The Christian-Evangelist has at last come. I enjoy reading it and thank you very much for forwarding it down here. I have always urged the reading of our Christian papers as a means of spiritual growth and intelligent discipleship, and have many times exhorted, in my sermons and church papers, my church to embrace the splendid privileges of our own papers, no better than which are published. The Christian-Evangelist and the Christian Standard have come to my home since I can remember, and God knows how thankful I am for the good they have been to me. I never before appreciated them so much as when I had to do without them a number of weeks in this sinful, semi-civilized city, that would become to me unbearably monotonous if I could not have the company of my Master. But we are well and hopeful. This is a great field to the Spanish-speaking missionary that has the love and sympathy of Christ abounding in his heart. We can do much more effective work here when we can speak the language. The other missionaries here have the advantage of us in having known the language before coming. Dr. Carter, superintendent of missions for the Methodist Church, has been in Mexico seventeen years. The Congregationalists have here Rev. Mr. Herrick, a former pastor of a Spanish-speaking church in Tampa, 40 of whose members are in Havana. Dr. Lopez, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a refined Christian gentleman, and a Spaniard, came recently. The Presbyterians have Rev. M. Rio Seea, a native Cuban, reared in the States. The Episcopalians have Dr. McGee and a number of helpers, and the Romanists have their English-speaking priests here pushing the work among a people they pretend to have been Christianizing during four centuries. The Baptists own a property here worth $80,000, and since we came they are very busy.

So you see, dear brother, we shall have all the competition incident to an American city, together with the stubbornness of Romanized infidelity and superstition with which to contend. Pray for us. We need wisdom from above, and to forget that we know is fatal. But we receive the kindest treatment from our fellow-missionaries here, and we shall foster the fraternal spirit they manifest by a righteous emulation. We have no reason for discouragement at any time. Even with the misrepresentation of the United States here in the lives of so many indifferent, pleasure-seeking, money-grabbing Americans, God's own way must be pursued and sin will diminish here year by year. How much one learns better to appreciate the superior influences of Protestantism in the United States after being here awhile among a class of people so thoroughly Romanized! But I anticipate the day when Cuba will be Christianized through the medium of Western aggressive missionary influences. The struggle will be trying to those upon whom the duty will devolve, but such trials always refine a child of God. Our Mission is No. 13 San Miguel St.

Kansas City Letter.

From the private words the writer has received, called out by the suggestion in his last letter, that a more aggressive campaign should be undertaken by the Disciples in our more important centers, a campaign that should have as its objective point the familiarizing of the people with "Our Plea," and that through a united support of a staff of lecturers, it is evident that there is a widespread interest in this subject and a profound dissatisfaction with our present methods. There is no wisdom in shunting the fact that as a people we have made but slight impression on our cities. In cities of the first class we are hardly known. It is safe to say that in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Chicago not one soul in ten knows anything at all of our movement. In cities of the second class, like Cincinnati, St. Louis, Baltimore, we are without influence and prestige. Only in our smaller cities, such as Louisville, Indianapolis, Kansas City, are we reckoned within the popular estimation as a religious force of commanding importance. Now if ours were no distinctiveness of contention, no originality of doctrine, no largeness of thought contribution, we should be undisturbed by these conditions. But if, as we proudly say, ours is a message for the day, an important message, a message unique, distinctive, surely we should be led to question the practicableness and all-sufficiency of our present methods. There is a growing feeling among our most thoughtful men that now more than ever before the world is ripe for a doctrinal propaganda that shall bring an unadulterated, non-metaphysical religion to the people. Then, if the "times" are receptive, and yet our work still comparatively fruitless, obviously our methods are inadequate. "City Evangelization" means more than well-intentioned efforts to reach the submerged tenth, or one-half, as the case may be. To the Disciples it should mean nothing less than an indoctrination that should reach from the lowest to the highest; a proclamation from many housetops of the "faith once delivered to the saints." This is not bigotry. It is but consistency. And it is wisdom, too. The cities hold the to-morrows.

The type of preaching in the thought of the writer in the aforementioned note, the preaching that will win, is being honored in this city by B. B. Tyler. Here is scripturalness, strength, power. Without sensationalism, free from all eccentricities, thoughtful, spiritual, biblical, these sermons delivered at the First Christian Church have created wide and enduring interest. The preacher's familiarity with the Book is little less than marvelous. It would be difficult for our brother to even successfully lay claim to the honor of heresy after such deliverances. The secret of this familiarity with the Scriptures and its accompanying attractiveness was given in a personal reference. When a young man, only twenty-four years of age, quickened by a stirring, searching sermon of the saintly H. T. Anderson, he determined that master what else he might or might not, he would at least know the Word of God; and from that day until the present he has read the New Testament through every month, in addition to his other critical studies of the Bible—a golden word for the young ministers of to-day. We are hearing much nowadays about the minister's library—much, but not too much. It is safe to say that the greatest need of many of our younger preachers is a fire. For the heaped-up homiletics there is nothing quite so good as a match. What one hundred books shall I buy? Please, sir, buy one or none and read the Hebrew Library for a twelvemonth. The writer is no book hater, a book lover, the rather, and a book buyer, but clearly does he see or think he sees that in the study of books about the Bible we of the younger generation are having no time to read the book itself, and that while we are shutting ourselves up in our libraries we are shutting ourselves out of the Bible. Who will say that the Alexandrian fire, when the great library was all consumed, was not a benefaction? The Germans have a proverb, wise and weighty: "The good is the enemy of the best."

At the last meeting of the preachers of Kansas City and vicinity, W. T. Wharton, of Marshall, read a paper on "The Inner Life of the Preacher"—so vigorous, so suggestive, so helpful, that it was by the unanimous vote of the body requested for publication. It is to be hoped that none of our ministers will overlook it.

On Friday, March 2, there will be a Silver Jubilee service at the First Christian Church in the interest of Foreign Missions. This, it is hoped, will be in every way a notable service furnishing information and inspiration to all and mightily telling on our own work. The programme is interesting, both in its personnel and the themes discussed. We confidently expect a great rally, not only from Kansas City churches, but of all the churches in the western part of our state. The service is for a single day and hundreds of the Disciples within easy reach of us should come.

There are some up-to-date preachers in these parts. These gentlemen are past masters in realism. They have a genius for the dramatic. They are artists in the spectacular. A Kansas City minister wishes to preach, say, a sermon to cyclists and he has a large floral bicycle nailed on the wall just behind the pulpit to give the proper realistic touches to the performance. But alas, the honors for originality and daring must go elsewhere! An itinerant evangelist of the Holiness sect has been preaching in Kansas providing such realistic accessories for the sermon that he must easily be sent to the head of the class. He preaches a sermon from the promise that serpents shall do you no harm and he has a rattlesnake to hand and gives an ocular and physical demonstration! This pulpiteer was cutting an extremely wide swath until it was discovered that the snake's fangs had been extracted! Now his following is not so large, yet the exhibition of a real, live snake, though fangless, is not to be looked down on. Great is pulpit realism. When shall we have done with such pettiness, such silliness! G. H. Combs.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

I have been requested to give some of my experiences as chaplain of the House of Representatives. My election to that honorable position was a matter of general surprise, and I have often been asked, "How did it happen?" The Disciples of Christ were well represented in the Fifty-third Congress. Among the Democratic members were such men as Richardson and McMillan, of Tennessee; Champ Clark, of Missouri; Tom Johnson, of Ohio; Judge Hunter, of Illinois; Cooper, of Indiana, and last but no means least, Allen, of Mississippi. Bro. Allen presented my name to the caucus in a characteristic speech—a speech abounding in good humor and choice anecdotes. He made it plain that his own spiritual welfare depended upon the selection of a congenial chaplain. Some said that John Allen's spiritual condition was a matter of greater concern to them than denominational or state affiliations, and they would have to vote as he requested.

Marcus Lisle, of Winchester, Ky., who had been a college mate of mine in Kentucky University, proved himself a staunch friend. I remember also with pleasure the support given by W. J. Bryan, destined to achieve in a few months national fame. Mr. A. B. Hurt, doorkeeper of the House, and Henry Mohler, assistant sergeant-at-arms, were also actively enlisted in my behalf. The other candidates had not been idle. The pastor of the largest Southern Methodist Church in the city had, naturally, a strong following, and won some votes by his offer to give the widow of the late chaplain half the salary. A Baptist minister made the plea that no Baptist had held this office since 1803, and claimed recognition for his great brotherhood. A Lutheran preacher thought the Democrats should select one of his persuasion as a reward for the solid support of the German vote in the recent election; while a New England Presbyterian, with Yankee shrewdness, was busy circulating cards with the inscription: "My platform: One-minute prayer." A Washington newspaper told of this the following morning and said: "Another candidate, not to be outdone, had announced, 'My platform: One-half minute prayer;' while a third declared that if elected he would not pray at all, but would be content simply to draw his salary." This method of bidding for votes was strongly resented by members of the House, and those engaged in it found few supporters. On the first ballot the Methodist candidate had a good lead, the Lutheran was second, while my name was third.

Mr. Mohler, who understood the ways of politics, came into the lobby and said to me, "It is the Methodist brother against the field, and you will be elected." On the second ballot the Lutheran candidate dropped to third place. On the third ballot Judge Hunter brought over the entire Illinois delegation. The Pennsylvania contingent came to me, and when the Tammany Hall men dropped their favorite son and voted for me the day was won. Tammany Hall methods are not always above criticism, but their representatives in the Fifty third Congress were exceedingly agreeable and clean gentlemen. The formal vote was taken next day. I was escorted by Mr. Jones, of Virginia, to the bar of the House, where the oath of office was administered by the speaker. This was not so trying an ordeal as the delivery of the opening prayer. I found a great difference in leading the devotions of a sympathetic congregation and the recital of a petition in the presence of a thousand curious and critical people. When Speaker Crisp rapped on the desk, called the House to order and announced, "The chaplain will offer prayer," I was seized with stage fright. I shall never forget the horrors of that moment. I managed to get through without serious mishap, but the Washington Post said next morning: "The young chaplain's voice trembled in the presence of the Lord and the congressmen." I learned that the chaplain need not expect to escape the gauntlet of criticism. The House is said to have had one chaplain who repeated the same prayer every morning during the entire session, and some of the members were careful not to come to the Capitol until "the devotions" were over. An Episcopal chaplain was accustomed to recite a long prayer, and always closed with the Lord's Prayer. When Bro. Power became chaplain and never repeated the Lord's Prayer, it was said he was not familiar with this form.

One of my predecessors was accustomed in his prayers to refer frequently to topics of the day. Mr. Reed is said to have remarked, "Dr. M. can tell the Lord more in two minutes than you can read in the newspapers in half an hour." There was a chaplain who was reproached for trying to win the favor of the Lord for partisan legislation, and another who in a time when the war fever was running high, prayed: "O Lord, grant us peace—but may it be honorable peace," and was styled thereafter "the fighting chaplain." Of the earnest men who devoutly stood during the prayer, and in whose hearts was the spirit of supplication instead of the spirit of criticism, we shall tell in another letter. EDWARD B. BAGBY.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Leading Paper for the Young People of the Christian Church.

W. W. DOWLING, EDITOR.

Our Young Folks is a Large Sixteen-Page Weekly Journal devoted to Bible Study, Christian Work and Home Culture, first-class in every particular, with a large and brilliant corps of special and general contributors.

WHAT IT CONTAINS.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS contains, among other valuable features, the following special departments:

I. The Picture Gallery: First-class pictures of prominent Ministers, Sunday-school Superintendents, Endeavorers and other Christian Workers, with biographicel sketches.

II. The Church: Short, pointed articles on First Principles and Practical Duties; Talks on the mid-week Prayer-meeting Topics, and notes of Church Doings.

III. The Sunday-school: Full Expository, Illustrative and Practical Notes on the International Texts, that will afford teachers and older pupils all the aid needed in the study, teaching and application of the Sunday-school lesson.

IV. The Y. P. S. C. E.: Expository Notes on the Y. P. S. C. E. and Junior Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, with Illustrative and Practical Applications and Quotations, that will help young Endeavorers to take an active and intelligent part in the Service.

V. The Home Circle: Poetry, Stories, Illustrated sketches of travel, familiar chats about books, music, amusements and kindred topics.

WHAT IT WILL DO.

1. It will interest your big boys and girls, and help you to keep them in the Sunday-school.
2. It will instruct them in the Scriptures as understood and interpreted by the Disciples of Christ.
3. It will make your young disciples familiar with the work and principles of the religious body with which they are connected, and "root and ground" them in the faith.

WHAT IT WILL COST.

The Subscription Price is very low—so low that it comes within the reach of all. The following are

The Rates.—One copy, one year, seventy-five cents; in clubs of ten and upwards, fifty cents each per year.

The Benevolent Association.

The B. A. C. C. are glad to report the year 1899 the most prosperous in its history. Thanksgiving and Christmas were happy days indeed. The boxes came thick and fast; crates of chickens, turkeys and ducks, until the boys said they had not room to play. There were whole hogs, dressed, with ears of corn in their mouths. How happy the children were! How they danced for joy! And why should they not? God knows their little lives have had sadness enough, and the stern old world to meet in a few years. Pile up the gladness! Scatter the sunshine! There is no better field for sowing; none may yield a richer harvest. But the happiest of all are those who contributed to this joy.

The following is the cash reported in the January Cry, being the amount received during the month of December, 1899:

From Ill., $484.15; Mo., $465.09; Col., $79.75; Kan., $71.71; Iowa, $62.60; Cal., $9.25; Ind., $7.66; Ohio, $3.60; Miss., $3.50; Ky., $2.00; Idaho, $2.00; N. Y., $1.50; Neb., $1.50; Minn., .50.

Making a total of $1494.81.

To care for the three homes, the Orphans', the Mothers' and Babies' and the Old People's (see Jan. Cry), it is much too small, but larger than usual and the association is encouraged.

There are now three men in the field as follows: J. M. Tennison, for the territory west of the Missouri and Arkansas; Bro. J. D. Dillard for Missouri, and the writer east of the Mississippi.

The B. A. C. C. ladies are hoping for a large offering on Easter. Last year it was very small. Programs will be sent out in February to all who will apply and promise to use them for the benefit of the association.

Write Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Yours in the service of the King,
L BROWN.

Evangelistic.

ENGLAND.

Southampton, Feb. 6.—Ten added at regular services; seven by confession.—LESLIE W. MORGAN.

CALIFORNIA.

Artesia, Feb. 8.—Nine added in the last two weeks. Everybody hopeful.—N. B. McGHEE.

TEXAS.

Galveston, Feb. 12.—Sanders-Douthit meeting closed last night with 40 additions. For this city this is a great meeting. We rejoice.—JESSE B. HASTON.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburg.—We closed with 272 added at Allegheny. Bro. Lhamon is one of our very strongest men and the great church one of our best. We praise Him for all.—C. R. SCOVILLE.

ARKANSAS.

Siloam Springs, Feb. 12.—All the church activities are progressing. We expect to raise all the apportionment for Foreign Missions, and more if possible. There have been seven added since I began the work.—H. H. RAMA.

MINNESOTA.

Mankato, Feb. 11.—Two more additions yesterday and four on the previous Lord's day; six in all not reported. We have had 22 additions since I came to this state, two months ago. The work prospers and the brethren feel that they have entered into a new field of prosperity.—W. H. WILLYARD, pastor.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Vinita, Feb. 15.—In January I visited Bristow. Commenced preaching Friday night, closed Sunday night, with 23 additions. I returned second Sunday in February, had two more additions and raised $550 with which to build a church, which will be commenced at once. Pray for the cause in this country.—F. G. ROBERTS.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville.—We have had another confession at the Adams St. Christian Church. Bro. G. W. Muckley delivered an excellent address to our congregation last Friday evening. All were delighted with the man and the matter. Our Sunday-school has more than doubled in the last month. One excellent church worker of our number has brought 25 new scholars in in two weeks' time, and tells us she has a much higher mark. She has been a Christian less than nine months.—T. H. BLENUS.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, Feb. 11.—There were seven additions to the Richmond Ave. Church this morning; four by baptism; two confessions last Lord's day and two confessions the previous Lord's day. The fields seem to be white unto the harvest here.—LLOYD DARSIE.

Tonawanda, Feb. 12.—Just closed a meeting here with 12 accessions; 11 baptisms and one from the Catholics. Bro. Hootman is an "all-round' man—pastor, evangelist, singer and general manager of church affairs. He is ably assisted by his helpmeet, Mrs. H., who preached at the evening service, on the last Lord's day of the meeting, Mr. H. being sick. I go to Milton, Ind., to assist Bro. W. F. Shearer.—LILLIAN PEARL PERRIN, singer.

OHIO.

Ætna St. Church, Cleveland, Feb. 12.—Our revival services closed last night, after running three weeks and one day. There were 28 additions; 24 by confession. Prof. James E. Hawes, of Ada, O., had charge of the song service. He is a most efficient leader of song and a soloist of rare power and efficiency.—AUSTIN HUNTER, pastor.

Cleveland, Feb. 12.—W. W. Sniff closed his meeting at the Franklin Circle Church of Christ last night with 40 additions. W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, Ind., conducted the music. He did the work exceedingly well. One lady 82 years old was baptized. One Romanist young man was baptized and his parents turned him away from their house and disowned him. He fought in the Cuban War and now thinks Protestants are the real army, opposing sin and Satan. His intelligence and Bible will direct him aright. Bro. Sniff is a scriptural preacher of great clearness and power. His chart sermons were attractive.—ALLENSON WILCOX.

OKLAHOMA.

Perkins, Feb. 14.—We have just closed a meeting at the above place with 27 additions; 13 by baptism. We have just finished a new church building here and our outlook is very good.—J. W. GARNER.

NEBRASKA.

Kearney, Feb. 14.—One confession last Lord's day, which means two baptisms since entering upon this work. Hope to be in our meeting soon.—W. T. HACKER, pastor.

Plattsmouth, Feb. 12.—We began our meeting one week ago with home forces. Four added to date; three by obedience. Miss Mabel Ford, of Cotner University, has charge of the music. Her work is highly appreciated. We will be joined to-day by Bro. Sherman Hill, of Hampton, Ia., who will conduct the services for an indefinite time. The outlook is very good for a great ingathering.—R. M. DUNGAN.

KANSAS.

Marion.—Our meeting opened with one addition. Bro. I. T. LeBaron, the pastor, has the work under the best of control. He was for many years one of our successful evangelists, and is demonstrating that one can be a thoroughly successful pastor as well. The church here love him. It is a pleasure to see such a pastor and church labor together in the Master's kingdom. We expect great things in this meeting.—MILO G. CUMMINGS AND MISS WILEY, evangelists.

Randall, Feb. 14.—Star meeting by A. C. McKeever resulted in 19 additions; 12 by baptism, two Friends, three reclaimed and two by statement.—E. A. NEWBY.

Erie, Feb. 14.—Began a meeting with home forces, January 7. Closed in fifth week on account of sickness, with 14 added; 12 by baptism.—W. H. SCRIVNER.

IOWA.

Nelson G. Brown, pastor, Ottumwa, reports 35 additions to date (Feb. 8) in their meeting.

Lake City, Feb. 14.—Our audiences continue large. Two added Feb. 4 and two added Feb. 11. Our work is in very fine shape.—F. H. LEMON.

Pleasantville, Feb. 13.—During a short meeting at the Fairview schoolhouse 11 were added to the church; seven by obedience.—FORREST D. FERRALL.

Hamburg, Feb. 14.—I began a meeting here about two weeks ago, with results as follows: An organization 44 strong, 25 of them charter members; 15 by baptism and four by statement. Prospects good for many more.—H. W. CIES, evangelist.

Marcus, Feb. 15.—This week closes the Estherville meeting, held by Evangelist Wickham. There have been 48 additions; 40 of these by confession. He begins a meeting at Sioux City next week.—T. F. ODENWELLER, dist. sec.

T. R. Hodkinson, of Winterset, reports 10 recent additions, and all departments, except the treasury, flourishing. The financial weakness, due to an old debt and removals, will compel Bro. H. to seek a new field. He can furnish high recommendations from churches and leading brethren to any church wanting a pastor.

Sloan, Feb. 17.—Am in a meeting here with home forces. Meeting five days old and five confessions; seven additions before, making 12 additions in first two months of my pastorate. Work is progressing.—M. S. JAMESON, pastor.

We closed our meeting at Pioneer the 6th inst., leaving a church organized of 20 members, and a C. E., Aid Society and S. S. started. Before leaving we secured pledges of $272.50 for the support of a pastor for a year, and some yet to pledge. Also $200 was pledged for a new church building, but for the present they will meet in the hall. A gentleman there will give them a lot. Secretary Denny wrote me that the state board would stand by and support the work there to the best of their ability.—MILO G. CUMMINGS.

Bradyville.—M. F. Redlien, evangelist of Kansas City, Mo., and Clarence Smith, of Nebraska, singer, began a meeting here Jan. 9 and closed Feb. 9, with the organization of a church of 43 members and a preacher employed for one sermon per Sunday. Two lots were bought and $1,000 pledged to built a church and $500 more in sight. Page county is the banner county of the state for new work this year. Two old churches revived and three new church buildings will be erected. The brethren at Clarinda gave liberal financial support and at Siam the Iowa state board put $50 in the meeting. The brethren are greatly rejoiced and the community well pleased.—WILLIAM JONES.

TWO FINE SPECIMENS

Of Physical Manhood.

No form of athletic exercise demands such perfect physical condition as prize fighting. Every muscle in the body must be fully developed and supple, and the heart, lungs and stomach must act to perfection.

Whether we endorse prize fighting or not, it is nevertheless interesting to know the manner by which men arrive at such physical perfection.

James Jeffries, the present champion heavy weight of the world, and his gallant opponent, Tom Sharkey, in the greatest pugilistic encounter that has ever taken place, both pursued much the same course of training and the first and most important part of this training was to get the stomach in condition, and keep the digestion absolutely perfect, so that every muscle and nerve would be at its highest capabilities.

This is not done by a secret patent medicene, but both of these great pugilists used a well-known natural digestive tablet sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and composed of the digestive ferments which every stomach requires for healthy digestion.

Champion Jeffries says: "Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets prevent acidity, strengthen the stomach and insure perfect digestion. They keep a man in fine physical condition." Signed, James J. Jeffries, champion of the world.

The gallant fighter, Sharkey, says: "Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets remove all discomforts after eating. They rest the stomach and restore it to healthful condition. I heartily recommend them." Signed, Thos. J. Sharkey.

The advantage of the daily use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is that they keep the people well and ward off sickness and are equally valuable to well persons as to the dyspeptics. Another advantage is that these tablets contain no cathartics, or poisons of any character, but simply digestive ferments which are found in every healthy stomach, and when digestion is imperfect it is because the stomach lacks some of these elements and Stuarts Dyspepsia Tablets supply it.

They are no cheap cathartic, but a perfectly safe and efficient digestive and the demand for them is greater than the sale of all other so-called dyspepsia cures combined. No remedy could possibly reach such a place in public esteem except as the result of positive merit.

Full sized packages are sold by all druggists at 50 cents and the best habit you can possibly form is to take a Stuart's Tablet after each meal. They make weak stomachs strong and keep strong stomachs vigorous.

KENTUCKY.

Bardstown, Feb. 17.—We had two accessions at Springfield Sunday. This is a mission of the state board. Since October last, one year, 66 have been gathered together for active work for the Lord. We will soon begin our new house of worship.—W. F. ROGERS.

WASHINGTON.

Dayton.—We closed our meeting on Lord's day, Feb. 11, having continued five weeks. The interest was excellent and the attendance large. We closed with a crowded house. Twenty obeyed the Master's call; one by statement, three by letter and sixteen by confession.—W. W. PEW, pastor.

MICHIGAN.

St. Louis, Feb. 12.—Had two additions here yesterday.—J. L. SMITH.

Owosso, Feb. 5.—Our three weeks' meeting closed with 13 confessions; three the last night. I felt we had just nicely got started. Bro. Daniels, of Iowa, Mich., was with us as singer. It was his second meeting and he leaves many friends. One more confession last Lord's day.—S. A. STRAWN, pastor.

KANSAS.

Columbus, Feb. 12.—Seventeen additions here so far in this month. They are the result of a union meeting just closed with the Newlight Christian brethren at the Mitchell Schoolhouse three miles south of Columbus, in which the writer did most of the preaching. Sixty-four have been added here in nine months; four at regular services. Others will be baptized soon. Have been called for another year without a dissenting voice from either within or without.—M. MCFARLAND.

Coffeyville, Feb. 16.—We have just closed a month's meeting here, resulting in 40 additions; mostly by confession and baptism. Bro. J. T. Bays, of Independance, did the preaching. He is a plain, strong gospel preacher. We feel greatly encouraged and face the future with strong hope. —ALFRED BRUNK.

ILLINOIS.

Clay City, Feb. 11.—We began a meeting with home forces last Friday night. Last night one young lady made the good confession before a crowded house.—WALTER KLINE.

Lanark, Feb. 16.—We have had five baptisms during the last two weeks at our regular services. We expect to commence a meeting soon. All departments of our church work are moveing along nicely. E. I. Stanley is our pastor.—G. H. ROYER.

Longview, Feb. 16.—I began a meeting here on New Year's eve, and continued one week, with a full house and seven additions. I also held a week's meeting at Camargo the last of January, which resulted in six additions. My work is in fine condition.—B. N. ANDERSON.

Galesburg, Feb. 12.—There were seven additions to the church here yesterday.—C. H. WHITE.

Pekin, Feb. 14.—We are engaged in a good meeting here. Ten additions to date; seven baptisms. R. R. Lovall, of Ipava, is leading the singing for us. He is to sing for State Evangelist C. E. Evans.—J. T. ALSUP.

East St. Louis.—Our meeting closed third week with 22 added. February 4, had four added; February 11, seven added.—W. A. MELOAN.

Watseka, Feb. 12.—Two added here by letter yesterday. Our three Endeavor Societies held an inspiring union meeting yesterday P. M. Our protracted meeting soon begins with Victor W. Dorris, of Kentucky, as chief speaker.—BENJ. S. FERRALL.

Astoria, Feb. 9.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting here, with nine additions. Closed on account of sickness and bad weather. We have the largest audiences in the city.—A. R. ADAMS.

Girard, Feb. 15.—Our meeting lasted 25 days. Eight made the good confession. Bro. G. B. Williamson led the singing. As a leader he has few superiors and in character he is irreproachable. The Girard Church has given me a unanimous call to remain another year from March 15. Bro. W. A. Green, of Carlinville, is in a good meeting at Blooming Grove, Macoupin County, with results already assured.—E. O. SHARPE.

East St. Louis.—Meeting closed wite 24 additions; 12 since; 47 in all since we began work here Nov 1.—W. A. MELOAN.

Virginia, Feb. 14.—Our meeting here resulted in gaining 24 to our membership; 20 by primary obedience. Bro. Omer ably presented the truth to our people.—J. H. S.

DeLand.—Our meeting at DeLand resulted in the baptism of 12 persons. I will serve this congregation regularly.—T. T. HOLTON.

Illiapolis, Feb. 17.—Our meeting continues, with five additions to date. Preaching is done by the pastor, S. F. Rogers. He is in his seventh year. Will continue till the 28th.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

MISSOURI.

Galena, Feb. 12.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Cape Fair, Stone County; 21 baptized, eight restored and organized a Bible-school with 40 scholars. Bro. G. G. Cottrell, of Shell Knob, assisted.—J. H. GAYLOR.

Tarkio, Feb. 12.—I have accepted the work at this place. Since I began (Jan. 1) there has been 11 added to the church; two by baptism.—F. BELMORE.

Albany, Feb. 12.—Bad weather and protracted meeting at the Methodist Church diminished our crowd some and yet we had audience larger than the other church and two confessions at the evening service. Our church is in good condition.—J. E. DAVIS.

Springfield, Feb. 15.—Eight accessions to the Washington Avenue Church since our last report. Our Sunday-school, Endeavor and all departments of the church is much encouraged. We are planning to take the March collection for Foreign Missions.—F. S. HALTOM.

Deulow, Feb. 16.—Held two meetings in Texas County in January, with 30 additions. Engaged at present in a meeting at Deulow, Daughs County; 15 added to date.—MORTON H. WOOD, Bible-school evangelist.

Springfield, Feb. 18.—Three more added to-day noon. This makes 47 since the middle of November last. Our work prospers greatly. Our second anniversary occurs Feb. 25. Our outlook is glorious. The convention for the Springfield district will occur here April 3-5, 1900. It promises to be good.—D. W. MOORE.

Osceola, Feb. 17.—I began a meeting here one week ago and in spite of the bad weather have had 20 additions. The prospect seems good for a great meeting.—KING STARK.

St. Louis.—The fellowing additions were reported at our preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday: Fourth Church, 3; Tuxedo, 5; First, 3.

INDIANA.

Clark's Hill, Feb. 12.—Have preached two Lord's days at this place, and at our regular services yesterday 30 were added; mostly by confession. The brethren were so surprised and rejoiced that they could not sleep last night.—J. L. SHARITT.

Bedford, Feb. 12.—Our meeting with Bro. R. W. Abberley, of Columbus, O., has just closed, with 100 additions; about 50 by baptism. The interest began with the first meeting and continued even to the close. When we consider that this was accomplished in a town of about 10,000 inhabitants, and that last year the church enjoyed a meeting with over 200 additions, it is considered one of the remarkable meetings reported this winter in Indiana.—JAMES SMALL.

Irvington, Feb. 12.—Just closed an 18 days' meeting at Montpelier, with 19 additions. Also one confession at a special meeting two weeks before the meeting began. During the meeting we organized a Sunday-school and will organize a Y. P. S. C. E. next Sunday evening.—HERBERT H. MONINGER.

Rushville, Feb. 13.—The writer has just closed a four weeks' meeting with his own congregation, with 82 additions; mostly by confession. The church claims that this is the best meeting ever held in its history. Never did a congregation stand more royally by its pastor. One remarkable feature about the meeting was the large number of young men and women and heads of families who came into the church. The church now has a membership of more than 900 members.—W. J. RUSSELL, pastor.

Brazil, Feb. 12.—I was called to the pastorate of the church at this point August 6th. All lines of church work are progressing nicely; six additions to the church at the regular services. We will not hold a meeting in our present quarters; our house is too small. We have contracted with W. S. Kaufman, of Richmond, Ind., for plans and specifications for a new modern structure. We trust that we may be able to build in the spring. —A. L. PLATT.

Angola, Feb. 15.—Closed our short meeting with Bro. Simpson Ely last evening; 13 confessions, one reclaimed, one by statement.—C. S. MEDBURY.

Zionsville, Feb. 17.—We had eight additions in a meeting of one week at the old Providence Church in Montgomery County. Also one addition at our last regular appointment at Dover; all men but one. We are convinced that the church can reach the young men.—WM. H. KNOTTS.

Elwood, Feb. 15.—We recently closed a four weeks' meeting, held by M. W. Harkins, of Anderson, with 119 additions. Bro. Harkins is a fearless preacher of the gospel. We have had 140 added in the last three months. Conversions at nearly every C. E. meeting, Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. Baptized eight at a recent prayer-meeting, who came forward since the revival closed. We have the best Intermediate C, E here to be found in the state. All departments alive and the church growing. We have instituted meetings for men only, every two weeks, on Sunday afternoons. We expect great good to result from them. Our motto now is, "One hundred more conversions yet this year, more for missions, more spirituality, more of all that is good."—T. C. HOWE.

From the published report of the Fourth Christian Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., we note that during the year 1899 the total sum of all money raised was $1,784.58, which exceeded that of the previous year by $177.57. The sum of $96.40 was given to the various missions. The membership of the church Dec. 31st, 1899, was 389.

Allegheny, Pa.

Our glorious meeting with Bro. W. J. Lhamon and this great church increases in victorious results. We went to the Carnegie Music Hall Sunday night. It is the largest auditorium in the city, and although it was raining continually in the afternoon and night, the building was packed and the ushers say 500 were turned away after all standing room was taken. The offering that night for the meeting was $70.30, and 17 additions Sunday.

There were 15 more, all confessions, on Monday, and 25 confessions to-night. We took up a collection or an offering for the famine sufferers in India and it amounted to $66. There has been 47 added in three days and 227 in all to date. Will close to-morrow night. Bro. Lhamon has the largest per cent. of young men and women in his congregation of any church of my acquaintance. Bro. Fillmore stays on, as before, with this church, and Bro. J. Walter Wilson will sing for me in Pittsburg; he arrives to-morrow. "Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen!"

CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

Bloomington, Ill.

Dr. Herbert L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, was with us recently for two weeks. He delivered a course of lectures on "The Beginnings of Christianity," and one on "The Life and Times of Jesus." Our people gave him a royal reception. We had arranged to give the lectures free to the city, and the people turned out en masse. We had the most representative attendance of any religious meetings I have ever known in Bloomington. Bro. Willett quit himself like a C ristian gentleman; his work was scholarly, dignified and faithful. It was received with great satisfac ion by all classes; it is the unanimous verdict that Bloomington never before had such a rare treat in the way of Bible lectures. During Dr. Willett's stay he preached two sermons and delivered two special addresses: one on "Modern Biblical Criticism," at the request of the Pastors' Association, which was given in the Second Presbyterian Church, on invitation of the pastor, Dr. Denlinger. The other address was delivered in our own church to a great throng of young people on Sunday afternoon. Bro. Willett won all our hearts; praises for him and his message come from every quarter. The invitation was extended the last four nights and six persons responded in the confession of faith; and twelve others by letter. Criticisms of Bro. Willett and adverse reviews of his books will count for little here, where the people have seen and heard the man. I have never more thoroughly enjoyed or endorsed the message of any preacher coming into my pulpit.

All interested in fruit and ornamental trees, shrubs, roses, plants or seeds, will do well to write the Storrs & Harrison Company, Painsville, Ohio, for their valuable free catalogue. They are one of the most reliable as well as the oldest in the business and have a reputation behind them on which you can rely.

Dedication at Star City, Ind.

On Lord's day, Feb. 11, in the presence of a very large audience, we preached the opening sermon and dedicated the elegant new house of worship, just completed by the Christian Church in Star City, Ind. More than enough money was raised to pay all debts. It was a red-letter day for the church and the community and there was great rejoicing. More than 30 years ago the writer dedicated the first house of worship built by our brethren there. After more than 30 years it was a great pleasure to go back and dedicate a second house.

Uniontown, Pa.

The Central Christian Church, Uniontown, Pa., celebrated its tenth anniversary Sunday, Jan. 28. C. H. Plattenburg, the pastor, stated in his report that 647 persons had been added to the church, and that the present membership was 478; that the church had acquired property during the ten years valued at $35,000, which is free from debt excepting $1,600 on the new parsonage, and that during his ministry of nearly five years 400 had been received into the church. Two flourishing missions have been planted. Earle Wilfley, pastor of the First Christian Church at New Castle, recently assisted in a short meeting, which resulted in 30 accessions.

Our annual meeting, held Wednesday evening, January 17, was a most delightful occasion. Our church raised for all purposes, during the year, $10,034.39. This does not count individual gifts to Bellevue and other church enterprises, which would easily add $1,000 to the above amount. The church proper raised and expended $7,385.87; C. W. B. M., $333.69; Ladies' Aid Society, $185.37; Y. P. S. C. E., $330.65; Junior Y. P. S. C. E., $113.60; Sunday-school, $354.40; for Rowan Avenue Mission, $1,384.64; Western Pennsylvania Mission, $300. This makes a total of $10,383.89. Deducting from this $349.50, which was counted twice, we have the net amount raised and expended by the church and its organizations, $10,034.39. When it is remembered that this is almost $30 per member for the entire membership, the result is most gratifying. Indeed, we do not know a church in the brotherhood that surpasses this record, all things considered.

The two items in recent numbers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have set me to thinking, and I offer the following suggestions:

Let the Home Board begin planning an aggressive scheme of nation-wide revival by our people with the beginning of the new century.

As an illustration, take Cincinnati. What was done here for the Jubilee Convention shows what could be done in a great union revival by our forces in this city. At our preachers' meeting next Monday morning I expect to propose such a movement.

I will suggest that one of our successful evangelists be engaged for next January; that we organize our forces for a thorough and systematic canvass of the city and suburbs; that the Music Hall be engaged for mass meetings on Sunday afternoons and evenings; that the week-night meetings be at the Central Church; that a large chorus choir lead the music; that suitable tracts be distributed by tens of thousands.

After a month of union work, let each church continue the good work in its own neighborhood and gather the results of the union meeting.

Now, if at the same time similar meetings were held in St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, Louisville, San Francisco and all the large cities of the country, it would bring our plea before the world in a way that has never been done before.

I believe it is feasible. I believe we have a number of evangelists and pastors capable of organizing and carrying on to a successful issue such a campaign. I believe it is within the province of the Home Board to superintend such a nation-wide movement. It is none too early to begin a general agitation and discussion of the matter now. It would also be a good idea to devote a half day at the Kansas City Convention to a discussion of the subject.

Carthage, O., Jan. 27, 1900.

To the Illinois C. W. B. M.

I want to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the faithfulness on the part of the officers of our auxiliaries. There are only nine in the state that I have not heard from this year. Is yours one of the nine?

I have had reports from every auxiliary in the second district. The greater part of these are Chicago churches.

The largest auxiliary in the state is at Jacksonville, with a membership of 110. Paris is second, with 98 members. Are you a member of the C. W. B. M.? Have you an auxiliary in your church? If not, why not?

At our state board meeting in January we decided to make the Calcutta mission the object of our special gifts, the offerings of self-denial week and all special gifts to be given to that work.

With Calcutta, Mexico and Virginia before us, all so important, it was hard to decide.

Dear sisters, Illinois must sow by all waters. Let us help to complete the endowment of the Virginia Bible lectureship by giving all life memberships paid in full this year to that work. Are you a life member? Have you a friend that is not?

Mexico! So near to us. Shall we "pass by on the other side?" The work in Mexico will be supported by our general fund. Let us increase that by doubling our membership.

Dear sisters, have you read the February Tidings? If not, read it. If you do not take it, then begin with the February number. Read and pray. Think, plan, act.

It is yours to decide what part the women of Illinois shall have in this great work. Illinois, with its fertile prairies, happy homes and thousands of women who are Disciples of Christ, what is the measure of your love.

"Like Flakes of Snow."

BY NELIA M'GAVACK.

Like flakes of snow God's mercies fall,
We cannot count them if we would;
And, swift descending on us all,
We would not count them if we could.
So fair and pure, so sweet and sure,
They swiftly come, yet long endure.
In answer to our prayers they fall;
Thy mercies, Lord, encircle all.

Like flakes of snow God's mercies fall.
They seem to us like some dark pall
That, slow descending, wraps us round.
So dark, so drear, so fraught with fear,
Afar they seem, yet, drawing near,
They change to blessings, one and all—
Like flakes of snow thy mercies fall.

The Lost Emigrants.

R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XVI.

Up to the present we have found no traces of the missing party; and as we could not believe that the earth had yawned and devoured them, we gradually came to the conclusion that they had been swallowed up by the sea, on leaving the island. We had reason, however, soon to revise our conclusions. It was reported that our animals were steadily disappearing. There was a continuous drain upon our fat pigs and kids. The Birds must be somewhere upon the island. But where? Search was instituted, but returned no answer to the query. Still the animals vanished.

Some of the colonists were filled with mysterious fears and forebodings. There are thousands who will brave the greatest real perils; who are the veriest cowards if you but whisper of a mysterious or imaginary danger; who will charge in the face of a death-dealing storm up the heights of a San Juan, but will refuse to sleep in a lonely house that some fool says is haunted. Censure not, therefore, our colonists for their fears. They were only human.

To put the matter to rest, it was decided to search every nook and corner of the island. This was accordingly done. It resulted in the discovery of not the slightest trace of the missing men; and the mystery deepened. Scouts were then sent out every day to keep watch in various parts of the island, but nightly reported no discovery. One evening a scout failed to come in. He failed to report the next day, and the next. And when the days had lengthened into a week, and no tidings came of the missing man, a vague alarm was in the faces and on the tongues of many.

But one evening, when a scout came in and reported that he had seen a man, and had shadowed him for some distance, until he disappeared in some bushes up against the southern face of the mountain, there came a great sense of relief. So much easier is it to face a real, than an imaginary danger.

Later a hunting party came upon the missing boats concealed in the chaparral near a bay in the south part of the island.

From these evidences we readily concluded that Bird and his party were hidden in one of the caverns which we knew existed in the mountainous part of the island.

We decided, for the security of the animals, to drive them to the northern part of our domain for the winter. We did so, but the fences were soon down and they roamed at will.

We returned the animals and repaired the fences repeatedly, only to have them repeatedly thrown down; and finding our labors useless, we finally gave up the matter altogether.

We were still at a loss to account for the disappearance of the scout, but we generally concluded he was with the malcontents; either having voluntarily gone over, or having been captured and either held as a prisoner or having made terms with the party. We were glad that they were as remotely situated as they were, and after several weeks had elapsed and we saw nothing of them, we dismissed our apprehensions, and a delightful sense of security came to the colonists.

This period of tranquility gave a favorable opportunity for Bible study, which was improved by an unusually large attendance at our meetings.

At one of these Mr. White, arising, said: "There is one subject to which I wish to call the attention of this meeting. My wife is insisting that we ought to have our little daughter, born at sea, dedicated to the Lord in baptism. This view is in harmony with my religious education, and I think is in line with Bible teachings. We are told to bring our children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Jesus said: 'Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.' This clearly shows that they ought to be dedicated to him. Moreover, there are numerous cases of household baptisms recorded. And as households contain infants, it follows that these must have been baptized. But, as we have all agreed to go only by a clear scriptural warrant in every duty, which it seems to me we have in this case, I should like to have the views of others."

Whereupon, Mr. Smithson followed, saying: "I am glad that this matter has come up, and that we are all seekers after the truth; investigating, not in the spirit of controversy, but 'seeking the truth in love;' and that is the only way to secure it.

"The importance of bringing up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord cannot be overestimated. Parents are too careless in the religious training of their children. They care far more for the well-being of their bodies than they do for their souls. We have assumed a great responsibility in the guardianship of the little ones, and will be called to give an account of our stewardship in the eternal day.

"The account of Christ's rebuking his disciples and calling the little ones to himself is a beautiful story, and reveals the great and loving heart of Jesus. But since he says: 'Suffer them to come and forbid them not,' I conclude they were not infants, but were old enough to come. But that the Savior baptized them is an assumption without the shadow of proof."

Mr. White: "But, Mr. Smithson, we must not forget that while it is not stated in so many words that he baptized the children, the fact of the numerous household baptisms goes to make a strong presumption that he did."

Mr. Smithson: "But, when the Bible declares the purpose, that he 'might put his hands on them and pray,' that should end the matter. We are told what the Savior actually did. Let us not say he did something else."

Mr. White: "Certainly; but putting hi hands on them and praying might have been in the act of baptism."

Mr. Smithson: "A mere inference. The act of baptism is never so described in the Bible. We know by the authority of the Talmud, however, that it was a beautiful Jewish custom for parents to bring their children to the elders, or to any saintly person, that he might put his hands on them and pray. This is simply an example of that custom. Moreover, the unfounded assumption that he baptized them is destroyed by the fact that Jesus never administered water baptism. In John 4:2 we have the definite statement: 'Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.' We dare not affirm the contrary.

"Now let us look to the household baptisms upon which Mr. White seems to chiefly rely. The burden of proof rests with the advocate of infant baptism. If he will show that there was a solitary infant in one of these households I will give up the matter and baptize my baby.

"Let us look at these cases: I see you have your Bibles; please turn to the account of the household of Cornelius, Acts 10:43. The blessings of the gospel here are offered to 'whosoever believeth in him.' Were these infants? The next verse says: 'The Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word.' Can infants hear the word? The 46th verse declares that they heard these new converts 'speak with tongues and magnify God.' Can this be asserted of infants?

"The next case is of Lydia and her household (Acts 16:15). To prove infant baptism in this case its advocates will have to establish—

"1. That Lydia was a married woman.

"2. That she had one or more children.

"3. That there was an infant in her family.

"4. That she brought the infant with her in her extensive travels.

"Now what are facts? Lydia was a merchantess. Her home was in Asia, and she was traveling selling her goods in Europe. The probabilities are that she was an unmarried woman, and that her household was composed of her assistants and domestics, for no mention is made of her husband. Even though he existed he must have been among those of her household baptized. Then she calls her place of sojourn 'my home,' which no married woman would dare to do in that day, when her relations to her husband were those of an inferior to her master. If, however, a married woman, the idea that she should take an infant in her business travels in that age of extreme difficulty and danger in travel, is too absurd to entertain.

"We must, therefore, agree with Olshausen, the great Pedobaptist commentator, who says: 'It is highly improbable that the phrase her household should be understood as including infant children.'

"In this same chapter we have an account of the baptism of the Philippian jailer and his household, of whom it is said (34th verse): 'He rejoiced, believing in all God with all his house.' This is clearly a household without infants, as all were believers.

"The next household example, I believe, is Acts 18:8. Here it is asserted that Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house. The fact that all believed takes this away from the Pedobaptists.

"The remaining case is found in 1 Cor. 1: 16, in which Paul says: 'I baptized also the household of Stephanas.' In the same epistle (16:15) he declares of this house: 'They have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints,' and he further beseeches the brethren to submit themselves unto such. It is, therefore, clear as the unclouded sun that this was a household of believers.

"A final argument for infant baptism which ought to be noticed is that in the covenant made with Abraham infants are included; that they were therefore circumcised; that baptism has come in the room of circumcision, and therefore infants are to be baptized. But where is the proof of this? Where the statement that baptism came in the room of circumcision? To infer such a substitution is a dangerous precedent. If we may establish an important and far-reaching ordinance on an inference, where are we going to stop? And wherein is the similarity of baptism to circumcision?

"Infants were circumcised, not to make them Jews, but because they were born Jews. Yet infants are baptized, not because they were born Christians, but to make them Christians!

"Again, only male infants were circumcised. If baptism is in the room of circumcision, only male infants should be baptized, and the females must be shut out of church and heaven.

"Without a command for or an example of infant baptism in the New Testament it is not surprising that many learned Pedobaptists in their admissions give up the whole question. Thus, Dr. Woods, in his lectures on Infant Baptism, says: 'There is no express precept respecting infant baptism in our sacred writings.'

"Bishop Burnett says: 'There is no express precept or rule given in the New Testament for the baptism of infants.'

"Prof. Stuart says: 'Commands or plain examples in the New Testament relative to it [infant baptism] I do not find.'

"Neander says: 'Since baptism was thus immediately connected with a conscious and voluntary accession to the Christian fellowship, it is highly probable that baptism took place only in those cases where both could meet together, and that the custom of infant baptism was not practiced in this age.'

"Again, this great authority says: 'The lateness of the time when the first distinct mention of infant baptism is made, and the long-continued opposition made to it, lead us to infer its non-apostolic origin.'

"Finally, not to wear your patience, Olshausen says: 'There is altogether wanting any conclusive proof-passage for the baptism of children in the age of the apostles.'

"The papist freely admits that there is neither precept nor example for infant baptism in the New Testament; but bases his authority for its practice on an infallible church, and charges the Pedobaptist with inconsistency in claiming to go by an authoritative Bible; and yet, without the slightest warrant in the Scriptures recognizing the authority of a so-called infallible church, by the practice of infant baptism.

"I know it is hard to give up our cherished beliefs, but as we have covenanted together to practice nothing only that which is enforced by express command or example in the Bible I am sure we will give up infant baptism until some one will produce the inspired authority for it, and then we will with one heart and soul enforce it."

Science and the Biograph.

One of the most interesting uses of the biograph is to photograph and show minutely the growth and flowering of plants from the time of planting until in full bloom. A picture is taken every half-hour continually for about thirty days and nights. In order to secure a uniform light for every view a powerful electric light is employed. Sometimes 1,000 pictures will be made of one subject. Should the subject be a lily, the pictures at one stage will show the opening of the lily, while at another stage its fading away is seen. By quickening the time of the pictures on the screen the plant is actually seen to be growing.—Chicago Record.

Are You Happy?

Old Mr. Rothschilds who was supposed to be the richest man in the world, was once asked this simple question: "Are you happy?" "Happy," he answered, "when just as you are going to dinner you have a letter placed in your hands saying: 'If you don't lend me five hundred pounds I will blow your brains out!' Happy, when you have to go to sleep with pistols under your pillows? No, indeed! I am not happy!"

Mr. Astor, another very rich man, was once asked the same question. "Ah!" he answered, "I must leave it all when I die. It won't put off sickness; it won't buy off sorrow; it wont't buy off death." And so, it was plain to see, he was not happy.

But I went at once to see a poor, lame and aged woman by the name of Lydia Jones. She lived in one small room, and earned a part of her scanty living by knitting; for the rest she had to depend upon the kindness of others. I asked her this same question: "Lydia, are you happy?" "Happy!" she answered with a beaming face; "I am just as full as I can be. I don't believe I could hold another drop of joy." "But why?" I asked. "You are sick and alone, and have almost nothing to live upon." "But have you never read," said she, pointing to the Bible, "all things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's?" And again, "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full."—T. C. B., in Union Gospel News.

There Was Sorrow There.

"Can I get anything to eat here?"

"Not a thing."

"Any water for my horse?"

"The spring's gone dry."

"How far is it to the river?"

"Dunno."

"Please ask your father to step out."

"Pop's been on a drunk for a week."

"And your mother?"

"She's got a toothache. That's her crying."

"Haven't you got a brother?"

"Yep, but he got snake-bit yesterday and don't feel well."

"Well, what about you?" persisted the Colonel. "You seem to be all right."

"Oh, but I ain't," she replied, as she made ready to disappear. "I was to git married yesterday, but my feller got shot by an Injun, and it'll take two weeks to ketch on to another. This ar' a house of sorrow, sir, and you will please ride on and not ask any more fool questions."—Sunny South.

A GOD-SEND TO ALL HUMANITY.

Invention of an Ohioan that Guarantees Perfect Health, Strength and Beauty to every User, and Cures Without Drugs, All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Blood and Kidney Troubles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases, by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the System.

Ministers and Those Who Have Used It Declare It to Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced, Better than any treatment at Hot Springs, Sanitarums or Health Resorts.

A genius of the Queen City has placed on the market a Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman and child who has used it.

Our recent investigation of this remarkable invention was so very satisfactory we have no hesitancy in endorsing the same as just what all our readers need.

It is an air-tight enclosure, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, enjoys at home, for 3 cents each, all the marvelous cleansing, curative and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish Bath, Hot Vapor, of Medicated Bath, with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system.

Hundreds of well-known physicians have given up their practice to sell this Cabinet—such eminent men as Emerson McKay, Detroit, who has already sold over 700, and John C. Wright, Chicago, who sold 125 last month.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, some of which, referring to

will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., writes: "My father was down in bed for months with rheumatism; this Cabinet did him more good than $50 worth of drugs." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated with rheumatism and kidney troubles, when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use cured me; I have never had a twinge since." Rev. Geo. H. Hudson, Okemos, Mich., says: "I gave up my pastorate on account of nervous prostration and lung troubles; my editor so highly recommended your Cabinet, I tried it; from that day I have steadily grown better; am now well; nervousness gone; lungs strong; am a new man." Mrs. Ober, No. 994 Broad St., Columbus, O., writes: "It is grand for curing colds, la grippe, inflammation, aches, pains; it cured my uncle of neuralgia and sleeplessness with which he had long suffered. A neighbor cured herself of la grippe in one night, her little girl of measles, her son of croup." Another neighbor cured eczema of many years' standing." Hon. A. B. Strickand, of Bloomington, writes that the Cabinet did him more good than two years' doctoring, entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had long been afflicted.

Hundreds of Ministers

write, praising this Cabinet. Rev. H. C. Roernaes, Everett, Kan., says: "It's a blessing, made me full of life and vigor; should be in use in every family." Rev. J. C Richardson, N. Fifth St., Roxbury, Mass., was greatly benefited by its use, and recommends it highly, as also does Prof. R. E. P. Kline, of Ottawa University, who says: "I find it a great benefit. No Christian should be without it." Hon. V. C. Hay, St. Joe, Mo., writes: "Physicians gave me up to die; was persuaded by friends to try this Cabinet and it cured me I cannot praise it enough." Rev. Baker Smith, D. D., Fairmont, N. J., says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pain, and as cleanliness is next to godliness, it merits high recommendation."

Congressman John J. Lentz, Mrs. Kendricks, Prin. of Vassar College; John T. Brown, Editor "Christian Guide;" Rev. C. M. Keith, Editor "Holiness Advocate," as well as hundreds of clergymen, bankers, governors, physicians and influential people, recommend it highly.

It Prevents Disease,

and physicians are unanimous in claiming that colds, la grippe, fevers, smallpox, consumption, kidney trouble, Bright's disease, cancer—in fact, such marvelous elliminative power has this Cabinet that no disease can gain a foothold in your body if you take these hot Thermal Baths weekly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book, issued by the makers. To this Cabinet has marvelous power. Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn, states that he has never failed to draw out the deadly poison of snake bites, hydrophobia, blood poison, etc., by this Vapor Bath, proving that it is the most wonderful blood purifier known. If people, instead of filling their system with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and steam out these poisons, and assist nature to act, they would have pure blood, and a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

The Important Feature of this Cabinet is that it gives a hot vapor bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands, drawing out all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling and complexion. The first bath makes you feel like a new being; 10 years younger.

With the Cabinet, if desired, is a

in which the face, head and neck are given the same vapor treatment as the body, producing the most wonderful results; removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions, cures Catarrh, Asthma and Bronchitis.

O. C. Smith, Mt. Healthy, O., writes: "Since using this Cabinet my Catarrh, Asthma and Hay Fever, with which I have been afflicted since childhood, has never returned. Worth $1,000 to me. I have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted. My wife finds it excellent for her ills."

Whatever

Will Hasten Perspiration

every one knows is beneficial, but other methods are crude and insignificant, when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of this Cabinet, known as the 1902 style

Square Qauker Folding Thermal

Bath Cabinet. We find it to be a genuine Cabinet, with a real door, opening wide as shown in cut. When closed it is air-tight; handsomely made of best, most durable, water-proof goods, rubber lined. A heavy steel frame supports it, making it a strong and substantial bathroom within itself. It has top curtains; in fact, all the latest improvements.

The makers furnish an excellent stove with each Cabinet, also valuable receipts and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions. It folds flat in 1 inch space, when not in use; easily carried; weighs but 10 pounds.

People don't need bathrooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room, and bath tubs have been discarded since this invention, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent. There have been on the market, but they were unsatisfactory; inconvenient, simply cheap, flimsy affairs.

After investigation we can say the Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the Makers Guarantee Results.

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that this Cabinet will cure Nervous Troubles, Debility, Purify the Blood, Beautify the Skin and Cure Rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures the most obstinate cases of Woman's Troubles, La Grippe, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Malaria, Headache, Obesity, Gout, Sciatica, Eczema Scrofula, Piles, Dropsy, Blood and Skin Diseases, Liver and Kidney Troubles. It will

with one bath, breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Consumption, Asthma, and is really a household necessity. Gives the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value is its marvelous power to draw out of the system all impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is truly a God-send to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE

All our readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease or are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties.

Write The World Mfg. Co., 1496 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets describing this invention. The price is wonderfully low, only $5.00, complete, with heater, directions and formulas. Head Attachment, if desired, $1.00 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet; you won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and agree to refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented.

We know them to do as they agree. They are reliable and responsible; capital, $100,000.00.

The Cabinet is just as represented, and will be shipped promptly. You can remit safely by express, P. O. money order, bank draft, or certified check.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

The Cabinet is a Wonderful Seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 every month, and expenses.

The Poet's Grievance.

The editor was sitting in his office one day, when a man whose brow was clothed with thunder entered. Fiercely seizing a chair, he slammed his hat on the table, hurled his umbrella on the floor, and sat down.

"Are you the editor?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Can you read writing?"

"Of course."

"Read that, then," he said thrusting at the editor an envelope with an inscription upon it.

"B—," said the editor, trying to spell it.

"That's not a 'B;' it's an 'S,'" said the man.

"'S;' oh, yes, I see! Well, it looks like 'Salt for dinner,' or 'Souls of sinners.'"

"No, sir," replied the man, "nothing of the kind! That's my name—Samuel H. Brunner. I knew you couldn't read. Called to see you about that poem of mine you printed the other day on the 'Surcease of Sorrow.'"

"Don't remember it."

"Of course you don't, because it went into the paper under the infamous title of 'Smearcase To-morrow.'"

The editor fled.

What Is a Church Without a Fuss?

My neighbor's children and my own frequently meet at my house and do what they call playing church. They sing and pray and take up a collection and preach and have some one come forward and make the confession and have a make-believe baptism, and even go through the form of having the Supper, all in the most orderly and solemn manner imaginable.

After watching their childish performance one day, I said to them when they were through: "Children, you have done pretty well, but you have left out one of the most important things in the whole program of running a church, and that is a church fuss—a regular, old-fashioned row." Said I to them: "If you want to have your performance real lifelike and natural, put into it, somewhere, a first-class, old-fashioned fight, in which a whole lot of the members run around and berate each other and pull hair and seek to claw each others' eyes out."

"Goody! goody!" they all exclaimed in one general chorus, clapping their hands. "We never once thought of that! Let us have that in when we play church again." So to work they went, and with a make-believe fuss as large as life, as a part of their program, they gave us a performance that so vividly called up old church scenes, I almost seemed to be living my life over again.

After it was all over and I was once more alone, I sat and meditated for some considerable time, and as I did so I found myself exclaiming: "What a fearfully dull and dreary place church would be without the regular church fuss! It seems to me that it would be about as dreary a place as 'home without a mother.'" And as I mused upon the matter an entirely new idea struck me, and I said to myself, "How beautifully appropriate and expressive it would be to have the words, 'What is a church without a fuss?' printed in large black letters as a motto and hung up in some conspicuous place in every church in the land, where all the members could gaze upon it to their heart's content."

I fancy that when I shall shuffle off this mortal coil, if I am so happy as to sit down with old Abraham and Isaac and Jacob on yonder's golden shore, there will be two things that I shall greatly miss. One will be a good pile of political papers with which to while away the tedious hours of Sunday, and the other the good, old-fashioned church fuss! I know that I will miss these, and especially the fuss, for I always did like things that had snap and get-up in them. I have never yet seen anything for causing real life in a church that is equal to a church row. You can run a church on nothing but row for twenty-five years, and have it as live at the end of the term as when you started in. All a church needs to do this kind of work with is one or two of the kind of animals for members that wear the big, long ears. I do not like to name them out, for fear they might think I was kind of personal. You know the kind I mean. Balaam, one of the ancient worthies, owned one of them and tried to utilize it in his kind of church work, but it wouldn't go—it went back on him, simply because it was young and inexperienced in the work. It wasn't as fully developed as its more modern descendants. Evolution has been onto its job and has been getting in some of its best work since Balaam's day and generations, hence the great improvement in the kind of stock I am here so imperfectly describing.

Say—do you know that my horse, Tom, is a better Christian than a great many professors I meet? I can always count on his being sweet-tempered and kind when I go about him and want him to do any kind of work, either in the church or out of it, and if I pat him and speak kindly to him, as if I give him an extra bite of anything, he seems to fully appreciate it. But there are many church members upon whom one lavishes all his kind acts and words in vain. There is not one drop of the milk of human kindness in their coarse and unfeeling natures. They wound your sensibility every time you come in contact with them. My horse is a more agreeable companion than any of them. If they go to heaven I will try to endure them there just as I do here. But for real companionship, here or hereafter, in place of them give me my dear old horse, Tom, who always seems glad to see me and who does his very best at all times to please me. Tom will die sometime and I fancy he will stand as good a chance of going to heaven as these coarse-grained, croaking church members.

Could bear comparison in beauty bright,
With gorgeous tints that burst on mortal sight
Of one sweet flower made by Eternal Hand.
Bright emblems of embowered vales of bloom,
Pressed by the tread of countless ransomed feet,
Where comes no shadow of approaching gloom,
But welcoming smiles with gracious gladness greet,
With fadeless bloom and chaplet crowns bedecked,
Shall walk in royal robes the host elect.

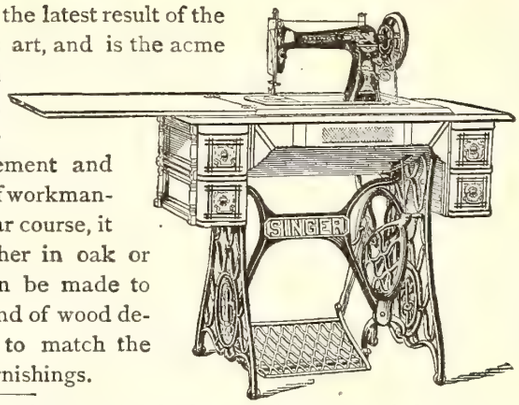
The Singer Cabinet-Table



This table is the latest result of the cabinetmaker's art, and is the acme of perfection in convenience, simple ingenuity of arrangement and thoroughness of workmanship. In regular course, it is supplied either in oak or walnut, but can be made to order in any kind of wood desired, finished to match the most ornate furnishings.

The machine is hinged, so that it can be folded down below the table against a bent-wood shield that fully protects the dress of the operator and the floor from all drippings of oil, lint, etc.

By this device the machine is thoroughly protected from dust, and the stand forms an ornamental and useful table that is fitting and appropiate to any home. The hinged extension leaf covering the machine when down is folded back when it is raised, thus making a table-top measuring 50 inches in length by 18 inches in width, affording ample room for the work.

As soon as they were left alone Mrs. Dew opened her motherly arms and took the trembling child in a fond embrace. "You are mine!" she said, her voice breaking into sobs. "I have found you at last. No wonder I have loved you so tenderly! No wonder I have been reminded of my little one; for you are mine! I believe what was written in that note. Frank Douglas is Emily Dew. Did you know what that meant? But let us hurry to the attic."

"I thought I knew," said Frank, trembling still more. "Mrs. Dew, I was awake last night when Mr. Clarmont talked with you. I found out that he is your brother, and that he took your little girl away from you. And now I believe I am that little girl."

"Yes," said Mrs. Dew, embracing her again and kissing her tenderly, "you are that little one!" They reached the attic, and Mrs. Dew drew Frank to her bed. They sat down together with their arms about each other, and the housekeeper studied the pure, sad face with glistening eyes. And strange to say, Frank was not happy. It was so different from anything she had dreamed of. Ah, where was the palace? Where was the queen-mother? She loved Mrs. Dew; but not in the way she had imagined she would love her mother.

"How strange it is!" she whispered. "Tell me about it."

"It is soon told, darling; but how long, how bitterly it has lived—this little story! Mr. Clarmont, my brother, never told his family who I was, because—well—poor brother! he was proud. He has been punished. My dear, I married when I was young and foolish. I ran away with Mr. Dew; I hadn't known him very long; he was a very handsome young man. He drank, and I knew it; yet I eloped with him. And so, my dear, I have no cause to complain. I do not complain. Ten years passed by. My little boy died. We became very poor, and we were very unhappy. I worked hard. He spent it all. Well, my darling, as I said, ten years passed by, and a little girl was born to us, and on the same day Mr. Dew died. He was shot. It was in a saloon. I was left with nothing in the world but my baby; and O, how my heart clung to her."

"And I was that little baby!" said Frank.

"No," said Mrs. Dew.

"But"—Frank faltered; her heart seemed to stand still.

"No, my dear. That baby was not born strong enough to fight its way in this world. It died."

"Then I"—faltered Frank. "Then who is my mother."

"I do not know," replied the housekeeper.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"You are not my mother?" Frank said in a voice of utter perplexity. "Then I don't understand anything. You called me your little girl. Mr. Clarmont said he took your little girl from you. And you said I was that little girl! And yet you are not my mother! And yet I am Emily Dew."

"Yes, Frank, you are really Emily Dew, but not my daughter. I will explain it. When my little girl died and my brother heard of it, and how my husband had been killed, and how I was miserably poor, he came to my relief. He had married into a very proud New York family, and on account of my wretched life he never told them he had a sister. No wonder he was ashamed of me! But after Mr. Dew was shot he sent me money and wrote saying he was coming to see me. My brother was poor when he married, and he never had success in business. His wife was what is called a 'great manager,' and she soon began to scorn his poor ability. She kept the property in her own hands, and this is why Mr. Clarmont was never able to do much for me; the money was not his and he couldn't make any. Well, just three days after my little girl died, and as I still lay prostrated with grief and bitterness—for I thought the little one would bring sunshine into my life after all—something strange happened; a baby was left on my doorstep. It is a very usual thing in large cities, especially in the winter time. This strange baby seemed to have been sent to comfort me—another might not have looked upon it in that way, but I thought I saw the hand of my Heavenly Father in the gift. So I took her to my heart and gave her my love and cared for her, and this little one was named after my dead child—Emily Dew. You were the sweetest baby, my dear, and had the brightest little smile, and such a way of curling up your toes. Well, I grew to love you just as a mother loves her only one. And so I thought of you, and spoke of you as my little one. And you were mine—mine by right of discovery, and of care, and of love. My brother didn't object at first. He saw I needed you, that I would have died without something to cling to. But at the end of nearly two years, when my heart-strings were entwined about you, my dear, he tried to persuade me to send you to an orphans' home. He had been sending me money all the time, as much as he could; and I had made more so I could live, at least. But it was a hard life. As you may well know, I wouldn't listen to his words. He promised to make me housekeeper in his wife's house, not letting her know that I was his sister, of course, if I would send you away. I laughed at him. Then came the greatest sorrow of my life. One morning I missed you from your little bed. He, my brother, had taked you from the house, and I could not learn what he had done with you; all he would tell me when I saw him two weeks later was that you would be well cared for. And all these years I have pined for my little one. I will try to forget those years. It was you who taught me to forgive my brother; it was you who led him to repentance; it was you who have made a new girl of poor Vega. See what one good life can effect! It is wonderful. So you leave this place this evening, darling; but I go with you. I have saved up enough to give us a fine start in a small town. Can you be happy with me?"

JESUS HEALING IN CAPERNAUM.*

The incidents of the present lesson occurred shortly after that of last Sunday. From Nazareth, whose people had so rudely rejected him, the Savior came to Capernaum, where he had already spent some days, after his first miracle in Cana. This city became henceforth the earthly home of the Son of Man. Capernaum lay on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee, near where it receives the waters of the Upper Jordan. Its site is generally believed to be at Tel Hum, whose ruins show that there was once an important city there. Fragments of the walls of a large synagogue are still to be seen, probably the same synagogue in which Jesus taught, which had been built for the Jews of Capernaum by the Roman centurion, as told in Luke 7:5. In Jesus' time this was a thriving place, whose commerce was of considerable importance. Its fisheries sent great shipments of fish into all parts of Syria and Phenicia, as well as to the nearer cities of the Holy Land. The Sea of Galilee, also called in the New Testament the Sea of Tiberias and the Lake of Gennesaret, is a beautiful body of water, almost pear-shaped, about thirteen miles long and six wide. It lies in a deep depression, 680 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, and is surrounded by lofty hills, from which sudden and violent storms are wont to sweep down upon its surface, making the calling of a fisherman one of frequent peril.

After a short time spent with the Master, the disciples had returned to their usual vocations, since they had not received as yet a definite call to follow him. Simon Peter and Andrew were fishermen, as were also James and John, the sons of Zebedee. The four were partners in business, Luke tells us. Jesus found them mending their nets on the brink of the lake and, finding a crowd pressing after him, to hear him discourse, he asked Simon to push out his boat a little way from the shore, that from it he might more freely speak to the people. After dismissing the multitude Jesus instructed the disciples to again cast their nets, in the deep water farther from the shore, the result being that their nets were filled to their utmost capacity, both boats being needed to carry the fish to land. Smitten with awe at this display of power, the impetuous Simon prostrated himself before the Master, confessing his unworthiness and sinful doubt. At the word of Jesus these earnest and simple-hearted men abandon their worldly occupations and go after him, who promises to make them fishers of men, giving them power to deliver the captives of sin.

The Sabbath day came in Capernaum, with its holy calm. Every pious Jew would take his way to the synagogue, to hear the law and the prophets read and to listen to a discourse by some favorite rabbi. Unusual interest would be felt in the worship of that day, for the whole city had heard of the strange rabbi who had taught by the seaside, and whose words had wonderfully drawn the people to him. The discourse of Jesus deepened the impression already made. Not so much that his doctrine was different from that which they had heard, but his manner was unlike that of any other of their teachers. The scribes were wont to appeal constantly to the injunctions of the law and the traditions of the elders. They spent the time in subtle and intricate disputes over the interpretation of certain obscure portions of their ritual or dogma. Not so with this new teacher. He appealed to none but God. He spoke out of a manifest consciousness of divine authority. "I say unto you," was his formula, and the majesty of his bearing and saneness of his words made it impossible to charge him with either arrogance or fanaticism.

But his word was quickly tested and all question of his authority set at rest. Among those who had sought the synagogue that day was one of the unfortunate creatures, who were so numerous in Palestine at that time, who were possessed by demons, or unclean spirits. Exactly what this dread affliction may have been we may not be able to determine. Some have thought it merely the popular name for insanity, due to the misconception of mental derangement held by the people of that day. There is some reason for this view, perhaps, in the fact that, in Matthew, 17th chapter, a youth is brought to Jesus with the explanation by the father that he is a lunatic (or, as in the Revised Version, an epileptic), and when he is healed it is said that Jesus rebuked the demon, and he went out of the youth. Yet, in the 4th chapter of Matthew, in the account of the Savior's wonderful ministry of healing in Galilee, the demoniacs and lunatics are separately named, as if distinct from each other. In any event, this form of affliction was very common, and attended with awful results. The victim lost all control of himself, and was likely to fall into convulsions at any time, or to become violent toward others. One fact that seems to strongly favor the theory that these demons were actual evil spirits, which had taken possession of men, is that they were always hostile to Jesus, while they feared him exceedingly. Their personality, likewise, seems to have been recognized by the Master as distinct from that of their victims.

Such an unfortunate was now present, and in the midst of Jesus' discourse rudely interrupted him with the cry, "What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God." To this cry of mingled rage and fear the Master made calm reply. He would not tolerate the testimony of the demon, for his claims should rest on the power of the truth he taught, and the works of God which had been given him to do. "Hold thy prace, and come out of him," said Jesus, and with one farewell effort, which convulsed the poor victim, the evil spirit departed, and the man stood before them healed of his dread malady. Never before had they heard a word with such power as this. It won their instant attention. And it is this power of the gospel of Christ to drive out the evil spirits of greed, lust and selfish ambition that attracts the world today to the Christ. Heathen nations are being delivered from the bondage of superstition and sensuality, the savage is being civilized, the brutish made humane and the races once naked and starving, frenzied by fear of false deities, are clothed and in their right mind.

After this display of merciful power, there could be no quiet or rest for Jesus. Returning from the synagogue to the home of Simon Peter, Jesus is told of the serious illness of the mother of Peter's wife, who was very low with the fever so prevalent in Capernaum and vicinity, due to the swampy land that lay about the delta of the Jordan. It required but a word form Jesus, as he held her fevered hand in his own, to expel the disease. The cure was complete and instantaneous, and she arose and resumed at once her household duties. Such were the cures of the Master, not like those of the "divine healer" of to-day, wrought with pain and protracted effort, and with frequent utter failure.

So soon as the sun had set and the Sabbath was past, a great throng gathered about the house where Jesus was, and the sick of the city and vicinity were carried by their friends to receive the touch of the Savior's hand, or to be healed with a mere word. And we are informed that he healed them all. He could not deny to men the mercy with which his heart was filled. Though Jesus seemed to have had perfect health himself, yet he ever sympathized with all the afflicted, something which is difficult, ordinarily, for those who have not been themselves sufferers. Matthew, seeing this tender ministry in Jesus, is reminded of the words of Isaiah, in the 53rd chapter and 4th verse, as they occur in the Hebrew Version: "Himself tôok our infirmities and bare our diseases." Truly, the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. If it is indeed more blessed to give than to receive, how happy must the Savior have been. Nor can we doubt that the deep peace which ever filled his soul was infinitely more satisfying than any joy the world could have given him. It is our privilege to share in this joy. "He drank deeply of the well at which he would have his followers be ever drinking, the bliss of doing good." There is no other way to true and lasting happiness.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 4.

HOW GOD PAYS MEN.

This was a strange employer. He goes out into the marketplace during various hours of the day; and, at last, at the eleventh hour, is still sending men into his vineyard. It was either a very pressing piece of work, or else the employer was simply eccentric. But stranger than all was his procedure when it came to paying his hands. Beginning with the last, he pays to each man a denarius, and those who had worked all day, and who, seeing the later comers receiving a denarius, had built hopes of a larger remuneration, were disappointed. All shared alike.

But the point of the parable is not that all share alike, so much as it is that the employer simply pleases to have it so. His eccentricity, his peculiarity, his disregard of all legal methods, his benevolence in rewarding men, not according to work, but according to his kindness, giving large reward for faithful though brief service—this is the spirit of the parable. It is directed against all legalism of spirit that would claim reward from God as an equivalent for services. God does not so deal with us, but chooses, rather, to reward us, not according to our deeds, but according to his kindness.

Here is Paul's great doctrine, then, which destroys all legalism, namely, the doctrine of justification through the grace of God. It is not a matter of desert, but a matter of God's bounty. To those Gentiles who at the last moment come into the vineyard of Christianity he gives justification freely. Who are the Jews that they should cavil at this free gift? If he chooses to be benevolent, has he not the right?

The parable is spoken half in rebuke at Peter's self-seeking question as to the reward the apostles should receive. God does not do things on this legalistic basis. Jesus assures Peter that the apostles should have all that they deserved, and then he turns and assures Peter that there were others not so deserving who likewise should obtain great reward, not according to deserts, but according to God's kindness.

Of what wide variation and suggestion is this parable! So often we find people carping and critical regarding others. So often they say, "He doesn't deserve anything. He ought not to enjoy what he has. He is far from getting his just deserts." And doubtless many will so cavil at the bar of judgment as they see God's kindness poured out on undeserving men.

Again, how often do people wonder, "Can I do this or that without incurring the displeasure of God?" all the while trying to find out how little service they can render to an employer so kind and generous as he is. Is this the way to treat one so bounteous?

And so all the casuistry involved in asking, "Dare I dance, drink, attend theaters, do this, do that?" is an ungrateful attitude to assume. The spirit with which we work for such a Master ought to be: "He is so kind to me, so far beyond my deserts is his goodness, that I will do my utmost to serve him. Nothing that I can sacrifice for him is too great return."

A good book for any Endeavorer to buy to throw light upon these lessons for the year, from the parables of Christ, is Alexander B. Bruce's "Parabolic Teaching of Jesus," published by Chas. Scribner's Sons.

PIONEER DISCIPLES IN THE EAST.

By F. D. Power, Director.

(The third article in a series on Pioneer Disciples.)

The work in Washington City was late in its inception. Alexander Campbell passed through the capital in 1839 on his Southern tour of that year. He complained that the sculptures and painting in the Capitol building were Roman and pagan. He declared he knew nothing more antipodal to the gospel than politics. "True, there have been a few statesmen," he declares, "who have been devoted to religion, and some to Christianity. Even Julius Cæsar was Pontifex Maximus of the Roman Empire! Wilberforce and Soame Jenyns of the English Parliament, are favorably known to the Christian community. There was one senator in the Sanhedrin that consented not to the deed of the sixty-nine that condemned Jesus. There was one Joseph at the court of Pharoah and one Daniel at that of Nebuchadnezzar, and who knows but there may be one or two Christians in the American Congress?" It is hard, he thinks, for a Christian "to please unchristian constituencies," and "the true politician rises by descending to cater for the lusts and passions of men," and "the breath of the forum is as the simoon of the desert to the life of the soul." "Still," says Mr. Campbell, "I would not say that the gospel ought not to be preached even in the District of Columbia."

Not until 1844 was any attempt made to establish the cause of primitive Christianity at the capital of the nation. A few brethren, holding these principles, met in December of that year at the home of Dr. J. T. Barclay. The records of that early period are very meagre. The first statement of a formal organization appears in 1856. Dr. Barclay served as pastor at intervals from 1844 to 1856. Early in 1851 he went as a missionary to Jerusalem. Alexander Campbell first visited the city in 1850 and was invited to address the two Houses of Congress at the Capitol, which he did on Sunday, June 2nd, speaking from John 3:17, to a house full to overflowing with the leading men of the nation, and "exhibiting the divine philanthrophy in contrast with patriotism and human friendship, reasoning in a grand and masterly manner from creation, providence, divine legislation and human redemption, and holding the audience in the most fixed attention for an hour and a half."

Mr. Campbell again visited the little congregation in May, 1856, preaching in "the basement of the recently erected Baptist meeting house." Frequent appeals were made by him in the Millennial Harbinger for money to erect a house of worship in Washington, but without result. The congregation had no settled home. There is something pathetic about their peregrinations. If the church at war with evil is the church militant, and the church at rest after its successful warfare is the church trimuphant, this was the church itinerant. First, it is the Church of Christ in the house of Dr. Barclay; then the church which is in Mr. Campbell's house; then it is in the Medical College and then in Temperance Hall; then meeting in the Corcoran Library; now worshiping in the City Hall and now at Metzarot's Hall; to-day at Old Trinity and to-morrow at Shiloh meeting-house; back again to Mr. Campbell's and then at the City Hall, until finally it pitched its tent on M Street, 1869, where it owned its first meeting house. But even here it does not find rest. Its nomadic life continues. Soon the little chapel is on wheels, journeying to Vermont Avenue, where the new house of worship was erected in 1884. Surely, these were pilgrims and sojourners. Literally they were going into all the city and preaching the gospel to every creature.

An incident of this early time will indicate the disadvantages under which these good people labored. While the church was meeting in Temperance Hall, Judge J. S. Black, of Pennsylvania, Attorney-General under Pres. Buchanan from 1857 to 1861, and Mrs. Mary Black, his wife, associated themselves with the little congregation. Judge Black's driver, Peter, was an original character. Sensitive for the honor of the family, and more for his carriage, he felt it so nothing of a disgrace to stand before such a building on Sunday. One day he touched upon the subject as gently as he could by saying: "Mrs. Black, that ain't a very fine church you and the Judge go to." "No, Peter," said the lady, "it is not a very grand one." "Mrs. Black, do you 'spect to 'tend that church every Sunday?" "Yes, Peter, until they get a better one." "Well, Mrs. Black, I wants to ax you somethin', though I don't like much to say it, marm." What is it, Peter?" "Well, marm, I wants to tell you the drivers of the other members of the Cabinet kinder make fun o' me 'bout standin' 'fore dat meetin' house, and I want to ax you if you hadn't no objection, to let me drive to dat fine Presbyterian Church where the other big men go, and stand thar wid my carriage until meetin' is out and then drive back for you and de Judge." "All right, Peter, if you will be on time," said Mrs. Black, and Peter satisfied his mind that he saved the credit of the family and of his horses and carriage afterward by standing regularly with the fine turnouts of the other Cabinet ministers!

The obscurity of the little meeting-place, it is fair to say, never influenced such noble minds as Judge Black and President Garfield. The church has known the glory of a fellowship that has embraced all conditions of society from the Chief Magistrate of the Republic to the humblest laborer.

John O'Kane, D. P. Henderson and Henry T. Anderson are among the pioneer names that are remembered gratefully in Washington. The last-named fell asleep at the capital, Sept. 19, 1872. He served the church one year as pastor, and it was during his pastorate the movement to build a church took form, which resulted in the purchase of the little frame chapel where I began my work for the congregation twenty-four years ago. Washington has its pioneer history. It is not simply the preachers that are honored in the records of these early struggles. Such gracious spirits as Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Summy, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Tingle and Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hazard are never to be forgotten. They were our heroes. They bore the heat and burden of the day. With a loyalty and faithfulness that are worthy of all praise, they assembled themselves together every Lord's day and "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers." They sowed the seed whose rich harvest we reap and rejoice in to-day. May we be worthy of such an inheritance. May the spirit of the fathers rest upon their children. May the sacred principles for which they gave their great services conquer the world.

Literature.

In "The Science and Pedagogy of Ethics"* is given the result of Dean H. W. Everest's "life-long devotion to the study and teaching of moral science and religion." It is written in the author's well-known systematic and comprehensive style, reflecting the spirit and method of a careful student. In the first section, treating of Theoretical Ethics, the questions of conscience, moral freedom, obligation, purposes and ideals are discussed. These and immediately related problems are the most fundamental in ethics, and in such works as those of MacKenzie, Muirhead and D'Arcy receive almost exclusive consideration. Dean Everest's clear, concise definitions are especially helpful in expressing his meaning here. "Conscience is the judgment pronouncing on questions of right and wrong, together with the feelings consequent on these judgments." Upon that view, therefore, conscience is not a special faculty, as was once thought, but is simply intelligent judgment directed to questions of conduct, together with the accompanying feelings. All men judge that there is right and that it ought to be performed, but they differ most widely as to what is right. The discussion of will and moral freedom would not be so generally received. The tendency to-day is rather to identify the will with the self, and to solve the question of free will in terms of self-determination. The treatment of Practical Ethics consists of an enumeration of the duties men owe to inanimate nature and animals, to self and to fellowmen, to the home, the state and to God. The third part, devoted to Ethical Pedagogy, is the most original feature of the treatise. It seeks to answer the question, "How shall morals best be taught in the home, in the school and in the church?" The presentation of these topics is calculated to interest and aid parents, public school-teachers and ministers. It reflects the modern development of child-study and rightly magnifies the importance of training the young by the threefold agency of the home, school and church. The book lacks in references to the numerous recent publications in the same lines. It is well indexed. Several diagrams are used to illustrate difficult points. The type, binding and general appearance of the book speak well for the work of the Christian Publishing Company. E. S. A.

We are in receipt of a document headed "An Appeal," signed by Rev. George F. Seymour, Theodore Cuyler, Josiah Strong, A. H. Strong, Bishop Vincent and D. S. MacArthur, warning the public against an unauthorized and piratical reprint of the Expositors' Bible which is about to be issued in this country. Unfortunately, international copyright law is not yet sufficiently developed to give the proprietors of a literary work a legally defensible right on both sides of the Atlantic, and it is still necessary to depend in the main on the public conscience to refuse patronage to such pirating publishers. Ministers need many books and have usually little enough money to buy them with, but they do not need books badly enough to justify them in buying unauthorized reprints. It would speak well for the conscience of the American ministry if this and all similar undertakings should prove financial failures. The original publishers of the Expositors' Bible are A. C. Armstrong & Son, and the only authorized reprint is that by Funk & Wagnalls.

"To Have and to Hold," the novel dealing with early colonial days in the settlement at Jamestown, which has been running through the Atlantic Monthly has been issued in book form by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The publishers say that nothing since "The Autocrat at the Breakfast Table" has given such an impetus to the circulation of the magazine as has this serial by Miss Johnstone. So far as we can observe, it has no other points of likeness to the Autocrat, except that it is a thoroughly worthy piece of literary workmanship. Further than that it is a stirring story and exhibits careful and conscientious attention to the historical setting.

It is but natural that the market should be flooded with the lives of D. L. Moody. Half a dozen publishers that we know of have announced "the only authentic and authorized biography," and we have not been making any special search for them. These books will naturally have various degrees of merit. There are a great many people who know a good deal about Moody and will be able to write highly interesting and profitable books about him, whether they are "authorized" or not. It may, however, be worth while to know that the only biography which will be sanctioned by the family and enriched by the letters and papers in their possession, will be that written by his son, W. R. Moody, and published by the Revell Company.

It was not a lover of books who made the remark that "country people read books, while city people read only about books." If this aphorism were true—which it is not, except in a very limited measure—it would leave the advantages about equally balanced. Certainly, the great masterpieces of literature it is much better to read than to read about. Shakespeare is greater than all his commentators, and when I read Lowell on Dante it is because Lowell wrote, not merely literary criticism, but literature. To touch these mighty men of letters at firsthand is to come into strengthening contact with the elemental forces of nature, and no interpretor is so good as none at all. But there are other books—good books, too—which it is so much better to read about than to read. It is physically impossible for one to read all of the books which he ought to know something about, and it is mentally impossible to know which books to read unless one reads about a great many more books than he reads. The fact is that the literary table is very much overcrowded, and a little judicious reading about books is like a glance over the menu card; no substitute for eating, but it saves you from the dilemma of having to try to eat everything for fear of missing the thing which you most want. We learned the other day that the Bookman which is one of the best magazines about books, now has a circulation of 25,000. Glad to know it. It deserves them.

As spring comes on—it happens to be snowing to-day, but the days are lengthening perceptibly—a good many thousand people who think that they love Nature will become sensible of the fact that they do not love her very intelligently. For the benefit of such, or for that still smaller class who desire to supplement their general admiration for nature with a little specific knowledge of her workings, there are two books by Mrs. Ellis Rowan and Miss Alice Lounsberry. "A Guide to the Wild Flowers" has already won approbation. During the present month Frederick A. Stokes & Co. will issue a companion volume, "A Guide to the Trees."

It is announced by the publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co., that Tolstoi's new novel entitled "Resurrection," which he is now finishing, will be issued during the summer. It is said to contain an arraignment of European morals more terrible and sweeping even than any of the author's previous works. According to his method, that will mean that it is to present a set of characters whose morality is of a highly irregular type.

Professor H. T. Peck has maintained in a recent article that the decade which is just closing has been, from the literary standpoint, the most barren and unfruitful of the century. To use his own expression, literature is "marking time." This may or may not be so; we are not quite sure about it. That question is of course entirely apart from the question of the number of books written and the number of copies circulated. If the present decade has produced few books of lasting value, it can at least claim the distinction of having circulated the books which it has produced to an extent hitherto unknown. The quick and enormous sales of some of the popular novels is enough to take one's breath away. Of "David Harum" 400,000 copies were sold in a little over a year; "Richard Carvel" reached 310,000 in six months; and within three months from the date of publication 200,000 copies of "Janice Meredith" had been sold. The "marking time" business may not produce abiding monuments of literature, but it is profitable for somebody. But then, marking time always does raise about as much dust as marching.

"Three Men on a Bicycle" is the title of a new book by Jerome K. Jerome, which will be issued soon. Mr. Jerome, like Mr. Bangs, writes some diverting things, but his besetting sin is that when he gets hold of a good idea he is in danger of working it just a trifle too long. The House-Boat on the Styx was a real inspiration, but its second cruise became slightly monotonous. The Cheerful Idiot, too, was excellent company for awhile, but most of the readers wearied of his society before the author did. It is, therefore, with some misgivings that we learn that the new book is, as its name suggests, "in the vein of Three Men in a Boat." Still, a bicycle is very different from a boat and we will hope that the men are different.

To say that Prof. Fairhurst's "Good Poems"† reach the highest standard of poetic art would be untrue. There is a noticeable deficiency in poetic rhythm and rhyme in many of them. But, in spite of this fact, the poems have decided merit. Many of them evince that poetic insight into nature and natural things which is an essential element of a poet. There is also evinced a love of nature and of the manifold forms of life, together with the power of scientific observation, which in a measure atone for the lack of that art which is in part a hereditary gift, and in part the result of practice and pains. Some of the longer poems, as "Life's Battle," grapple with the profound problems of life. Some are humorous, some are philosophic, some of them lie in the realm of pure fancy, but all of them are penetrated by a spirit of deep reverence and faith. The marvel is, not that the author of "Organic Evolution" has not written better poetry, but that he has written a volume of poems that contains as much merit as this one possesses. Authors of scientific works are not generally visited by the divine afflatus.

CORD.

Another old veteran of the cross fell asleep at his home in Warrensburg, Mo., Feb. 3, 1900—H. C. Cord, aged 79 years. He was born in Fleming County, Ky., and obeyed the gospel in his young manhood; was married to Zerilda Shryack, of same county, in 1839. They lived and loved as husband and wife for 61 years. The wife with four sons and four daughters, all Christian men and women, yet live to cherish the memory of a Christian husband and father. Bro. Cord was a faithful worker and trusted official in the church wherever he lived. Truly, a noble man has been called to his reward. We drop a tear for a faithful friend, relative and brother. Good-by till we meet in the better land. M. SHRYACK.

DAVIS.

Elizabeth Davis, aged 73 years, departed this life January 15, 1900. She came here from New York to spend her remaining days with her children. She died in the triumphant faith of the righteous. The writer preached the funeral sermon and gave as best he could comfort to the bereaved hearts.

JOHNSTON.

Elizabeth Jane Johnson was born in Henry County, Ky., November 26, 1823. She was united in marriage to Younger Johnston, February 10, 1842. She was baptized when 19 years of age, and from that day to the day of her death she was a devoted and consistent Christian. Sister Johnston was the mother of seven children, three of whom, with their father, are dead. The father fell asleep March 4, 1868. Sister Johnston was a patient sufferer and was prepared to meet her Master. She went to her reward on the evening of February 2, at 8 o'clock, 1900. The funeral services was conducted by the writer on Sunday morning, February 4, 1900, in the Christian Church of this city. The large number of sympathizing friends present testified as to the esteem in which this Christian mother was held by all who knew her. May the God of all comfort console her sorrowing children. Publisher's Paragraphs.

The fourth edition of the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1900 is now ready. This work, by W. W. Dowling, has had a much larger sale this year than ever before, despite certain unselfish and disinterested attempts which were made to cast suspicion upon it, and to bring the other Sunday school publications of the Christian Publishing Company into disrepute for heterodoxy. As is mentioned elsewhere in this issue, we recently received an order for one thousand copies of this work. Most of our live, progressive Sunday-school workers have already supplied themselves with a copy of the Commentary, and those who have so far neglected it should attend to the matter at once. Price, $1.00.

The reduction in price of the splendid Map of the Travels of Jesus has been well received by our Sunday-schools. Orders are coming thick and fast. Teachers and superintendents realize that they cannot properly give instruction to children on the Life of Christ without this map. Three dollars is a very low price for this map. The price has always been five dollars, but, as we have before explained, we secured a lot at a special low price and so are enabled to sell them at what is about the usual wholesale price.

On page 2 will be found the titles and prices of a few of the many tracts and pamphlets of the Disciples of Christ, which the Christian Publishing Company owns and sells. If you do not see what you want in this list, drop us a postal card, and let us send you—free—a complete catalogue of tracts and pamphlets, as well as books, church, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor supplies, etc. You should have a copy of this catalogue where it will be handy for reference.

Let our readers remember that the Christian Publishing Company deals in everything in the way of church supplies. We can give lowest prices on baptismal pants, communion sets, communion wine, hymn books, Bibles, contribution envelopes, blackboards, church record books, etc., etc. And we handle all supplies for the Christian Endeavor Society and the Sunday-school. We have a splendid assortment of Easter cards this year. We have at all times a superior line of picture and text cards for the little ones of the Sunday-school. We have maps of all kinds, all sizes, all prices.

FIRST CHURCH, ALLEGHENY, PA.

Our meeting is all that the most enthusiastic of us us could wish. The audiences have been great from the first. We have occupied our auditorium constantly. There have been 30 additions up to date. Twenty-one of these came yesterday. Bro. Scoville's work is a great blessing to us all. He came to us highly recommended, and our expectations have been fully met, if not surpassed. We are delighted with him, and we feel that our meetings have only begun. At the morning service yesterday (January 14) the pastor made the following statements respecting the work of the past year: The total amount raised by the church was $6,032.18; Sunday-school, $1,216.15; C. W. B. M. auxiliary, $374.00; C. E. Society, $224.13; Junior C. E., $75.00; Ladies' Aid Society, $138.63; King Mission Band, $49.00; subscriptions to Bellevue Church, $1,400; returned loans from Fellowship Fund, $76.00; grand total, $9,585.09. The pastor believes that in addition to this, offerings and gifts have been made by our members which, had they passed through our treasury, would bring the total close to $10.000. Our gifts to various missionary societies and benevolences, including the subscriptions to the Bellevue Church, have reached $4,000 lacking $1.84. As stated above, the pastor knows of offerings which did not pass through any of our treasuries that make the amount virtually much above $4,000. Too much cannot be said in praise of Mr. Fillmore's care of the church moneys. His perfect system begins to be appreciated so much that he has received several very kindly letters from contributors. During the present pastor's whole time with the church there have been 160 baptisms and 111 added otherwise. During 1898 and 1899 there were added 222. During 1899, 72. We believe we are now reaping another harvest. The pasto estimates his calls during the past year at not less than 1,800. He wrote the book, "Heroes o Modern Missions," and prepared above 60 articles for publicaton. He attended 30 funerals, at nearly all of which Mr. and Mrs. Fillmore assisted in the service of song. We have lost during the year several of our aged and beloved members whose names are here once more enrolled, though they have been spoken of at length in these columns: Mrs. Harriet Macklin, Mrs. Rachel Shriver Mrs. Margaret Ross, Mrs. Nancy Acton, Mrs. A. J Watters, Mrs. Nancy Lighthill, James Patterson and Fredolin Hertzog.

Good alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Just one month more in which to take advantage of our remarkably low club offer. If any church fails to realize that the rate of one dollar on clubs of twenty-five subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a great opportunity, we would like to know what it would take to move that church.

Please remember that we are offering you, not a dollar paper (our regular rate remains one dollar and fifty cents except in clubs), but one that is wonderfully cheap at its regular price of one dollar and fifty cents. "Prove all things;" examine the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST carefully and critically, then compare it with the first-class denominational journals of two dollars, and two dollars and fifty cents, and decide for yourself as to the accuracy of our statement.

We repeat that old as well as new subscribers may be included in your club. What we ask is that the church interest itself in the matter, appoint some one to form the club and thus relieve us of expense and labor in soliciting subscriptions and dealing with individual subscribers. But don't forget that this offer lasts througb March only.

OUR OFFER OF THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST IN CLUBS OF TWENTY-FIVE AT THE RATE OF ONE DOLLAR EXPIRES WITH MARCH 31ST.

There are churches of considerable numerical strength which are too ready to say "we cannot raise a club of twenty-five subscribers" for a first-class paper at about half price. What is the matter with them?

Listen! Valley Junction, Ia., is a small church, composed very largely of railway emplyes. Its total membership is seventy-three. Forty-one families are represented in this membership, although nineteen of these families have only one member each in the congregation. They have formed a club of twenty-five subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and there are, perhaps, a half dozen copies of other papers taken by members of the congregation. And yet churches of twice and even thrice the membership are content to fail in this simple yet important matter.

What's the matter? We need a revival among the church members, that's all.

So you cannot raise a club of twenty-five in your congregation? Well, perhaps it is not your fault. But you can write to us, if you are interested, and tell us just what you can do. We are ready and willing to help if a proper amount of interest is shown. Don't expect us to do it all. If we offer the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for a limited time for less than it costs us to publish it you need not expect us to virtually compel your church to subscribe for it. We offer the opportunity; you must avail yourself of it.

Kearney, Mo, Girard, Ill., Nortonville, Kan., Clarksville, Mo., and Jacksonville, Ill., all send us clubs this week; our list at the last-mentioned place now numbers sixty-five. Cedar Rapids, Ia., adds seventeen to their list. This church during last year had the distinction of having the largest list of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the state of Iowa outside the city of Des Moines.

The rapid increase of our list in other Iowa cities this year renders their holding this position somewhat doubtful, but they have not signified their intention of surrendering.

Just another word concerning our club rate. It expires March 31st. There is yet plenty of time to form a club in your congregation if you go at it now. We urge you to do this because we know the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST in your midst will be a great help to your work. We are giving you every chance to avail yourself of this special opportunity. If you fail to realize the situation, y are surely at fault.

And to those who prefer to deal directly wit us on the regular individual subscription basi may we not say, please forward this year's su scription promptly and send your neighbor's su scription with yours, if possible. Don't wait f us to remind you directly, but save us that ite of labor and expense.

"Bells of Easter-Tide."

A Beautiful, New Concert Service for Easter Sunday.

It is now only a short time until Easter Sunday. It is time to pr pare for any special service which your Sunday-school will have upo that occasion. Do not wait until the last moment, but begin in tim Easter Day should be made beautiful with music and flowers.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" is a concert service, i cluding music, recit tions and appropriate selections from the Scriptures. The songs a by W.J.King and W.E.M.Hackleman. The poems and recitations a the work of Birdie Bell, E. E. Hewitt and Jennie Wilson. Both t authors and composers have done their work excellently.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" makes a pamphlet sixteen pages, with handsomely designed Easter cover. The price for single copy is fi cents; per dozen; fifty cents, postpaid. Send the publishers five cen at once for a sample copy.

Once again, let us warn all our Sunday-school friends that the tim is short. Easter Sunday comes on April 15, or in about six week from the present time. Not a day should be lost. "Bells of Easte Tide" is not a difficult exercise, but time and careful preparation a required to satisfactorily present the simplest service.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The surrender of Gen. Cronje with about 5,000 men at Paardeburg early Tuesday morning is the most decisive event of the war up to the present time. The events leading up to it showed two things: first, the effective strategy of Gen. Roberts, and second, the splendid heroism of the Boers in holding out so long against overwhelming odds. The retreat of the Boers toward Bloemfontein after the fall of Kimberley became partly a race to see which could be the first to reach the Free State capital, and partly an attempt on the part of Gen. Cronje to detain the British on the road long enough to permit the throwing up of fortifications to protect Bloemfontein. The most important point on the route was Paardeburg on the Modder River. In the race for this point, Gen. MacDonald outstripped the Boers but, being unable to hold it alone, at once took a position to the east, between Paardeburg and Bloemfontein. Gen. Cronje, with his 5,000 men, occupied Paardeburg. Gen. Kelly-Kenny seized Koodoo's Rand Drift to the northwest and Gen. Roberts completed the circuit by coming in on the south. Gen. Cronje's position was a strong one for defense, lying in the river valley and protected by the precipitous banks of the stream. The British bombardment produced little effect and, after the first day or two, was continued only in a desultory manner, while preparations were being made by sappers for an assault. The Boer reinforcements under Gen. DeWet, a few miles to the southeast, made repeated but unsuccessful attempts to break through Gen. Roberts's lines. After lying in this hopeless position for about a week Gen. Cronje surrendered unconditionally early in the morning of Feb. 27, the nineteenth anniversary of the battle of Majuba Hill. It was the only course which a sensible man could pursue. He and his forces had already given sufficient proof of their bravery and their gallant resistence had won the admiration of the world. It is not the business of the victorious general, when he has secured an advantage, to throw it away to avoid causing the enemy loss of life. If that prospective loss of life is enough to cause the civilized world to shudder and cry out, as Boer sympathizers have been pointing out, it ought to be enough to make the weaker force surrender. Gen. Cronje wisely saw that it was his business to prevent unnecessary loss of life and that it would be his fault if it was not prevented, and he took the only sensible means to prevent it. Meanwhile, it is reported that a force is gathering farther east in the vicinity of Bloemfontein to contest the way to the capital. Gen. Buller has doggedly continued his advance toward Ladysmith, fighting his way inch by inch. He is now only six miles from Ladysmith and two miles from Cæsar's Camp, Gen. White's farthest outpost.

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which formally removed the last obstacle to the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, was at first received with enthusiasm, because it effectually disposed of the troublesome Clayton-Bulwer treaty. On second thought, much of this enthusiasm died out when it was realized that the agreement to allow the United States the exclusive ownership and control of the canal had been secured only at the price of conceding that it should not be fortified and should be absolutely neutral in time of war. For a time there seemed to be a prospect of serious opposition to this arrangement, but public opinion is swinging back again in favor of the treaty, as further consideration leads most thinkers to the conclusion that neutrality of the canal would not be a disadvantage to us. Admiral Dewey expressed the opinion of many men when he said that we had no advantage to gain, either commercial, military or naval, by fortifying the canal. Fortifications would be expensive to build and to maintain, and in time of war they would give us no service which could not be rendered equally well by the use of a fleet blockading the entrances of the canal. The neutralization of the canal, while it reduces to a minimum the political consequences of its construction, does not by any means destroy them. Mr. Bryce, in comparing this enterprise with the Suez Canal, which was constructed by British capital as a neutral waterway, points out the fact that in that case the most unexpected and unforeseeable political consequences ensued, and he reasons from that that there will be in this case political results which it is at present impossible to prophesy. England's domination of Egypt and her whole East African policy are the direct result of her interest in the Suez Canal, and it is not improbable, according to Mr. Bryce, that the construction and control of the Nicaragua Canal may lead us into a similar relation with the Central American republics. This may or may not be probable, and it may or may not be desirable. At any rate, it is a very remote result. The immediate motive for the construction of the canal is its commercial value, and in our opinion this motive is quite sufficient.

The attempt on the part of the anti-administration press to show that there is something very dark, dangerous and mysterious back of the Macrum case is becoming pitiful in its futility. It will be remembered that Mr. Macrum, on his return to this country, announced through the press (not to the department) that his official dispatches had been delayed and his mail opened by British censors, that he had notified the department of these indignities and that no attention had been paid to his protests. As requested by a resolution of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State has forwarded to Congress information on this topic. After reciting the fact of a temporary delay of mail in last November, the protest against it and the satisfactory arrangement which was at once made for the prompt delivery of consular mails, the Secretary says: "No obstacle, therefore, is here known to have existed since them to Mr. Macrum's unhampered correspondence with the Department of State. At no time while at his post did Mr. Macrum report to the department any violation by opening or otherwise of his official mail by the British censor at Durban, or by any person or persons whatsoever, there or elsewhere. Neither has he so reported since he left Pretoria, although having the amplest opportunity to do so by mail while on the way home, and in person when he reported to the department on his return." There is certainly no evasion about this answer. It categorically denies what Mr. Macrum asserts, that the department deliberately ignored the known fact that consular mails were being tampered with by British censors. On this assertion Mr. Macrum bases his belief in a secret alliance with Great Britain. On this point, too, Secretary Hay makes a definite statement: "There is no truth in the charge that a secret alliance existed between the United States and Great Britain. No form of secret alliance is possible under the Constitution of the United States, inasmuch as treaties require the advice and consent of the Senate. And, finally, no secret alliance, convention, arrangement or understanding exists between the United States and any other nation." One is, of course, at liberty to believe that the Secretary of State has deliberately and officially lied. Short of this, we see no way of sustaining Mr. Macrum's allegations. For ourselves we are not willing to believe this of Mr. Hay without more substantial proof than the insinuations of his political opponents. The two official envelopes which Mr. Macrum has been exhibiting, which have been opened and sealed with the "V. R." of the British censor, do not bear upon the case. The question is not whether or not consular mail was opened, but whether or not the department ignored information to that effect. If the envelopes prove that mail was opened, and the records show that the department was not informed of this fact, Mr. Macrum might reasonably be called on to explain why he did not report it. Investigation of the facts has also shown that Mr. Macrum was never refused audience by either the President or the Secretary of State. Meanwhile, he has not yet divulged the reasons which made it necessary to return home.

The debate on the bill establishing civil government for Porto Rico has developed a good deal of opposition to the proposition to levy a tax on commerce between that island and the United States. The bill as presented by the committee proposes a tariff equal to 25 per cent. of that imposed by the Dingley law on imports into the United States. The Democratic opposition to this arrangement has been based chiefly on the constitutional question involved in the proposition to establish a duty on commerce between the United States and territory belonging to the United States. The opposition within Republican ranks, which has been very considerable in amount and importance, has turned chiefly on the question of expediency. The vote on the bill will be taken in the House of Representatives on Wednesday afternoon of this week. A series of Republican caucuses have been held to try to secure agreement with the party. Several compromises have been suggested: to reduce the duty from 25 to 10 per cent.; to put a time limit of two years or more to the operation of the tariff, with or without the reduction of the rate; to pass the bill as it stands, but with the added proviso, that this shall not be considered a precedent for the Government of Hawaii or the Philippines; to remove the duty entirely with the proviso that this shall not constitute a precedent. It is reported that at the last Republican caucus held Monday night it was agreed to reduce the rate to 15 per cent. and limit the act to two years. It is believed that this will command almost the entire Republican vote. The President favors free trade with Porto Rico, but does not consider this act unconstitutional and has said that he will sign the bill in any form in which Congress passes it.

The conference committee of the Senate and the House has finished its work on the currency bill and has agreed upon a measure which differs in many particulars from either of the original measures. The text of the first section of the bill expresses the gist of it: "That the dollar, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, shall be the unit of value, and all money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity." Provision is made for the maintenance of the gold reserve of $150,000,000 as a special fund which may not be drawn upon to meet deficiencies of the revenue. The clause authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury in a general way to maintain the parity of all currency with the gold standard was substituted for the provision in the House bill, which authorized him to exchange gold for silver if necessary to maintain the parity of the metals. The committee retained the amendment to the Senate bill which declared that "the provisions of this act are not intended to preclude the accomplishment of international bimetallism whenever conditions shall make it expedient and practicable to secure the same by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world, and at a ratio which shall insure permanency of relative value between gold and silver."

The Democratic National Committee has decided upon Kansas City as the place for the presidential nominating convention. One of the chief inducements which Kansas City offered was the possession of an auditorium for which a seating capacity of 25,000 is claimed, and which Mr. Bryan is said to have pronounced the finest auditorium in America as regards acoustic properties. The Republican national convention will be held in Philadelphia, beginning June 29. The Populists will meet at Sioux Falls, S. D. Of these three parties, only the Republican has a platform already determined in all its essential features. Some of the negative elements of the other platforms may be predicted with certainty, but the positive elements are yet to be decided. In other words, it is easy to tell what they will denounce, but not so easy to predict what they will advocate, much less to predict which of the issues will occupy the foreground during the campaign.

The recent order of the French courts suppressing the Order of the Assumptionists, on the ground that it is an unlicensed association with more than twenty members and therefore illegal, appears to be only the beginning of a campaign conducted by the government against royalist propaganda masquerading in the garb of religion. The Order of the Sacred Heart and the Jesuit Order have now been attacked on the same ground. Both of these orders have long been conspicuous for their educational work, the former for its schools for women, the latter for its schools for men. It is a matter of common knowledge that the schools of both orders have long been hotbeds of royalist teaching and centers of agitation whenever there has been talk of setting up the French monarchy again. It is one of the recognized characteristics of the Jesuit order that it shall take a hand in the politics of every country in which it has representatives. It was this taste for politics, with an especial predilection for conspiracy against established forms of government, which in the eighteenth century compelled even the most Catholic countries in Europe —Spain, Italy, France, Austria—to drive all Jesuits from their borders, and finally moved the Pope to disband the order to prevent further loss of prestige by the Catholic Church. The order has gradually crept back into all these countries and has again secured the papal sanction, but it has not lost its liking for political intrigue. The recent offense in France is implication in royalist conspiracies, but it may be easier to proceed against the Jesuits, as against the Assumptionists, under the law which makes it a criminal offense to belong to an unlicensed organization of more than twenty members.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

VI. STEPS CHRISTWARD: CONVERSION.

Conversion, in its New Testament sense, is the act of turning to the Lord. The word has been so abused in theological discussion that it would be better, perhaps, to use the word "turn" or "turning," instead of "convert" or "conversion." The necessity for turning to the Lord, in mind and heart and outward act, grows out of the fact of the universal prevalence of sin in the world. The Bible idea is that a man who is sinning is going in the wrong direction; he is following a path that leads to certain destruction. The object of the gospel is to turn him about and make him face and walk in the opposite direction. The moral act of turning is perhaps best understood by its analogy to the physical act of turning. One ceases to travel in any given direction the moment he understands that he is in the wrong way to reach the destination he is seeking. He not only ceases to go further in that direction but, as the result of his enlightenment and consequent change of mind, he turns about and goes in the other direction. This is just what takes place in the sinner in conversion except, of course, that the motives are deeper and the change is moral and spiritual, as well as intellectual. Sin is a mistake, a blunder, a missing of the mark, as the Greek word means. But it is more than this, as we have seen. It has its roots in a depraved nature—a wrong bias, a perverted taste, a false ideal, a weakened will, an impure and hardened heart. It is not, therefore, simply, conceived of as a series of individual acts, with which the gospel has to deal but with a sinful condition, a more or less perverted nature. This is a more difficult problem and requires both divine wisdom and power for its solution.

This condition can only be met by the faithful preaching of the gospel, which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." What these great gospel facts and truths are we have already stated in these articles. In a previous article we stated also the immediate effect of this preaching in producing a condition of spiritual unrest and of hungering and thirsting after righteousness, followed by the breaking away from those transgressions of the moral law which are obvious and clear. But the honest soul does not rest there. This is only the prophecy of better things. The soul is in quest of that which will satisfy it. It finds that the mere abstinence from evil practices will not suffice. In this attitude it hears the gospel with an appreciative mind and an understanding heart. Jesus Christ is seen to be the soul's supreme need. He alone can meet the deepest longings of the heart and satisfy the demands of an awakened conscience. He learns that through Him is offered forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, i. e., the blotting out of past misdeeds and the indwelling power of an endless life. He sees in Christ an ideal than which there is none higher to be conceived of. He sees in Him a Friend who has laid down His life in his behalf and who has risen again for our justification. He sees in His sinless life, in His divine teaching, in His wonderful works, evidence adequate and overpowering of His divine character and mission. Seeing all this with the eyes of his soul, he receives it into his heart as truth. This is faith. No sooner does he receive this great faith into his heart than he resolves to be His disciple and to live the new life which he requires. This is repentance. These two psychical experiences are so closely allied that it is difficult to determine their order in time, but, psychologically, it is the conviction of the truth concerning Christ, called faith, which produces the resolution to forsake sin and follow Him, which is called repentance.

The inward change, brought about by these internal experiences, demands outward manifestation and finds its opportunity in the divine requirement for an open confession of Christ and a surrender to Him in the ordinance of baptism. This the believing penitent does, willingly, joyfully, and takes his side with believers and with Christ. This entire process is conversion. Conversion is sometimes used in a narrower sense, including only the internal change, frequently spoken of as the "change of heart," but it seems more in accordance with New Testament usage to include in it the confession of Christ in baptism, by which the believer declares to the world his allegiance to Christ, and his purpose to live the new life. It may be admitted, of course, and should, indeed, be insisted upon continually, lest men forget it, that the yielding up of the heart and the will to Christ, and the mental resolve to follow Him, is the pre-eminent part of conversion, without which all else is vain. It is the spiritual illumination, the awakening of the conscience, the turning of the soul Christward for life and for salvation which, in the sight of God, is of great price. There is no danger of our laying too much emphasis upon this side of conversion. For lack of sufficient emphasis here, many nominal converts have gone back into the world and are satisfied to live the old life of sin It is easy, however, for people of a certain temperament to underestimate the value of the open confession of Christ, both with the mouth and in the act of baptism, as it is also easy for another class of a different temperament to lay undue emphasis upon that which is outward and formal. What relation, then, it may be asked, does baptism sustain to the process of conversion?

Baptism is putting into a solemn, symbolic act the soul's new faith and purpose. It is entering into covenant with Jesus Christ to be His for time and eternity. It is taking the oath of allegiance to the new Commander. It is crossing the Rubicon that flows between the church and the world, and committing one's self irrevocably to the leadership of Christ. It is entering into new and sublime relationships, solemnly and formally, with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, into whose names we are baptized. It is translating faith into obedience, or, it may be said, it is faith yielding to a divine command at the threshold of the new life. It is the act by which we assure ourselves of the strength of our faith and of our purpose, and by which God assures us of our acceptance and forgiveness. Many of the high-caste natives of India, we are told, come to the point of acknowledging Christ as divine, and His religion as the true religion, but hesitate at the command of baptism, feeling instinctively that, in submitting to that act, they, so to speak, "burn the bridges behind them," and identify themselves permanently with the Christian faith and the Christian church. They do not forfeit their caste privileges and honors until this step is taken. This is precisely the relation which baptism sustained to the Christian life in the apostolic age. In this light it seems to be presented to us in the New Testament. It is, then, the consummation of that turning to the Lord which has its beginning in the soul's dissatisfaction with sin and its hunger for righteousness, and its culmination in an open surrender to Jesus Christ, who is "the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believeth."

Conversion, then, or turning to the Lord, is of course, man's act. He it is who is to do the turning. He must resolve to turn and then actually turn about in his life and follow Christ. But while it is a human act, it is an act performed under a divine influence. Behind it lie the mighty motives of the gospel. Preceding it and sustaining the relation to it of cause to effect, is the gospel of the grace of God, through which Christ's tender voice is heard, pleading with the sinner to turn and live. Turning to God is the result, in human action, of a divine call, appealing to the noblest and divinest part of human nature. It is, then, a human act divinely caused, but in such a way as to leave human volition free and unforced.

What a change, then, conversion is! It is, indeed, turning "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." It is turning about from the downward way, and facing the heights of holiness and everlasting life. It is the soul's response to the divine call in the gospel of God's grace. To effect it, Jesus Christ came into the world, and died for sinful men. The soul's destiny is in it. The most meaningful act of human life is that of turning to the Lord and committing one's self, for all the ages to come, to His leadership. For this purpose the gospel is preached among the nations, and when all men are converted, or turned to the Lord, and have incorporated his teaching in the social and corporate life of mankind, there will be "a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Hour of Prayer.

INTERCESSORY PRAYER.

(1 Tim. 2:1-4; John 17:15, 20, 21; Eph 6: 18-20.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayar-meeting Topic, March 7.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: It is alike our privilege, and our duty, to pray for others as well as for ourselves, and intercession is but carrying into prayer the same spirit of unselfishness which applies in every other department of Christian life.

Prayer must be reckoned among the supreme privileges of Christian life. It is as normal and natural an act for the spiritual man as breathing is to the physical man. It is an act that grows naturally out of our relationship to God. He is our Father and we are his dependent children. Because He is an infinitely wise Father, He does not give us all that we ask for, but He gives us all that is good for us. What he can give us safely depends on our capacity to receive and to use. These are some of the general principles that must guide us in our praying, both for ourselves and for others.

There is danger, however, that even our prayers may become selfish. Unless we are on our guard, our prayers are likely to run within a very narrow range. Although they may not assume the familiar formula, "Bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife; us four and no more," they nevertheless frequently fail to get out of these limitations. It is a part of our spiritual education that we are taught to pray for others as well as for ourselves. Paul exhorted, as we learn from one of the citations above, "that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high places; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." The same apostle tells us that "this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who willeth that all men should be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth." This is the breadth of God's desire and sympathy for the human race, and our prayers should be made in line with God's desire and the desire of all good men.

The admonition of the apostle to pray "for kings and for all that are in high places," is one that we are, in this country, peculiarly apt to omit. In state churches prayer is always made for the rulers of the nation. In this country, where there is separation between church and state, we have almost acted on the principle that there is separation between religion and the state, and that we are under no obligation to pray for the men who occupy high places in the state and nation. Perhaps nothing would tend more to cultivate a proper respect for our civil dignitaries than the habit of interceding in their behalf before that supreme Ruler from whom all earthly rulers derive their authority.

The finest example of intercessory prayer in the Bible is that of our Savior, recorded in John 17. In that sublime prayer the burden of His petition is the welfare of his disciples who were then about Him and those who were to believe on Him through their Word. He prays that they may be kept in His name. He does not ask that they be taken out of the world, but that they shall be kept from the evil one; He prays that they may be sanctified in the truth, and "that they may all be one, even as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee; that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me." This prayer of intercession takes in, first His immediate disciples, and then those who are to believe on Him through their Word, and finally the whole world, which is to be converted through the sanctification and unity of believers.

It may well be questioned whether we are now praying for the unity of Christ's followers as much and with as great a degree of earnestness as did the fathers of the Reformation, and as would seem to be demanded by the nature of our plea. We have the example of the Savior in thus praying, and his example should be followed in this as in all other respects. The church is not likely to achieve anything for which it does not pray. Prayer is likely to accomplish more for the unity of believers than argumentation.

At the close of Paul's splendid exhortation, couched in terms of the weapons of warfare, offensive and defensive, used by the Romans of that period, he comes to the favorite topic of prayer, reminding the Ephesian Christians that their warfare is to be carried on "with all prayer and supplication, praying at all seasons in the Spirit, and watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all saints, and on my behalf, that utterance may be given unto me in opening my mouth to make known with boldness the mystery of the gospel, for which I am an ambassador in chains; that in it I may speak boldly as I ought to speak."

The exhortation here is, besides praying for "all saints" in general, to make special prayer for the ministers of the Word, that utterance may be given unto them to declare fully the gospel of Christ. We are persuaded that this duty and privilege is much neglected in the churches. Praying for your preacher is much better than criticizing him. No preacher can succeed in doing a large work for God who is not sustained and upheld by the intercessory prayers of his church. No poet of modern times has better expressed the value of prayer than Tennyson, in the Passing of Arthur:

> More things are wrought by prayer
> Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice
> Rise like a fountain for me, night and day.
> For what are men better than sheep or goats
> That nourish a blind life within the brain,
> If, knowing God they lift not hands of prayer,
> Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
> For so the whole round earth is every way
> Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, our Heavenly Father, that Thou dost permit us to pray for ourselves, for those we love and for all men. Give us, we pray Thee, the true spirit of supplication and intercession. May we have the spirit of Christ, whose great heart was large enough to embrace the entire world. We pray Thee that Thy children may be sanctified in the truth and may be united with one another in Christ Jesus, to the end that the whole earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord and shall rejoice in Thy salvation. These petitions we make in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of our local papers recently contained a cartoon representing two men, reading the war news from South Africa. One of them was reading out of it a British victory, and the other a Boer victory. The title of the cartoon was: "It Depends Upon The Standpoint." Indeed it does! But what makes the standpoint? That is an interesting question. One of these gentlemen wore a hat marked "Made in Germany," and the other one a hat marked "Made in England." The fact of blood or race, however, accounts only in part for the difference in point of view. Among native Americans there is an almost equal division of sentiment in reference to the South African war. It is a striking fact, to begin with, that the people of this country should be taking sides in a war going on in another part of the globe, with which we have nothing to do. It shows how close the world is getting together, however, and emphasizes the solidarity of the race. A century ago very few people in this country would have known much, if anything, about a war so distant from them, and perhaps would have cared less. Not so now. Americans scan the daily papers eagerly to find on which side of the Tugela Buller was at last account, whether or not Cronje has surrendered to Kitchener and Roberts, and whether Ladysmith is still holding out. The strange thing is that men living in the same block, or, as for that matter, in the same building, separated by only a brick wall, and often members of the same family, differ entirely in their sympathies. Who can tell what subtle causes lie behind this phenomenon and turn the sympathies of the people in these opposite directions?

When the Boer sympathizers are asked to state the grounds of their sympathy they do so very readily. They say it is a contest between a grasping monarchy on the one hand, and two struggling republics on the other; that it is tyranny against liberty; the strong against the weak, and that all true Americans ought naturally to sympathize with the weaker party as it represents liberty and independence. They will remind you that at one time Great Britain attempted to coerce this country into submission to "taxation without representation;" that we successfully resisted the attempt, and ought now to sympathize with the Boers in their conflict. The British sympathizer, when asked to state the grounds for his sympathy, is equally ready to answer. He says the people of England are our kith and kin; Great Britain was our friend in our recent war with Spain and stood between us and foreign intervention; that she was the only nation in Europe that understood or sympathized with the unselfish nature of our war with Spain for the liberation of Cuba; that Great Britain is as free a country as the United States, and a much freer country than either of the Boer republics; that the refusal of the Boer to grant to British subjects in the Transvaal their civil and political rights when they were paying nine-tenths of the taxes of the country was the cause of the war; that Great Britain is not seeking to subjugate these republics or to deprive the people of their political rights, but to secure the rights of her own subjects and protect her own interests in South Africa. Thus we have the two points of view. It is inevitable that one occupying the first point of view should sympathize with the Boers; and it is equally as natural that one occupying the latter point of view should sympathize with Great Britain.

There would seem to be good reason, therefore, for a more careful study of the situation and of the causes which have led to the war. A better knowledge of all the facts in the case might not entirely change our sympathies, but it would be certain to modify them, and we should see that, like most other questions, it has two sides to it. There are some things concerning the war about which the people of this country generally agree: first, that it might have been avoided by a little more of the spirit of concession on each side; second, that the Boers have manifested a courage, a love of country, a skill in war and a readiness for it, which show them to be a foe worthy of the respect of Great Britain or any other nation; third, all Americans will rejoice at the speedy ending of the war in such a way as will conserve the rights, civil and religious, of both Boers and Uitlanders, and will not paralyze the arm of Great Britain in carrying forward her great work of civilization in Africa. Disinterested observers in this country have scarcely doubted from the beginning that, without intervention from other European nations, Great Britain would, sooner or later, conquer the the Boers and dictate the terms of peace. It is unsafe to predict, in the present condition of the nations of Europe, what course they will pursue in reference to intervention, but it does not seem probable, from the present outlook, that any other nation will attempt to interfere, unless England's demands should be so unreasonable and should so threaten the balance of power in Europe as to compel intervention.

But we do well to remember that in this, as in all other wars, there is the God of battles, who can overrule even war to further His purposes. We may not always understand His plans, but we may not doubt that there will be such an outcome of the present conflict, and of all the conflicts between nations, as will ultimately advance the reign of righteousness over the earth. This is the Power that dominates all history and makes nations and peoples serve His purposes in the world. We do not for a moment doubt that both Boer and Briton will come out of this bloody conflict chastened, corrected, wiser, and better fitted to accomplish the special mission for which God has raised them up. Meanwhile, why may we not sympathize with all the brave men who are struggling on opposing sides for what they believe to be right, while we pray that God may give such issue to the war as will best promote the rights of mankind, and hasten the coming of the Kingdom of Everlasting Peace.

Questions and Answers.

Is it proper for members of a Christian Church to vote in the calling of a preacher, or should the elders employ him? Why do we have elders if they are not to do this?

Mrs. S. Blunk.

The elders should take the initiative steps in looking out a suitable man for preacher, and should recommend him to the congregation when they have found him. It is the right of the church, however, if it sees proper to exercise it, to approve their recommendation before it becomes effective. If they choose to delegate their authority to the elders to act for them, that is their privilege. But the average preacher, we judge, would prefer to have the direct endorsement of the church for which he is to preach.

1. Was Mary Magdalene and the woman who anointed the feet of Christ at the house of Simon the same person?

2. What are we to understand by demons or evil spirits possessing people in the time of our Savior?

3. What is the best life of Christ?

Querist.

1. There is no evidence that the woman who anointed the feet of Christ in the house of Simon the Pharisee was Mary Magdalene.

2. The belief in demoniacal possession, i. e., that wicked spirits took possession of certain persons and controlled them, has prevailed, more or less, in all ages of the world. We do not know how to explain many passages in the New Testament, referring to this subject, without accepting the reality of such possession, but the nature of it is so obscure that it would be unsafe to venture on any dogmatic explanation of the phenomena. We have something similar in our day; that is, many persons claim to come under the control, at times, of some departed spirit (not generally acknowledged, however, to be evil) and to be able thereby to convey superhuman information to the world. There is so much of pretense and imposture associated with modern spiritualistic phenomena that one is at a loss to know how much is slight-of-hand and how much remains to be accounted for by some occult laws which are not yet understood. We do not pretend to say what resemblance or relation may exist between these strange phenomena of our times and the instances of possession recorded in the New Testament. It is worthy of note, however, that in the New Testament those who were possessed by evil spirits were regarded as victims of Satanic influence, and to relieve them from this possession was a miracle of blessing. In our day those who claim to be possessed at times by spirits regard it as a most desirable gift or attainment, by which they are exalted above theis fellows.

3. There are so many excellent lives of Christ that it is difficult to say which of them is the best. Among some of the most modern are Farrar's, Edersheim's, Geikie's, and there is one now running in McClure's Magazine, by Rev. John Watson, which will no doubt possess some merit of its own.

Isn't universal salvation to the people who may be living at Christ's second coming the natural consequence of the faith-alone theory of A. B. Jones, from the fact that when they see him coming, as represented in the New Testament, they will certainly believe in him.

T. F. George.

Bozota, Ill.

In the first place, it should be said that Bro. Jones holds no "faith-alone theory." He believes that the faith which does not manifest itself in obedience and in a renewed life is not a saving faith. In the second place, our brother needs to study anew what faith is. The men who are convinced by seeing Christ with their literal eyes will not be believers in the sense that belief or salvation saves. Many who shall be thus convinced will cry for the rocks and the mountains to fall upon them to hide them from the face of him whose life and teaching, death and resurrection, failed to convince them of His divine mission and character. The faith that does not prodnce love for Christ and a renewed Spirit, is dead, being alone.

3. Yes; just as the light is spreading, the opposition to the expedients mentioned is dying out. There is no separate or distinct organization of those who oppose such useful expedients. There are many good people yet, however, who from wrong teaching have conscientious convictions against these things. They are to be borne with patiently, but the good of the cause is not to be sacrificed on the altar of their scruples. They must have freedom to feel and act as they please concerning these matters, but they must allow others to do the same.

Current Religious Thought.

The following sentences are from a strong article by Prof. Shailler Matthews, of the University of Chicago, in the American Journal of Sociology:

Church members may hold different opinions as to socialism, monarchy, trusts, prohibition, evolution and a thousand other things, but a church as a social institution is concerned with none of them. It must educate its members in the principles governing Christian conduct; it must teach them to do right at any cost; it must bring them into vital relationship with God, that their lives may get something of the divine expansion, and then it must trust them to act freely as their own intelligence and judgment dictate. . . . Social environment and public opinion are only other names for men and women. As men and women grow purer and more generous, and their virtues get socialized in some institution, social environment and public opinion must improve. It is here that the local church becomes of social importance. It not only is producing Christian people, but, if it is properly performing its duty, it is coordinating, socializing their influence. But it must work out from life. It cannot socialize theological opinion. . . . Let the church cease to be a theological lectureship and, without puzzling men with strange theologies and stranger class sympathies, train them in the experience of Christian living, and under the guidance of God they will be able as individual citizens to devise wise means by which social institutions and economic conditions and political machinery shall so embody the Christian spirit as shall make a Christian society less a matter of rhetoric, and Christian living easier for all classes.

When President Patton, of Princeton, who, as nobody need to be told, is an intense conservative, assisted in the inauguration of President Stewart, of Auburn Theological Seminary, he uttered the following noteworthy words:

The question is not whether you accept this or that or a third type of Calvinism, or whether you are a Calvinist at all, or an Arminian, or whether you hold to this or that view of original sin, or whether you hold it at all—the issue in which we should stand shoulder to shoulder is the issue of fundamental anti-supernaturalism as opposed to the bedrock of conviction that Christianity is a revelation culminating in the incarnate Christ. If this institution is true to the faith "once for all delivered to the saints" you will understand that in the maintenance of this truth she represents not simply the Presbyterian Church, but what is far more important, she is a constituent factor in the maintenance of that faith for which all churches are contending, and which is the condition of the life of any Christian organization.

These are good words to keep in mind when the spirit of heresy trials gets in the air.

The New York Observer comments as follows upon an utterance of Dr. Hillis:

In a recent sermon Dr. Hillis remarked that in every age there have been two classes in the church, the one emphasizing "knowledge and culture," the other "affection and sentiment," while "outside the church" stands a third class of Christians, "whose emphasis has been upon good deeds, conduct and character." It would be more proper to say that more of this class of thoroughgoing Christians, who practice what they preach, are found inside than outside the churches. We weary of this continual assumption that much creed means little character. A firmly held creed and an honest, truly benevolent character can and do very frequently subsist together.

The original remark was good and the comment is good. It may be pertinent to observe further that there is room in the church nowadays for the man of honest and truly benevolent character, even though he has not many articles in his creed.

HIGH STANDARD IN COLLEGES.

W. E. G.

One of our contemporaries a few weeks ago issued an editorial rebuke to the colleges of this country for what it was pleased to term their "worship of the high standard fetish," meaning the raising of the requirements for admission and graduation. This general elevation of the educational standard, a tendency which has been operating in all good colleges during the last quarter of a century, is characterized as a merely negative movement, which does not improve the quality of education, but only keeps the student out of college by hard entrance examinations until he has a pretty extensive liberal education. Poor men, it says, cannot afford to spend four years at college after spending the necessary time on the preparatory course. This means the creation of an intellectual aristocracy, for, says the editor, "a young man cannot have access to our highly eulogized and endowed institutions of learning unless he has a rich father."

It might be sufficient to reply that if the poor young man gets as much education now in preparing for college as he formerly got in going through it, he certainly has not lost anything worth weeping over. Let him stop at the end of Freshman or Sophomore year if he cannot afford to go on, and then he will have more than his father had when he received his college diploma.

But the young men whose fathers are not rich do not stop there. The above statement about the "high standard" colleges of to-day being open only to young men who have rich fathers, bears no relation to the actual facts except one of contradiction. It is true that the average expenditure of college students has increased in recent years. There are several reasons for this, but none of them have anything to do with the high standard. Rich men's sons are now sent to college preparatory to a business career, whereas formerly few young men entered college except those who intended to teach, preach or practice law—professions not recruited largely from the families of the rich. This has raised the average of expenditure without increasing the necessary expense. But, all arguments aside, so long as it remains a fact that, even in the most expensive institutions in the country, a considerable per cent. of the students support themselves, it cannot be said that the thing is impossible. It is done. The objection to the "high standard" on the ground that it excludes poor men fall to the ground, for as a matter of fact it does not exclude them.

But another objection is made, the gist of which is apparent from the following quotation:

"Consider what is demanded of the candidate for matriculation in the ancient languages and in mathematics. For example, the candidate must in Greek be able to translate Attic prose at sight. A little time appears to be given for rendering any passage in Homer. He must be also able to render English into Greek. In Latin he must have read six books of the Æneid, six orations of Cicero and write a composition in Latin. This means that the applicant must already have mastered as much of the classic languages as is good for him—any further pursuit of which will be a waste of the time which should be employed upon broad and intellectually expanding sciences, rather than upon narrow and profitless drill."

Good! By all means let not the precious years of the college course be expended in "narrow and profitless drill." And for that very reason it is important that the student should be rooted and grounded in his Latin and Greek grammar before he enters college, if he is going to study them at all. They are certainly drill, not infrequently narrow and sometimes profitless, and they are the very thing which filled the college course from matriculation to commencement day, to the exclusion of the "broad and intellectually expanding sciences," in the good old days before the "worship of the high standard fetish" had done its deadly work. With the high standard has come another feature of the college curriculum, namely, the elective system. Either is impossible without the other.

Compare for a moment what used to be and what is. The college of twenty-five years ago took the student as it found him, asking few questions about preparation. A common school education was considered a good enough foundation. It put him through a fixed regime of elementary Latin and Greek, mathematics, a vague smattering of one or two sciences without laboratory work, sometimes the grammar of a modern language, and in the Senior years lectures by the president on evidences and "mental and moral philosophy." These filled up the four years. There were practically no electives—there was no time for them—and the choice between the "literary" and the "classical" course was the only recognition of the student's right to have needs and aptitudes different from those of every other student. These studies, all essentially of the "grind" order and neither requiring nor producing intellectual maturity or power of thought, filled the college course. Yet, the college of twenty-five years ago did a grand work. Its strong point was that it took people where it found them, gave them some mental discipline and taught them to study. If it also taught them to think (which is a very different thing), the credit belongs not to the curriculum, but to the old literary society, of blessed memory.

The college of to-day, with its high standard and its elective system, depends upon the secondary school for its touch with the common life. It demands that the secondary school, whether high school or academy, shall give the broad foundation of a good general education. If a student comes to college without this, he is referred to such a school, which is sure to be quite as accessible to rich or poor as the low-grade college used to be. When he has gone through this and is admitted to college, it is not for four years more of "text-books and class drill" (to quote again from our contemporary), but for work which, whether science or not, is certainly "broad and intellectually expanding." If he wishes to continue his classics, he has before him, not the drudgery of the grammar, but the delights of literature. If he turns to history, he need not begin by conning a text-book suited to the mental capacity of children of twelve; he is already familiar with the outlines of general history. He has at least one modern language where he can use it without much difficulty. He has time now for consecutive courses in the natural sciences, in philosophy, in literature, in economics, in social and political science. He cannot do all of these, of course, but he can choose among them.

We hear the complaint that the old college literary society does not flourish as it once did. No, more's the pity, it does not. We mourn its loss, but we rejoice in one of the chief causes of its desuetude. The college class room is no longer a place for mere drill; it is a place for thought; and students are not, as of yore, forced to organize independently of the faculty to get the privilege of thinking.

Is the high standard, with its inevitable accompaniments, the elective system, such a misfortune? Only to those who hope to apply get-rich-quick methods to education.

The essential difference between the educational situation at the present time and that of a quarter of a century ago is not in the high or low standard of the colleges, but in the fact that we are coming to have an educational system, the various factors of which have a definite relation to each other. The college is one item in the system. The question of the efficiency of the college is not to be settled by asking, Does the college do the whole work of education? Does it meet the student at the threshold of the temple of learning and conduct him into the most holy place? But, Does the system as a whole do the work which we have a right to expect of it, and does the college contribute an essential element of that work? Formerly, there was the common or grammar school, and above that practically nothing except the college. For the college to have made for itself a high standard would have been to cut off its entire constituency. Wisely it kept its connection with its base of supplies, the common school, by keeping its entrance requirements low, and from this starting-point it reached out as far as it could. To-day the educational system comprises primary or common school, secondary or high school, college and university. It is, therefore, no longer required of the college that it keep its doors open immediately to the boy on the farm. He must pass first through the secondary school.

The work of co-ordinating the various elements of this system is as yet far from finished. The educational problem of the present generation is broader than any single question of isolated reforms in college curriculum or theological education. Theological education, or professional education of any sort, cannot be right unless the college education before it has been right; and college education cannot be right unless there has been preparation for it in the right sort of secondary school. The primary school, thanks to Horace Mann and the common school movement, is already in a more satisfactory and settled condition than any of the others, and the secondary school presents more unsolved problems of pressing importance than either college or university. If there is any reasonable fault to be found with the movement toward higher standard in the colleges, it is that they have gotten somewhat ahead of the development of the secondary schools. The educational problem of the immediate present has to do first of all with the adjustment of secondary education, on the one hand to limitations of the primary school, and on the other to the reasonable demands of the colleges.

THE PERPETUAL CLAIMS OF MISSIONS.

EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

The perpetual claims of missions are often presented in terms of the permanent authority of Christ, who commands the church to go, preach. It is frequently said that other religions have been pronounced false and their devotees are, therefore, in danger of future eternal punishment; and further, the church must go and preach to the heathen world in order to save itself. Now, all this is true, and that is one way of emphasizing the everlasting claims of missions. But you will perhaps permit me to say the same things in other words, and from the point of view of the inherent value of Christianity and its power in the lives of those who truly follow its teachings.

1. In the first place, truth itself is dynamic. Man is so constituted in his psychological nature that every clear conception of the truth tends to express itself in appropriate acts. When a man gets an idea of an improvement in the construction of bicycles, or engines, or other mechanical devices, the natural tendency is to get a patent and begin the manufacture of a new article. Or when a man conceives a new idea of government, or education, or science, the tendency is to present it to the world and to advocate it before all men. It is in no sense natural for a man to be selfish and niggardly with intellectual and spiritual truth. Now, just to the degree to which Christianity seems to its adherents truer and better than anything else in the world, to that extent they will be compelled from within to support Christian missions. The more inner and spiritual the religious life becomes, the more missionary it becomes. When a man accepts the Christian religion as a system of facts and propositions, because they are recorded in a certain book, or have been testified to by external signs and wonders, that man is going to be slow about missions. He will want clear proof of his obligation to the heathen, and then he will probably excuse himself with a complaint about the way the missionary society is conducted. His religion turns largely upon technicalities, and there is little inner power about them. But when a man feels in his own life the beauty and power of the teaching of Jesus, then he needs no other motive. His own experience urges him to speak, to give, to go, to help men everywhere. Add to this inner conviction the outward demonstrations which have come from the ends of the earth in this century concerning the power of the gospel to save and civilize the lowest tribes, and the true Christian cannot reject the claims of missions. The greatest miracle of all the ages is that such imperfect conceptions of Christianity as the church has cherished should have wrought such achievements in every land. In a sense, therefore, the cause of missions can only be permanently advanced indirectly; that is, by cultivating in the church a purer and more adequate knowledge and practice of the truth. The essential thing is to get the church to realize vividly and intelligently the beauty and truth of its own ideals. When that is accomplished their dynamic power expresses itself in missions of all kinds.

2. The difficulty to-day in gaining a proper recognition of the claim of Christian missions is the difficulty of fixing people's attention upon Christian ideas. There is much being done toward reviving Bible study and spreading religious knowledge in the church. But it is lamentably insufficient. So many other things crowd upon the attention in this busy age that religion is in danger of being conventional and lifeless. Again, the knowledge of other religious literature has led many to a partial reaction against aggressive missions. The circulation of the best sayings of the sages of other religions, together with the fascination the Western peoples have always felt for the quasi—mysterious Orientals, has led to an overestimation of their civilizations. The World's Fair brought the wild Hindu, Japanese, Chinese, the Brahman, Buddhist and Jani. They spoke English, had good manners and an ingenious philosophy—all of which, together with the sheer novelty, made many superficial observers think the missionaries were not needed abroad after all! But neither the fine maxims nor the polite priests represent the true inwardness of their religions. In order to appreciate that we had but to look at their social institutions and inhuman practices. A religion is not to be judged by the fine speeches of its representatives, but by its fruits. Another thing which hinders missions in the so-called upper circles of the church is the influence of a certain tendency in modern culture, represented by the so-called realism in literature and art. The artistic point of view, the real evidence of culture, they tell us, is simply to see and describe things as they are, without idealizing or moralizing. Such a tendency makes us forget how to read Victor Hugo and Carlisle and even Thackeray. That view has lost the nerve and stamina of a healthy idealism. It doesn't aim to bother any one else with new ideas. It opposes the advocacy of better conditions in the Philippines and Africa simply because the establishment of higher ideals always means struggle and suffering and, at present, war! Those who are influenced by these views are in favor of leaving the heathen alone, and not doing so rude a thing as to unsettle their long-established views and ways of life.

3. But in contrast to all this the principle for which I contend is that the normal and proper thing is for ideals to express themselves and impress themselves upon the world. Now Christianity is coming to a rebirth through the developments of the present age. It is freeing itself of many false traditions of the elders; it is fortifying itself through the new and larger conceptions of life which the natural sciences afford; it is finding new strength in new views of history and in the new social awakening. By all these things we are entering upon a new appreciation of the life and work of Jesus. His religion is now seen to be something which does not belong to the wilderness and the cloister, but to the cities, the homes, the social life of man. Science is also emphasizing the brotherhood of man in a new way, through the theory of evolution and historical development. These two things are essential to healthy, successful missions—to realize the supreme truth and beauty of the message to be given and the common humanity of those who need it.

This point of view finally establishes the perpetual claims of missions. Just as truth is always dynamic and seeks to communicate itself like leaven, so it must follow that wherever men gain a deeper insight into the truth of Christianity, there missions will arise. The student volunteers have a watchword—the evangelization of the world in this generation. That is a worthy motto. They mean by it that every creature should have the gospel preached to him, should have an opportunity to hear the story of divine love and grace. And that ideal, under the increasing velocity of missions, is possible. But let no one think that would make further missions needless. That would only fulfill the first part of the commission. The latter part, the larger part—"teaching them all things whatsoever I have commanded you"—that part would remain to be obeyed. Just as long as one man feels that he has a clearer insight and deeper experience of the divine ideals than others, so long he will feel the great commission ringing in his soul; so long he will recognize the perpetual claims of missions. In the first sense America and England may perhaps be said to be evangelized, but do you notice that we send missionaries to England and to various parts of our own land? We justify ourselves by the belief that we give them the pure gospel. In the same way it is conceivable that others should one day send missionaries to the Disciples of Christ in America. It is in this way that the world moves upward, step by step.

What is needed, then, to-day, to forward the great cause of missions? Above all, that the Christian world should understand its own religion better, free itself from binding traditions and feel within itself the joy and power of the divine life. Add to this the knowledge, in a vivid way, that al men are indeed our brethren—children of the one God—and that they are lost, lost now, from the richness, from the abundance of life which Christian nations enjoy. By these two forces, one compelling us from within, one drawing us from without, shall the parables of our Lord be confirmed, when he said the kingdom of God is like leaven, the kingdom of God is like growing seed, the kingdom of God is like a stone cut from the mountain. By its inner dynamic power it shall grow until it fills the whole earth.

SOME OF OUR PRESSING NEEDS.

WATCHER, JR.

It was gratifying to note in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST an article purporting to diagonse the condition and needs of our movement in Missouri. The writer was convinced of our need of earnest, unselfish, consecrated men, placed in command of machinery at once new and suited to practical ends. That the somewhat bloodless form of a religious institution confronts us in Missouri is obvious, but that its disease is due to want of God-fearing men and soul saving methods is not, to me at least, obvious. What Missouri has in abundance is energetic men with a wealth of sympathy and a grace of compassion and a record of heroic endeavors to combat the common evils of intemperance and to commend the staple virtues of a healthy manhood and womanhood. There is, too, no lack of machinery, so far as individual churches are concerned, to affect the realization of the best possible plans. The congregational system lends itself to whatever peculiar needs obtain in any community. Moreover, the officers of Sunday-school, prayer-meeting, Christian Endeavor are arbitrary. It is not leech-like methods, but scanty thought respecting the fundamentals of religion; it is not self-centered men, but uneducated men that threatens the cause of the Disciples in Missouri and elsewhere.

There is impending in the whole West a battle between the essentials and the non-essentials of Christian faith. Indeed, it has begun in the assertive and unchained minds of some, especially the laity. They want to know wherein religion has practical serviceableness, what there is in and behind the ingenious cant phrases of ministers that has an immediate and eternal claim upon them. They are asking for the more abundant life of social consciousness and political responsibility, the life of insight and sympathy, the life they will have as soon as it is discovered that religion demands, not the acacceptance of a system of thought or a kind of church ordinance, but every-day duty-doing, and God-fearing young men there are whose support the church needs to save it from the violence of fanatics and intellectual weaklings, but are being repelled by its archaism of thought and feeling. Sermons are asked for that will disclose the significance of practical experiences, that will give life a meaning and its plodding details a purpose. Instead sermons are preached on hell and evolution and Jonah and baptism, cribbed, as they not infrequently are, from the apologetics of some one of our out-of-date theologians.

On the whole, many of our ministers are powerless to grapple the unrest that characterizes the more thoughtful and inquiring. Not that it is needed publicly to expound the minutiæ of biblical criticism or to expostulate on the advancement of science and learning. Rather the point of view of modern thought is what is demanded. This, coupled with fresh utterance, present-day truth in living speech, would give a new lease on life to our ministry.

Considering their personal qualifications, it is the nobleness of character that is the secret of whatever success the larger part of our preachers have, and as suggested, timely utterances respecting the ordinary problems of morality are not wanting. But there was wanting the larger conceptions of life that give point and potency to the smaller, that furnish morality with a rational basis and commend religion to strong men as well as women and children. Such conceptions are in the shell of orthodox faith about God and Christ and the grand purpose of creation. Unfortunately, they are there to stay till freedom of thought and investigation is welcomed in our colleges. Many of our preachers have come from seminaries that have stamped them irredeemably with biblical and dogmatic theology. It is true, they know Greek and Hebrew, but it is knowledge in itself absolutely worthless to help them grapple with social, ethical, industrial and political problems.

There is reason for gratitude in the fact that some of our active men have escaped the theological education that is furnished by the majority of our schools. Others have maintained their individuality notwithstanding. But in a few of these, it is to be regretted, there is a lack of assertiveness. What seems to be the besetting sin of the vanguard of our ministry is its tendency to treat ideas according to their probable effect on human character. A great deal of doctrine once held by them is now half believed, but is clung to for fear that in the present state of things it would be dangerous to give it up.

Only a few months since a yonng man said to me: "But what motives to morality will the people have if you cease to preach these things?" Such a conception is founded on a lack of faith in the people and in truth and in God. We need to respond to the manly appeal of Bishop Brooks and never say anything we do not believe to be true because we think it may be helpful, or keep back anything we know to be true because we think it may be harmful, letting our reverence for truth wait on our desire for usefulness. Of one thing we may be sure: the economy of this universe is such that while the truth may for a time disturb and result even in the loss of some, it will eventually prove the only sure basis on which to build.

"There is no little enemy." Little impurities in the blood are sources of great danger and should be expelled by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

CARING FOR YOUNG CONVERTS.

W. S. HOKE.

Recently, while passing through a rural district, I chanced to see a farmer at work in his garden. He held in his gloved hands a sharp, heavy hoe which he applied vigorously and effectively to the grass and weeds growing among the plants and robbing them of necessary food. Suddenly he stopped, threw down his hoe and knelt among the weeds, removed his gloves and, bending over a bruised and prostrated plant, no longer able to stand alone, he thrust aside the tares and tenderly lifted the downcast plant. He held it with one hand while with the other he pulled the loose soil, so replete with plant-food, and, piling it around the plant until he so braced it that it could stand erect, the farmer declared it would not surprise him if it produced one hundredfold. Then he pulled and cast aside the weeds growing near it.

It occurred to me, as I silently watched this farmer, that we who labor in the Master's vineyard would accomplish much more and much better results if we would imitate this farmer's manner. In our Master's vineyard are many tender ones, almost strangled by bad associates and worse literature, and we persist in standing erect, head and shoulders above them, with gloved hands. It frequently occurs that we, in our haste and roughness, cut down many tender plants which we could have saved to the Master's service had we laid aside the hoe and gloves and knelt tenderly at their feet and supplied them with what they lacked. No man can raise plants by pulling or twisting or distorting the leaves and blades. Remove the weeds, stir up the soil and leave the plant alone, for under right conditions the plant could not avoid growing, and under right conditions it is as natural for character to become beautiful as a flower. Brethren, have you young men and women, young converts, under your care? Are you engaged in soul-saving, in character-building? If so, you will do well to imitate this old farmer's plan. Lay aside your coarse and heavy hoe, cast aside your gloves, humble yourself at the feet of these tender, bruised ones, thrust from them the dangerous weeds and, as the farmer placed the soil about the mouth of the plant, so you can place before the eyes (the soul's mouth) of your young converts pure and wholesome literature. No more potent force is known for molding character than literature. Books and papers are the associates of one's mind and never fail to leave their impress upon their associates. For $1.00, brother, you can place 52 copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the hands of one convert. Try it! I declare unto you that it will be to him what the soil is to the plant, replete with food so necessary for the growth and support of character and spiritual development. Place it in the hands of some poor, struggling one. It will prove a blessing to him, and a glory to that Name which is forever blest.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA—I.

Authority in Matters of Religion.

A. B. JONES.

In what court are the matters of religious faith to be adjudicated and determined? By what authority are the affairs of my spiritual life to be settled and accepted? What is authority? The Standard Dictionary gives, as its first and most essential definition of authority, this:

"The right to command and enforce obedience." That is clear, comprehensive and satisfactory. But where does this "right to command and enforce obedience" rest? The question of infallibility obtrudes itself into this investigation. This authority, it is thought, ought to be infallible, as a necessary qualification "to command and enforce obedience."

The Roman Catholic Church, in ecumenical council, in 1870, decided that this infallibility was lodged in the Pope. But how are we to know that that decision was correct—infallibly correct? Must not the council itself be infallible in order to settle that article of faith? Whence its authority, its infallible authority, to determine the infallibility of the Pope? Did this council find this great truth in the Bible? Why, then, cannot the rest of us find it there as well? Did God guide their minds into the discovery of that truth in the Bible? Then why does he not so guide the minds of all other earnest seekers after truth, and lead them to see the same important doctrine in the Bible?

With Protestants, generally, infallibility is assigned to the Word of God as revealed in the Bible. But in what sense is the Bible infallible? Who wrote the Bible? Men. Are men infallible? The world has never known but one infallible man—the man Christ Jesus, the God-man. How, then, can fallible man produce an infallible Bible? Is not this similar to the question the Catholics have to face—How can a fallible council produce an infallible Pope? But it is agreed on all hands by believers, that the men who wrote the Bible were inspired. But does inspiration imply infallibility? Certainly not, in a general sense, else the writers of the Bible were infallible men. This they were not, by general consent. They did not claim to be infallible men. But inspiration means inerrancy, infallible certainty in the writing down of that wherein they were inspired. The Holy Spirit illuminated their minds to understand unmistakably and to write down unerringly the matters wherein they were inspired. Within this limit they were made inerrant, infallible; without this limit they were like other men. They were not, then, absolutely infallible. But, by general consent, there are many other things in the Bible than those "matters wherein they were inspired." Now how are we to infallibly draw the line between the "matters wherein they were inspired" and the matters wherein they were not inspired? This is certainly important. But even in the "matters wherein they were inspired," that were originally written down with infallible accuracy, how have they been transmitted to us? Through transcription after transcription, and translation after translation, from one language to another. Who made these transcriptions and these translations? Uninspired men, fallible men, like ourselves. Then, even if "the matters wherein they were inspired" were infallibly written down at first, how can they come to us, through the handling of fallible transcribers and fallible translators, and through intervening centuries, as the infallible Word of God, the inerrant Bible? Evidently not at all, in any absolute sense—only in an approximate sense. But again, even if the original, inspired and infallibly written Word had come down to us, through an infallible handling, how can fallible men like ourselves read and understand that Word with infallible certainty? Language is mercurial; words have different meanings. Figurative speech abounds in the Bible. The plain and the ornate shade into and out of each other imperceptibly. Without an infallible interpreter, how are we to know that we have the true sense of the infallible Word? And this introduces us again to the Pope, and to the old question, How shall we know that the Pope is infallible?

There is no absolute infallibility but with God, the immaculate, infinite God. All other infallibility is but approximate—an ideal.

But we crave a standard whereby we may settle our difficulties and bring contentment to our hearts. Where is it to be found?

Protestants claim the Bible as that standard. But what means all this contention among Protestants; this diversity of views; this alienation of feeling; this denominationalism? A perfect standard, yet an imperfect measurement; an infallible standard, yet a fallible use of it. How is this?

"The Bible is for the people, and the right of private interpretation is theirs," cried Luther in the sixteenth century. "The Bible and the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants," cried Chillingworth in the seventeenth century. "Where the Bible speaks we speak; where the Bible is silent we are silent," cried the Campbells in the nineteenth century.

At a conference of ministers, held in Lexington, Ky., in 1841, at which Alexander Campbell was present, the following resolution was adopted, indited, doubtless, by his presiding genius:

"Resolved, That the Bible, and the Bible alone, is a sufficient foundation on which all Christians may unite and build together; and that we most affectionately invite all the religious parties to an investigation of this truth."

Luther fought for his principle of "private interpretation" against the usurpations of the priesthood of the Catholic Church. The Campbells fought for their principle of an open Bible for all the people against the "hireling clergy" of Protestantism. "What is the great difference," asked Thomas Campbell, "between withholding the Scriptures from the laity, as the Romanists do, and rendering them unintelligible by arbitrary interpretation, forced criticisms and fanciful explanations, as many Protestants do; or by making the people believe that they are nearly unintelligible by urging the necessity of what is called a learned clergy to explain them?"

But let us not lose sight of the question before us—How is the infallible Bible to receive an infallible interpretation? or rather, How is the approximate infallible Bible to receive an approximate infallible interpretation? Every man is to read and interpret the Bible for himself. This is liberty; this is responsibility; this is Protestantism; this is Christianity. But, in this view, where is the "authority"—"the right to command and enforce obedience?" As there is no absolute infallibility but with God, so there is no absolute authority but with God. But, if the Bible contains the revealed will of God to man, then it is, in some sense, vested with authority over man. And it becomes his duty to recognize that authority to the full extent of its significance. But why do we accept the Bible as of Divine authority?

Once upon a time there was a man who sat in his room at his boarding house, waiting for the gladsome sound of the dinner-bell. He was well-nigh famished, and when the joyous clang of the bell smote upon his ear, he arose in haste, and with jocund glee hied him to the dining room. When he entered the door, his eager eye fell upon the table, and he smiled happily as he noted in rapid succession the roast turkey, baked lamb, fried chicken, hot biscuits, mashed potatoes, stewed corn, cauliflower, mixed pickles, escalloped oysters, parsnips, baked sweet potatoes, brown gravy, celery, chow-chow, mince pie, tapioca, pudding and angel cake. But a terrible frown quickly succeeded the smile, and with a snort of rage he tore himself away from the chair where he was in the act of seating himself, and turning to the astonished landlady, he howled: "Why this insult? Why do you presume to have canned apricots on your table, when I do not like canned apricots? By me halidome, 'tis monstrous. I will not sit at your table!" In vain did the landlady endeavor to soothe him, and assure him that there was no rule compelling him to eat what he did not like, and that if he didn't like apricots, he could leave them alone, and eat what he did like. In vain did she point out to him the fact that she provided a large variety of edibles, that all her guests might find something to their liking, and that no one person was expected to like everything. The hungry boarder only raved the more, and stalked majestically from the room, preferring to go hungry rather than eat at a table whereon was placed an article of food that he did not like.

And there was another man who was a subscriber to a religious newspaper. He needed the matter therein contained, and he knew he needed it, and he greeted it with joy when it reached him each week. He read eagerly the editorials and news notes, and church reports, and items of interest, and the correspondence, and the advertisements, and the poems, and the stories. But one day he chanced to find a little thing that he did not like. He did not have to like it. He did not even have to read it. But he was exceedingly angry, and sat down and wrote the editor a letter, in which he ordered his paper discontinued, and spoke his mind—what there was of it—with great freedom and fluency.

MORAL: There are all kinds of silly people in the world.

Our Budget.

—March! into all the world and preach the gospel.

—March is the month for missions and meetings.

—The best thing to be said about March is that it is followed by April and the bluebirds.

—An old darky observed that he had noticed that if he pulled through March he always lived through the rest of the year!

—Whether we live through March or not, let us attend to the March offering, and we shall be in proper condition either for living or dying.

—March, by the way, has always been a good month for increasing the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It should be especially so this year because of our exceedingly low club rate and the fact that this month is the time limit of our offer.

—Let no one conclude that the price of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been reduced to $1.00. This is the rate in clubs of 25 where churches do the work of an agent and secure the clubs for us. The price of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to single subscribers is $1.50. If anybody can tell of another paper which pays as much for its contributions and the material upon which it is printed, as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST does, and has as low a price, we will send him a copy free.

—Rev. George Whitefoot, superintendent of colportage for the American Tract Society, called on us this week and showed us specimens of new books the society has printed in Spanish for circulation among the people of our island possessions. Among these were a Bible Dictionary, a sort of Bible Primer for beginners, hymns and tracts on various subjects. We were glad to learn that this great organization, which represents us all, is taking such active measures to promote the religious enlightenment of the priest-ridden people of these islands.

—The next regular quarterly meeting of the C. W. B. M. auxiliaries of thie city will be held in the Carondelet Christian Church, 6809 Virginia Avenue, March 23rd, from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. It is the desire of the sisters that there be a large attendance and in view of enlarging their work the invitation is extended to all interested in this work whether living in or out of the city to attend these quarterly meetings. They place no boundary lines to their field or parish. Parties living outside of the city who will attend the March meeting in Carondelet will be entertained free by notifying the district secretary. Mrs. W. D. Harrison, 6023 Clemens Ave., St. Louis, Mo. Further plans for widening and deepening their work will be presented at that meeting.

—The Christian Publishing Co. has just completed an arrangement with the Hackleman Music Company, of Indianapolis, whereby the former becomes publisher of "Silver and Gold," the popular song book compiled by J. V. Coombs and W. E. M. Hackleman. This book was brought out a little more than a year and one-half ago, but it has already reached the enormous sale of over One Hundred Thousand Copies. No poor book, and no book that was merely a passably good book ever reached such a circulation. Its merit made it a success, and its success has proven its merit. Silver and Gold is a low-priced book, too. In cloth, single copy, thirty cents; per dozen, $3.00; per hundred, $25.00; in boards, single copy, twenty-five cents; per dozen, $2.50; per hundred, $20.00; in limp cloth (evangelists' edition) single copy, twenty-five cents; per dozen, $2.00; per hundred, $15.00. Send orders to Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

—The Southwest Iowa District Convention will be held at Leon, March 12-15, and for this convention a large and interesting program has been prepared.

—We have received a copy of the 6th annual directory of the church in Council Bluffs, Iowa. We presume that the 6th annual means that the directory is revised annually. This is the only way to keep a church directory that is of any practical value. The way some churches get out directories is simply a waste of money. Every church ought to take a pride in keeping up a full living directory of its members. S. M. Perkins is the pastor of this businesslike church.

—Henry Meyer, a former employe of the Christian Pub. Co., who is now in Denver, Col., writes: "Our churches here are doing fairly well considering the fact that they are in Denver. It is no easy matter to win converts in Denver and the people here glory in the reputation of being cold and not susceptible to religious influence and exhortation. This fact is so glaring that the daily press has noticed and commented upon it. The Methodists recently held revival meetings in their churches, and I believe no conversions were reported. And yet, logically, the church is just what Denver needs.

—The new yearbook, issued by the American Christian Missionary Society, is out and ready for distribution. It appears as the regular January edition of the American Home Missionary edited by Benj. L. and C. C. Smith, our Home Mission corresponding secretaries. In addition to a revised list of all our preachers by states this edition of the yearbook contains a vast amount of tabulated information about our various missionary societies, so that it becomes an exceedingly valuable and convenient book for every Disciple of Christ to have about, and you can obtain a copy by enclosing ten cents in postage stamps to either one of the brethren named, Cincinnati, Ohio. The stamps simply pay the postage. The yearbook is sent to any address free of charge.

—The course of religious evangelism, no more than that of true love, runs smooth, in the midst of our divided Christendom. We learn from a marked copy of the Pittsburg Leader, which has been sent us, that the great meeting which C. R. Scoville has just concluded with the First Christian Church, Allegheny, Pa., with Bro. W. J. Lhamon, pastor, has stirred up considerable feeling in the Lutheran Church. This feeling found vent at the Lutheran Ministerial Association in their Monday morning meeting. One excited brother said he wanted to call attention "to the First Christian Church and Evangelist Scoville." "I think," he said, "a halt should be called, and that surely and emphatically." Further remarks indicated that a number of the Lutheran ministers present had been called on to write letters of dismission for a number of their members to join the First Christian Church. One said he did it with very bad grace, against his inclination, while another said he had refused to do it, though requested. Of course, this thing of losing members is not very pleasant, nor is the spirit of proselyting to the commended; but we suppose that Bros. Scoville and Lhamon, without any intent of proselyting from other churches, just preached the gospel faithfully as they understood it, with the result that a number of good people belonging to the Lutheran Church saw some things in a new light, and felt that they would be more at home in a church like that than in the Lutheran Church. How are these Lutheran brethren going to prevent that sort of thing? How will they "call a halt?" They will certainly not deny to their members the same right which Martin Luther claimed and exercised for himself when he left the church of Rome to build on what he regarded as a more scriptural foundation. The only way to prevent the passing of members from one church to another, and especially from churches having human creeds and party names to those having neither and claiming to be Christian only, is to hasten Christian union, and to cease "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

—F. G. Tyrrell, chairman of the committee which has under advisement the establishment of a Bible Training School, announces that there will be a conference of all persons interested in this movement at Indianapolis on Friday morning following the Congress, which will be the 30th day of March. The Congress dates are March 27-30.

—In a personal letter from Bro. B. H. Smith, of Canton, Mo., referring to his picture in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, he says: "The picture has brought me many letters of sympathy. I realize more than ever what is meant by the fellowship of the saints."

—We hope that the churches have all been well supplied with the Missionary Intelligencer for March. It is full of the most inspiring literature in behalf of Foreign Missions. If there is any motive for great liberality in the March offering, not set forth in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, or any lack of directions in taking the offering, they will surely be found in this number of the Missionary Intelligencer. The first page contains an interior view of the place where the Foreign Society was born and a good picture of Isaac Errett, its first president.

—One peculiarity of the British and Boer war in South Africa is that every new battle fought requires a new map of that particular bit of country or the revision of the older ones. This shows how little the people know about the interior of that great continent. There may be no more lands to discover, but much of this and other great continents are yet practically unknown. Even the British do not seem to have had a very good war map of her own colonies in Africa previous to this war. Not such at least as she will have in the future. Of wars it may, therefore, be said that they at least stimulate the study of geography.

—Sometimes some of our readers think our papers do a little too much sparring, but if they could see some of our esteemed exchanges they would think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Standard are only billing and cooing. Here is Dr. Gray of the Interior denying a charge against him by one of his more conservative contemporaries of the same faith and order, and closing his statement thus: "But we have additional evidence now that we never thought of it. For many years we have noticed that when that paper editorially states anything as a fact, it isn't so."

—The Methodist Discipline on oath binds every Methodist preacher to "go into every house in course and teach every one therein, young and old, to be Christians inwardly and outwardly; make every particular plain to their understandings; fix it in their minds; write it on their hearts. In order to this there must be precept upon precept, line upon line" (Dis. ¶ 142). That this rule declares a good work is not to be questioned, and yet of it, especially that part which requires a full and complete explanation of "every particular" of Christianity as seen through Methodist glasses, almost any Methodist preacher might say as Peter said of the law of Moses: "A yoke which our fathers nor we were able to bear." It is perfectly plain that all men ought to be Christians, but it is not possible to make perfectly plain "every particular" of the Christian religion, much less of Methodism. Some things have to be accepted on faith.

—Trinity Church, Chicago, the leading Methodist church in the city, located on Indiana Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street, was burned last week, the estimated loss being $100,000. The building was insured for only $50,000.

—There is in session at Chicago this week the largest assembly of college presidents which has probable ever come together. It is expected that some important action will be taken in regard to "fake" universities and diploma mills.

—It is said that gifts to the University of Chicago amounting to about $4,000,000 will be announced at a dinner of the Alumni Association at New York, to be held late in March. This probably means that Mr. Rockefeller's offer to give dollar for dollar up to $2,000,000 for every contribution up to January 1, 1900, has been met, realizing $4,000,000 to the University.

—Gen. Wood has astonished and delighted the Cuban editors by subscribing for their papers and asking them to send their bills to him, personally, every month. A Havana paper says: "It is the first time in the history of the island where a governor-general has either paid or offered to pay a newspaper subscription." If any additional proof were needed that Gen. Wood is the right man in the right place the above incident furnishes it. There is no way to stand in with the editorial fraternity like paying one's subscription. It indicates a nobility of character, in their judgment, out of all proportion to the bulk of the financial transaction.

—We print this week a revised and corrected program of the Indianapolis Congress. Preserve this for future reference. Look over the splendid themes to be discussed, and the splendid men who are to discuss them It will be worth more than a whole homiletic library to the young preacher, or to the unfinished preacher regardless of age. It will be a good school of the prophets, and will be profitable to our schools. It is not for preachers alone, but for all who feel that they have something to impart to their brethren.

—The New Liberator is the name of a new paper recently started in Chicago by a Y. P. C. T. U., 119, The Temple, in the interest of the million votes pledge, for the temperance movement. If you would know more about this movement send to the same address for literature.

—The Interdenominational Evangel for March apologizes to its readers for having permitted a reference to baptism as taught by one of the religious bodies, in its columns and promises to "go and sin no more." We never expected to see baptism discussed in the Evangel, or any other interdenominational paper, as for that matter, but we were not aware that they had got so far away from the Bible and primitive Christianity that they regard it a sin to permit even the mention of such a subject in their columns. The paper that refuses to declare the whole council of God in the matter of salvation certainly places itself in an unenviable if not a compromising condition.

—Ralph C. Sargent, Salem, Ohio, says that the offering of $40, which that church recently made, was for the Ministerial Relief Fund instead of Foreign Missions as we reported. That church will be in line for the Foreign Mission Offering also on the first Sunday in March.

—In the article, "The Remission of Sins—What Does it Mean?" by W. H. Thomas, of Fulton, Mo., which appeared in our edition for Feb. 15th, the little word "no" changes the meaning of a sentence to the opposite of what the author wrote. The sentence is this: "There is no such thing as formal and real righteousness." The no should be ommitted.

—Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Pittsburg, Pa., Feb. 26, 1900.
Thirty-seven added again to-day. All confessions but four; 103 to date. Continuing. C. L. Thurgood, pastor. CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

It is somewhat remarkable that there should be the same number of additions, 37, on the first and second Sundays of Bro. Scoville's meeting. This meeting is being held in the Central Church of Pittsburg and is now only in its second week. The meeting in Allegheny City, in which there were 272 additions, must have shaken the entire city of Pittsburg. All will rejoice at such successes, first, because it demonstrates that our larger cities can be evangelized, and in the second place, that we have men who are beginning to understand the problem of city evangelization. Let the good work proceed.

—The Daily News, Denver, Col., Feb. 19th, contains an outline of a sermon by Bruce Brown, pastor Central Christian Church of that city, on "Relics of Barbarism." Bro. Brown certainly did not have to look far nor search long for material for a sermon on that theme. It is only in a very general way that we can even be called a Christian nation. Relics of Barbarism are neither antiquated things nor yet relegated to their place, but painfully abounding in daily life. When we think of recent occurences in one of our states and of the wars and rumors of wars and other things we are almost tempted to say that a series of sermons on the renaissance of barbarism would be in order.

—Christian England laughed when Sydney Smith sneered at William Carey as a "consecrated cobbler," going out on a fool's errand to convert the heathen. Carey died, aged seventy-three years. He was visited on his deathbed by the Bishop of India, the head of the Church of England in that land, who bowed his head and invoked the blessing of the dying missionary. The British authorities had denied to Carey a landing place on his first arrival in Bengal; but when he died, the government dropped all its flags to half mast in in honor of a man who had done more for India than any of her generals.—The Disciple, London, England.

And yet one of the accusations of England against the Boers in South Africa is that they opposed the earlier missionaries in that country. There seems to have been ground for Kipling's famous poem, "The Recessional,"—"Lest we for get; lest we forget."

—DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—$1,000 by 100 men and $100 by 1,000 men for Foreign Missions would make a glorious closing to this wonderful century, for a people with such manifest destiny before them as I see breaking upon us in the gray light of the new century. It would thrill the church, startle Christendom, shake the powers of this world, and set the pulse of Christian life and zeal throbbing with a new force. We are able. It ought to be done. What can and should be done must be done quickly. Amen!

Springfield, Mo., Feb. 18, 1900.

—The sixth annual convention of the Missouri State Missionary Association, auxiliary to the Cross Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle, a three years' course of systematic reading and study on missions in all lands, will be held in Cowgill, Mo., March 20-22. The program of this convention is built upon the course of study prescribed by the Cross Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle for the current year, and its subjects are of a vital character. The object of the Missouri State Missionary Association is to increase and deepen interest in missions in all of the evangelical missionary societies in Missouri, and to aid in promoting their growth and efficiency. Every organized missionary society in the state is entitled to two delegates. For a home during the convention write to Mrs. J. A. Linnville, Cowgill, Mo.

—Shame on us, that along with our Christian civilization which we are sending to our island possessions we are sending the accursed saloon, with all its blighting, soul-destroying, poverty-breeding and utterly demoralizing influence! A recent writer says: "Heathen Manila, that never knew a saloon, has had 430 of them thrust upon her by Christian America." If this be so, shame be upon us!

—Dr. Hillis, of Plymouth Pulpit, made this statement from his pulpit recently:

The newspapers represent Dr. Broughton, the revivalist, as affirming that Prof. Briggs and all the higher critics will burn in hell forever. Mr. Porter, the associate pastor of Plymouth, is the embodiment of toleration, charity aud liberty. His refusal to announce Dr. Broughton's services was a protest against bigotry and cruelty. So long as there are saloons, brothels and poorhouses to be destroyed, good men should refrain from crusades against others equally Christian, earnest and devoted.

Whatever one may think of Dr. Broughton's theology, it is quite evident that he is lacking in that which is even of more importance than a sound theology, viz., Christian charity and courtesy. The last sentence of Dr. Hillis, above, is worthy of all emphasis.

—In a letter from Pres. Josephus Hopwood, of Milligan College, Milligan, Tenn., "referring to the reminiscences of the past," how from the little "Echo" the "great CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has come to the world," he adds:

May the Lord give you, and all of us, wisdom to exercise the greatest liberty, but always within a well-grounded faith in Jesus Christ as the direct incarnation of the life and character of God, trusting fully that his resurrection from the dead has shown him to be the Son of God in a sense different from our own sonship—in a way that gave him glory with the Father before the world was. We become like him as we let his life and character come into ours. The figure of the vine and the branches is the same as Paul's thought of "God working in us both to will and to do his good pleasure." Secure within these truths we may exercise great freedom in following thoughts of God through nature and revelation, but even here we may be bounded by our love for those who do not fully understand that Christianity is a life and growth, as the vine and the branches. But after all, there still remains the obligation to let in new light and to walk in it and to speak the further truths which it shows, but in love.

This quotation shows how well our brother has caught the spirit and purpose of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. No doubt thousands of our readers, like him, appeciate the work we are striving to accomplish, and know something of the difficulties which are in the way. We trust, too, he is not alone in praying that we may have wisdom from above to guide us in the right way and method.

—Next to keeping politics out of religion is the fearful mistake of keeping good men out of politics. Our country to-day is suffering untold evil from these two tricks of the devil. Unscrupulous men ask no better favor of the public than the enforcement of these two fallacious rules. We think the following words from the Hon. S. M. Jones to the point on this subject, whatever one may think of his political doctrines:

The thing that we call politics, which so many good but misguided people only regard with contempt and speak of with a sneer, has really to do with the most sacred relations of life; and the man who piously says that he is above having anything to do with politics simply says that he is above having anything to do with adjusting the relations between his fellowmen, and to my mind there is no more dangerous citizen or dangerous class of citizens to-day than the Pharisees of business and religion who, counting themselves holier than other men, are so absorbed either in the business of money-getting or self-adoration that they frankly say "they have no time" to meddle with politics. If it is true that politcs are "dirty," and good and pious men are too good and too pious and too busy to lend a hand in the work of cleaning up the political situation what hope is there for our political institutions?

—The question of distinction between Christians and worldly people is not a question for the pulpit nor preachers. The members of the church alone can settle this question so that it will stay settled.

—The Christian News, Bethany, Neb., Feb. 14, contains an article from J. L. Stine on "The Comforter" that is admirable for its simplicity and clearness. It is in the form of questions and answers, the answers being chiefly quotations of Scripture. For instance, take question No. 6, as follows:

Was He for the apostles only? "For the promise is to you and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh. . . . And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit and they shall prophesy" (Acts 2:17-18). These apostles, then, to whom he was promised declare, "He was for all."

—Every church should take a pardonable pride in reaching its full apportionment. This can be done if a little effort is made.

—The work is being greatly enlarged this year. An effort is being made to go forward. We have full confidence the churches will heartily second this step.

—The offering should be sent promptly Monday morning, March 5th, to F. M. Rains, treasurer, Box 884, Cincinnati, O., who will at once return a proper receipt. Please give local name of church when different from post office Send by bank draft, post office order, express order, or registered letter. The Foreign Society is compelled to pay for the collection of all personal checks.

—Remember, the fields of the Foreign Society are Japan, China, India, Africa, Turkey, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Cuba, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands. The number of missionaries is now 229, and about twelve more will go out in the near future.

—In commemoration of the Silver Jubilee Year of the Foreign Society the Silver Jubilee League has been inaugurated. Every church that raises $25 will be entitled to membership in this league, and will receive a certificate of membership. A church will be entitled to one certificate for each $25 raised. The church may select the names of the parties who are to receive the certificates, provided they are members of the Church of Christ. The certificate was appropriately and elegantly drawn by a competent artist, and will prove a valued souvenir of the Silver Jubilee Year. It is 11x14 inches. The league confidently expect to enroll at least 1,000 memberships. Any church, Endeavor Society or individual may become a member of the league by the payment of $25.

"Deeds Are Better Than Words."

What does Hood's Sarsaparilla do? The answer comes full-throated from a gigantic chorus of healthy men and happy women. "It does just what it claims to do." It purifies the blood as nothing else can. The number of those who answer thus is legion and their sentiment is unanimous.

Kidney Trouble—"Grip left me with severe pains in my back and kidneys. Could not walk without support. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and was soon relieved. Am also cured of catarrh and indigestion." W. A. Reed, 17 Mowry Avenue, East Providence, R. I.

E. W. Brickert.

The following sketch of E. W. Brickert, whose picture we furnish this week, is sent us by a mutual friend:

Mr. Brickert is a native of Indiana, born at Bedford, Feb. 21, 1863. The first 22 years of his life were spent on a farm. He was educated in the common schools and taught three terms in the district, beginning when 18. He then studied in the Valparaiso Normal, and afterwards entered Butler College, from which he graduated six years later, having completed the classical and theological courses, and ranked among the best students. The Bible work was all done in Hebrew, Greek, Latin and German; no English texts permitted in the class room. In September,1886,he united with the Christian Church and began to preach shortly afterward in Michigan, returning in one year to Sheridan, Ind., where he preached while attending college. The church in four years doubled its membership.

He was called to Washington, Ind., in 1895, and his pastorate there was marked with great success. A membership of 100 in two years grew to 350, and one of the largest church buildings in Indiana was erected. It was dedicated Feb. 21, '97, by Z. T. Sweeney, who said of the pastor: "From what I saw of Bro. Brickert and his work, I think he possesses a happy combination of pastor and preacher that is not often found. He is fitted in an eminent degree for successful work in Christ."

In response to the urgent appeal from the little church at Boise, Idaho, he took charge of the work there, which was very promising, 12 being baptized the last week. But just as he had gotten his work in hand he lost his wife and was obliged to take his little children to relatives in Michigan. He was then called to Red Oak, Ia., to set the church in order. While there the church was reorganized and about 40 people added, doubling the wealth of the church. Not only was a strong work done here, but six neighboring congregations were assisted by Bro. Brickert and 35 people added to these. In response to a call to Sullivan, Ill., he closed his work in Red Oak and accepted the call. Just before leaving for his new field, he was married to Miss Zaidee Shipley, one of the most popular soloists in the state, who is a model preacher's wife. She is not only a great singer, but is doing successful work as a preacher. Under the leadership of their new pastor Sullivan has taken on new life; 25 have been added to the church, every department is in fine working order, the elegant new church edifice is almost completed and everybody happy. During 1899 the pastor preached 230 sermons, gave 10 lectures, rode 6,000 miles on the train, 1,100 in a buggy, made 700 calls at home, assisted nine weak congregations and received 80 people into the church. Few of the younger men of the brotherhood have done more for the weak churches than Bro. B. He is an untiring student, spending each forenoon in his library, making a specialty of the heaviest works of theology and evangelistic literature, but gets his inspiration and sermon matter from the old Book, to which he is deeply devoted and unflinchingly loyal. He spends his afternoons among his flock.

Personal Mention.

T. H. Kuhn has been employed to preach for th church in Windfall, Ind., for the ensuing year.

Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapoli Ind., celebrated Washington's birthday by visitin the Christian Publishing Co. and the office the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We commend h wisdom

Sherman B. Moore, of Compton Heights Churc this city, read an interesting paper at our preacl ers' meeting in this office on last Monday on th subject, "Is the Act of Conversion the same in a Ages and Conditions of Mankind?"

Marion Stevenson, of Decatur, Illinois, say "G. L. Wharton presented India's needs to the E ward St. Church. Individual responses to th amount of $66 were made to the famine fun His visit was a spiritual blessing."

Bro. Hess, pastor of the church in Greene, Ia writes encouragingly of the work in that plac Various activities have been organized and ar doing good work. The church will observe a missionary offering days this year.

The church at Vinton, Ia., voluntarily raise Bro. Nichols' salary, nearly three hundred dollar without waiting for the expiration of his firs year. They feel greatly indebted to him for hi efficient help in their building enterprise.

W. E. Harlow, Parsons, Kas., writes that he i now in a position to again answer calls for meet ings, with his former singer, Miss Murphy. He i now in a meeting at Humboldt, Kas., with 2 added to date. Address him at Parsons, Kas.

F. H. Lemon, of Lake City, Iowa, says that th work there is moving nicely. Their splendid hous is now free from debt and they are still adding t the furniture. Bro. Lemon was invited to ope the Iowa Senate and House, the 16th and 17th, a chaplain.

H. M. Brooks goes from Paris, Ill., to Tuscola same state. The people of Paris regret to los Bro. Brooks, while those of Tuscola are rejoicin in their success in securing him. Bro. Brooks i a vigorous man in the use of the sword (of th Spirit) or the pen.

J. M. Russell, now in the life insurance busi ness, has consented to preach one Sunday pe month for the brethren at Carter Town, Col County, Mo., during the year, for his traveling ex penses only. His first appointment was Feb. 11th when two were added to the church.

B. B. Tyler, our Colorado correspondent, is writ ing a series of articles for The Disciple, a maga zine published in London, England, on "Peculiar ities of the Disciples." Brother Tyler is becom ing a recognized authority on the restoratio movement of the 19th century.

N. A. NcConnell, the pioneer preacher of Iowa recently delighted the church in Vinton with visit and a sermon. This church recently had fine meeting with home forces. The pastor, Jas T. Nichols, was assisted in his work by Wm. Pitt and a fine choir of singers of the congregation.

The work at Colorado City, under Flournoy Payne, starts off well. He began with the coming in of the new year. Bro. Payne is of the very best Kentucky Christian Church blood. He is grandson of John T. Johnson. While he preache in Colorado City, Bro. Payne will attend Colorad College, in Colorado Springs.

J. T. Boone, pastor First Church, Jacksonville Fla., says: "One of the members of the Firs Church, who came to us from the Methodists dur ing Bro. Martin's meeting, Bro. J. N. Bouta, ha been called as minister of the church at Oxford, Ala We regret to lose him, but trust he may do good work in our sister state."

Prof. J. Fraise Richard, president of Normal ollege, Washington, D. C., is to assist in the ayette (hio) Normal University summer school, eginning June 12th. Few men in the United tates are more highly endorsed as a teacher and rganizer than Prof. Richard. He is one of the remost educators of the land.

R. E. Dunlap, writing from Anaconda, Mont., eb. 12th, says: "Reopening of church here yes- rday by E. O. Tilborn, of Butte, under whose irection the inside of the church has been re- odeled and beautified. I began a meeting last ight to continue indefinitely. Bro. Minnick, of ndiana, has been secured for this church begin- ing March 1st."

Lura V. Thompson, national organizer of the C. . B. M., is working in Oklahoma in the interest f the C. W. B. M., and on Sunday, Feb. 18, filled he pulpit of the El Reno Christian Church, both orning and evening, and gave the address at the nion Frances E. Willard Memorial Service, held nder the auspices of the local W. C. T. U., at hree P. M. Large audiences were at each service.

Quite a number of our preachers are going to urope and Asia this spring and summer. Here another: P. H. Duncan, pastor of the church t Ludlow, Ky., sails the 10th of March, by way f the Strait of Gibraltar, visiting Egypt, Pales- ne, Asia Minor, Constantinople, Greece, Italy and ther points in Europe. Bro. Duncan resigns his ork at Ludlow after nearly nine years service ere.

The church in Kansas, Ill., recently initiated its ew pastor, Bro. Thomas, with appropriate install- tion services, conducted by C. C. Griffith, one of he elders of the church, and followed by an en- yable reception given by the members. At the stallation services the other ministers were resent and participated in short addresses. The nging, by Miss Mountjoy, of Charleston, was also ne of the enjoyable features of the occasion.

F. N. Calvin has resigned at Milwaukee to ccept a unanimous call from the church at olorado Springs, Col , and will enter upon his ork there the first Lord's day in April. In a ersonal letter Bro. Calvin speaks kindly and even enderly of the church in Milwaukee, which he as learned to love, and hopefully of its outlook. Ve are sure the church at Colorado Springs has ade no mistake in calling Bro Calvin to its pas- rate.

D. R. Dungan, of the Mt. Cabanne Church, is iving a series of lectures at the Fourth Christian hurch, this city, on "Travels in Palestine." The rst lecture was given on Tuesday evening, Feb. 0th. E. T. McFarland, the pastor of the church, s making a fine impression upon his people and he community, and if the church can manage to eep him in the field will do a fine work. Their hurch Bulletin, issued weekly, shows that the hurch is alive and at work in all of its depart- ents.

J. T. Ogle, of Corrollton, Mo., has resigned. he announcement, on Feb. 18th, was a painful rprise to the congregation. The church official oard felt that the church was unable to pay the alary which it had been paying and Bro. Ogle elt that he could not labor for less with justice o his responsibilities. No trouble or friction hatever existed. Bro. Ogle has served the arrollton Church of Christ for five years. He as not decided upon his future field. It is re- orted that an effort is being made to meet his alary and have him reconsider his resignation, hich we hope will be done.

Bro. Carey E. Morgan's pastorate at the Seventh treet Christian Church, Richmond, Va., began ve months ago, in September, 1899, and since hen there have been fifty persons added to the embership. His labors have been richly blessed f the Master, and he is constantly endearing him- elf to the people by his devotion and piety. He ossesses strong pulpit ability and is equally effi- ient and successful as a pastor. Under his lead- rship the church is growing in spirituality and in ood works. He is a regular attendant at the essions of the Sunday-school and Christian En- eavor and is identified with all departments of he church work. The congregations Sunday orning and night are large and the Wednesday ight prayer-meeting is helpful and well attended. he pastor and people are in hearty sympathy ith each other. Sister Morgan has also taken old of the work with a will and occupies a warm lace in the affections of the people. This pleas- ng message we have from one of his members.

J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill., says: "I recently had the pleasure of listening to a course of lectures continuing one week, day and night, delivered by Elder T. A. Hedges in the Christian Church at Macomb, Ill. These lectures were both entertaining and instructive to all who heard them. I can conscientiously recommend them to any church or any community, and especially to any church that needs to be roused up out of a state of lethargy and spiritual inactivity. Send for Bro. Hedges. He will do you good. His terms are easy. Any church can comply with them. Address Elder T. A. Hedges, LaGrange, Mo."

—The Rev. William Henry Green, D. D., LL. D., the distinguished Old Testament scholar and professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature in Princeton University, died at his home in Princeton, N. J., on Saturday, February 10. Dr. Green was easily the leading conservative scholar and critic in the United States, if not in the world, and was the author of a large number of works along the line of his studies. These works are mostly of a controversial character, but he is said to have been a man of genial disposition and of childlike simplicity in faith and piety. He accepted most heartily the principles of the Higher Criticism, and claimed that these principles, fairly applied, confirmed and established the authority and integrity of the Old Testament and the Word of God. He had just passed his seventy-fifth anniversary, and had been suffering for some time from an incurable disease, though his friends had hoped that he would recover from his recent attack.

Jesse P. McKnight preached his farewell sermon at Peoria, Ill., Feb. 18th, and assumes the pastorate of the church at Oskaloosa, Ia., the first Sunday in March. During his three years and eight months at Peoria, 341 members were added, all of them at regular services excepting 28. Loss by death or removal, 114, leaving a net gain of 227 members. Not only numerically, but financially and spiritually has the church made great progress. The missionary offerings grew from $175, in '96, to $254, in '99, while $1,500 was paid on the church building, aside from general expenses. Preaching at two mission points, recently inaugurated. The church presented Bro. and Sister McKnight a handsome and costly gift upon their departure, and tendered them a farewell reception upon an elaborate scale. The City Ministerial Association, of which Bro. McKnight was president, passed suitable resolutions in his honor, the press of the city gave due recognition of his ability, while a souvenir edition of the Church Messenger contained two poems expressing the sorrow of the church at his departure.

J. S. Myers, pastor of the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., bears the following testimony to one of our Missouri singers: "Prof. C. E. Millard, of Maysville, Mo , has been with me in a meeting in the First Church, as song evangelist for sixteen evenings, and every one has been greatly pleased with his singing and bearing as a Christian gentleman. No man ever sang with greater a ceptance in gospel work with the First Church than Prof. Millard. Bilhorn, Root and other distinguished gospel singers of America have sung with us, but none of whom charmed our people with the sweetness of his voice and with the wonderful effectiveness of his message as he. He is easily the equal, and by many thought to be superior as an evangelistic singer, to any that have sung in the churches of Philadelphia. During his stay with us he was invited to and sang most acceptably in the union meetings at the Heidelberg Reform Church, conducted by Dr. Wood, of London. He goes from our work to assist Bro. Holmes, pastor of the Sixth Church in West Philadelphia, in a special meeting. The First Church will have him again."

New York Letter.

Miss Helen F. Clark, director of "The Evangel Band and Mission Work," doing work among the Chinese and Italians, of New York City, was at our prayer-meeting at the 169th Street Church, Feb. 14, and gave us a most instructive and inspiring lecture on her experience in Chinatown, this city. Miss Clark was for many years associated with Dr. Schaufler in the work of the New York Mission Society, but some years ago became special director of this special work. This missionary enterprise is sustained altogether by voluntary contributions, and the Lord has graciously blessed her labors,and his people have supported her. Perhaps her best work is done among the the Chinese women, of whom there are some sixty in the Chinese district. Although dwelling in New York City, they have only heathen surroundings from their birth, and are so secluded by custom that they see nothing of any other religion than their own. Unless some one takes the gospel to them and patiently wins them they will never know any more of Christianity than if they were hidden in the heart of the Chinese Empire. Several of these poor "shut-ins" have been brought into the knowledge of salvation. Miss Clark also superintends street preaching all through the summer on the corner of Mott and Pell Streets, where a native Chinese minister does the preaching. She also conducts services for the Italians, of whom she says they seem to be especially open to the preaching of the gospel and are eager to learn the Protestant views and reasons therefor. And besides, she carries on kindergartens for Chinese and Italian children.

Miss Clark recently published an article in the New York Herald on the Religious Condition of New York, in which she says: "In New York there are 501,116 Protestants and adherents, and 547,549 Catholics (or 27 per cent.), and Mohammedans (claimed) 300." In Brooklyn she figures that there are 390,870 Protestants and adherents, and Catholics, etc., 290,700 (or 25 per cent.). Total nonreligious population of both cities, 1,372,009. Total population of both, 3,102,544. This article has aroused considerable discussion among those particularly interested, and will result in great good, no doubt.

J. M. Philputt is holding a series of evangelistic services in his church on 119th Street, in which different ministers, Disciples and others, are doing the preaching. B. Q. Denham has announced a special series of meetings of two weeks' duration, to begin March 4th. He will do the preaching himself. John L. Kevill is planning for a similar effort at the Second Church, Brooklyn. We hope all these meetings will result in the salvation of many souls and revive the life of the churches. The band of Disciples at Newark, N. J., have arranged with the pastors of Greater New York for weekly preaching, perhaps on Thursday evenings, at their mission rooms, corner 14th St. and Park Ave. It is to be hoped that a minister may soon be located in that city to lead the forces on to success. On Tuesday eve, the 20th, the Rev. Marcus Daniel, a native of Kurdistan, a Disciple of Christ, lectured in the 169th St. Church on "The History and Peculiarities of the Peoples of Persia and Kurdistan, and Mission Work Among Them." He illustrated his lecture with stereopticon views and appeared in native Persian costume. He is in this country endeavoring to enlist support for a proposed mission school in Persia. A copy of the Westfield (N. J.) Republican has just fallen into our hands. Its platform and purposes seem to be somewhat peculiar. It is edited and published by Willard H. Morse, M. D., who announces the following as the platform of the paper: "We stand for and support the principles of the Republican party. We aim to give all the good news of Westfield and vicinity. We promote the work of spreading and teaching the Scriptures, as conducted by the Disciples' Mission."

Evidently Bro. Morse believes in uniting religion and politics, two forces which should never be divorced, provided they are of the right kind. We do not question his rectitude in the matters of religion, but would ask the privilege of considering for a time the political aspects of the question. Dr. Morse, however, is doing good service, from all reports, in preaching and carrying on this mission work in Westfield, N. J.

On Lord's day, Feb. 18, we came into possession of what is now our third Sunday-school. The Rev. W. G. Coker, a Baptist preacher, opened a mission on Prospect Ave., near Home Street, about five blocks from our church last summer and has been preaching and conducting a Sunday-school in that section ever since. He came to me about two weeks since and proposed turning all his work over to me, as he had received a call up the state. After several conferences, in which we freely and frankly discussed all the features of the situation, it was finally decided that I should take the work and open it as an afternoon Sunday-school in the lecture room of our church. The mission has an enrollment of about 70, the greater part of whom will come into our work. The transfer was made the 18th, which on account of the inclement weather and prevalent illness cut down the attendance to something like half. In this transfer we get all five of the classes and three teachers, the pianist and a cornetist. Beside this school proper, there will be, I think, a transfer of several families into the sphere of influence exerted by our church, some of whom we hope will come into our fellowship in the course of time. This now puts three Sunday-schools in connection with and under the control of our work, in which there are almost 500 scholars and teachers. This makes a large field for work—much hard work, which if properly done ought to bring splendid results in the course of a few years.

Dr. Chas.H.Parkhurst has just published and sent out an appeal to ministers of the gospel asking them to consider seriously the excuses being made for the waging of warfare by our army in the Philippines. He takes the ground that we have no right to hem these poor heathen up in a corner with our guns and subdue them in order to convert them to Christ. This he says many of the ministers, in effect, are saying as an excuse for the war now being waged; and others try to justify these Mohammedan methods by trying to show it is to our commercial advantage. The subjugation of these people will increase our trade and enrich our nation. He discards all this as far beneath the notice of the minister of Christ. Dr. Parkhurst very truly claims that it is the preacher's duty to ascertain the will of God as revealed in his Word and proclaim it. And certainly the cause of salvation is nowhere to be propagated by the sword or the gun. We think with Dr. Parkhurst that many preachers would do well to restudy this whole question and their relation to it.

Colorado Letter.

I am not at all certain that I can give you all the information desired. As to the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee, I can tell you in a minute what you want to know.

The names of the members of the committee, with their church affiliations, are as follows: B. F. Jacobs, Baptist; A. F. Schauffler, Presbyterian; A. E. Dunning, Congregationalist; E. B. Kephart, United Brethren; John R. Pepper, Southern Methodist; John R. Sampey, Southern Baptist; Mosheim Rhodes, Lutheran; John Potts, Canadian Methodist; J. S. Stahr, Reformed; J. I. D. Hinds, Cumberland Presbyterian; B. B. Tyler, Disciple of Christ; H. W. Warren, Methodist Episcopal; W. W. Moore, Southern Presbyterian; E. I. Rexford, Protestant Episcopal. Warren Randolph, who died in December, was a Baptist. Dr. Randolph had been a member of the committee since its organization. Until within the last two or three years he was its secretary. His death is a serious loss to our Sunday-school work. He was both efficient and diligent. Mr. Jacobs is the only member of the committee who has been with it from the beginning. All the members are preachers except Mr. Jacobs and Colonel Pepper. Dr. Schauffler is superintendent of the work of the New York City Mission Society. He is active in Sunday-school work—especially as a teacher of teachers. Dr. Dunning is editor of the Congregationalist, Boston. E. B. Kephart is a bishop in the United Brethren Church. Mr. Pepper is a business man, but is prominent in the Sunday-school work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. John R. Sampey is a professor in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky. He was selected to take the place on the committee made vacant by the death of John A. Broaddus—I feel like saying, Broaddus the beloved. Dr. Sampey's specialty as a scholar and teacher is the Old Testament. He is conservative in relation to the literary questions connected with the study of the Bible. Dr. Rhodes is pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, St. Louis. John Potts, D. D., is the chairman of the committee. He has charge of the work of education carried on by the Methodists in Canada. Dr. Potts' home is in Toronto. J. S. Stahr is a professor in a college supported by the Reformed Church. Dr. Hinds is also engaged in educational work. Until recently he was a professor in a Cumberland Presbyterian College, located at Lebanon, Tenn. H. W. Warren, D. D., is one of the bishops in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Drs. Moore and Rexford are teachers, the former in Virginia, the latter in Canada. Mr. Jacobs is engaged in the real estate business in Chicago and is superintendent of the Sunday-school in Emmanuel Baptist Church.

The members of the committee serve without financial compensation. The expenses of travel and entertainment, when attending meetings of the committee, are defrayed by houses which publish notes and comments on the selected lessons. The work of the committee is to select portions of Scripture to be studied in order to obtain a general knowledge of the Bible in six years. The lessons are arranged in chronological order. The present series of lessons began with January first of this year and will continue six years. Eighteen months will be given to a study of the life of the Christ. Three and a half of the six years will be given to a study of the New Testament, two and a half to the Old Testament. The committee is now at work on lessons for 1903. Some of the comments on the work of the committee are funny when one knows what the work is and how it is done. A few years ago, for instance, a rival series of lessons entered the field. It did not, nor does it now, appreciably affect the use of the International Sunday-school Lessons. But at a certain point a shout was raised and proclamation was made that the Lesson Committee, feeling the pressure, was yielding to the demands of the rival! As a matter of fact, the lessons which caused this outburst of joy were agreed upon before the aforesaid rival had been heard from!!

The next meeting of the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee will be held in New York, the twenty-fifth day of April. I am sure you will be interested in the method of procedure. This is the manner in which the work is done:

The meetings are held in a hotel where the members are lodged, that there may be no loss of time. Three sessions are held each day. Each meeting, of course, begins and ends with prayer. The first item, probably, in the next meeting will be reports of committees. Then the reading of communications containing requests, criticisms, suggestions. Then a review of the work of the last meeting in the light of criticisms and suggestions made by the corresponding members of the committee residing in London. The names of these are: J. Munro Gibson, W. H. Groser, C. H. Kelly, S. Green, Charles Waters and Edward Towers, all of London, all active Sunday-school men, the first four named being ordained ministers of the Word. The initiative is with the American committee, as is also the final decision. After a selection has been made of lessons, lesson titles, memory verses and golden texts by the American committee, the work is sent to the London committee for examination, criticism and suggestion. These criticisms and suggestions are considered and a final decision is reached. The lessons are then sent to those whose business is is to prepare notes and comments.

Frequently, the committee has face-to-face conferences with leading Sunday-school men and women. These conferences are perfectly free and frank. The constant effort is to secure the greatest good to the greatest number in this study of the Bible.

The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee consists of—or did until the decease of Dr. Randolph—fifteen persons. The aggregate membership of the churches represented on the committee is 15,324,000. The membership of the smaller denominations not represented is 733,000. Each member of the lesson committee, therefore, represents more than a million church members.

The next International Sunday-school Convention will be held in Denver, in 1902. These meetings are held once in three years. The last convention met in Atlanta, Georgia, last April.

The foregoing probably furnishes the information that you desire as to the above matters. Other topics in which you are interested will be considered next week. B. B. TYLER.

Texas Letter.

Andrew Carnegie is one of the wealthiest and wisest men among us, and the following wholesome words should be heeded by young men. They were spoken to a congregation of young men in New York: "I was born to the blessed heritage of poverty. I hope the heritage of riches has not been laid upon any of you at your time of life. When it is laid upon a young man, and notwithstanding all its great temptations, he acts his part well, he is entitled to double honor. He is the very salt of the earth. We hear a good deal in these days about poverty—oh, abolish poverty! But the saddest day civilization ever saw will be that in which poverty doesn't win its way. God doesn't call his great sons from the palace."

The cotton mill movement is becoming a real thing in Texas. Not less than a dozen towns and cities are earnestly and enthusiastically reaching out for a mill. Corsicana seems to have hers secured, and it is only a question of a short time when the spindles will be buzzing in that busy little city. McKinney, another one of our best towns, is moving in a businesslike way for a mill. Hillsboro, Waco, Longview, Henderson and other places are at work in the matter. The cotton field and the cotton mill are too far apart. The field cannot be carried up to the mill in New England, but the mill can and will be brought down to the field in "Dixie."

J. H. Marshall has had a fine meeting at Devine, with 41 additions, a church of 82 members organized and a pastor, J. S. Bonham, of Springfield, O., called.

Tyler is the most important town in Eastern Texas; but our church there, owing to a series of misfortunes, has not kept pace with the city. But the outlook now is brighter. A. J. Bush, sent by our state board, has inspired them with hope and has raised money enough to complete their house. The C. W. B. M. and our board will help them to employ a pastor, who it is hoped, will soon be on the ground.

Galveston has just closed a good meeting, with 40 additions. Pastor Haston was assisted by Sanders and Douthitt. Lowder also took a hand in the fight. Remembering that the little church had a debt of about $600, and having planted it a few years since with his own hands, he thought it an opportune time for a fatherly act, and he slipped away from Austin, and ran down to the rescue, and the money was raised.

Archer is a small town "away out West." It has no preacher, but they have additions all the same. Why not? When the church was driven from Jerusalem, the disciples went everywhere preaching the Word. Why not the same thing to-day?

C. W. Worden has been to Mahomet and wheeled a "Firm Foundation" church into line and added 26 to this number. Much of this kind of work is to be done in Texas.

Sam Jones doesn't like "Christian Science." In a late lecture he was scoring first one ism and then another, when he came to this last foolish fallacy. He seemed to be preparing for a terrible blow. He paused, pulled his little moustache, set his long under jaw, and his eyes flashed fire as he cried: "And Christian Science!" But to the surprise of all he again paused, and stood for a moment in perfect silence, and then said: "No, I must not do it, for my father always taught me never to strike an idiot or a cripple."

Albert Buxton has been called to the pastorate of the Hillsboro Church, and it is said that he will accept the call. This leaves Add-Ran University without a chancellor, but it supplies a leader in a very important field. We are rather glad to hear this, for colleges can succeed without chancellors, but there seems to be no substitute for the pastor.

The Third Church, at Ft. Worth, was dedicated on Feb. 18. It was a great day for that vigorous young congregation. J. S. Myers, of Philadelphia, preached the sermon, and it was well done. He will hold a short meeting for them. He can beg as well as preach. This was shown when his appeal for money brought $7,000, which only lacks about $2,000 of providing for this debt. Homer T. Wilson, the pastor, and his devoted people are on the hilltops of joy, and we rejoice with them.

A Word From Philadelphia.

Seldom in the Eastern cities does the ideal of the church, held by us, receive definite recognition, and when recognition is given in the midst of a religious conservatism, such as that of the City of Brotherly Love, it sends a ray of encouragement into the lives of those who are working and waiting patiently for the time when the religious world will catch up with ideas advanced by the Disciples of Christ. At a recent banquet, held in this city, at which a large number of clergymen were gathered, a remark was made by the presiding officer, a prominent layman in one of the denominations, which no doubt surprised many of the ministers present. The speaker quoted a statement made in the New York Independent to the effect that the most enthusiastic and rapidly growing body of Christians were the Disciples of Christ. There was but one of our pastors present, but he noted with pleasure the remarks of the speaker and the manner and place in which the great cause was honored. A Congregationalist clergyman spoke to him after the meeting and congratulated him on being a pastor of a Christian Church. He said, "The people are ready to hear your plea, and you have the great opportunity of presenting the world with the church unhampered by creed or dogma."

Is not the heart of the world directed to the study of God's Word as it never was before? and are not men finding between the covers of the New Testament an example of Christian living that is larger than creeds and nearer to the human heart than "isms?" Let us quote from an article in the January Outlook:

Is there not a new import to-day to the question, Who is a Christian? And are not the rolls of the kingdom of heaven, as the church has compiled them in the past, open to revision? That we have Luther or Calvin or Wesley to our father is nothing; for God is able to raise up of the stones of the Tenderloin District children unto Luther and Calvin. He does not need the church, but the church needs him, and needs to learn ever anew, and to heed with ever-new courage and consecration his will. "The history of the church in the nineteenth century," says the great German historian, Frederick Nippold, "is less than ever before synonymous with the history of Christianity." Can the church allow such a judgment of her to be registered in the twentieth century? It is in America that the great opportunity of Protestantism in the twentieth century lies. With our material resources, with our fundamental Anglo-Saxon endowment of character, with our traditions of political and religious autonomy, with our democratic institutions, with our church separated from any embarrassing subsidies of state, we are better able clearly to conceive, earnestly to discuss and effectively to meet the tremendous scientific, ethical and social problems of Pretestantism which lie before us in the new century. The future belongs neither to a creed nor to a sect. Inscrutable authorities once universally bowed to are now almost universally questioned. Infallible standards are not exempted from searching criticism and honest judgment by any desperate appeal to their antiquity of tradition, nor is the voice of reason drowned by the fanatic's shout of infidel.

A meeting was recently held in one of the large city churches as a memorial service to Dwight L. Moody. Addresses were made by Drs. Hoyt, Tomkins, Dana and the Honorable John Wanamaker. The song service was conducted by Mr. Sankey, the evangelist. People of as many shades of belief as were represented by the ministers on the platform united in their efforts to honor the memory of the great, large-hearted Christian leader. Incidents of like nature reveal the ease with which denominational scruples can be laid aside and great attributes of character honored.

At a meeting in the First Christian Church, on January 16th, there was an enthusiastic reorganization of the Disciples' Association into the Philadelphia Christian Missionary Society. Representatives of the First, Third, Fourth, Sixth and Kensington Christian Churches and the Beth-Eden Mission were present. The membership has been divided into annual, honorary and life members and life directors. By this means there is assured an income of $500 annually to be devoted to co-operative work in the city. The reports of several of the representatives show that larger accommodations are needed for Sunday-school work, particularly in the newer churches and in the mission. The outlook for strong co-operation is brighter than at any time in the three previous years of organization. V. B. B.

What an Indian Famine Means.

To many millions of human beings in India it means actual starvation and death. The latest word from that famine-stricken land is that FOUR MILLIONS were living on the government dole of three cents a day, and that the number was increasing over 100,000 every week. It means the complete destruction of all that was home to these millions. It means the abandoning of whole villages and wandering in search of bread. It means the gradual wasting away of flesh and strength, and finally the last torturing stages of hopeless death. It means mothers seeing their children starve to death before their eyes, with the same fate awaiting them. It means cholera and pestilence and fever. It means more than words can tell. The poetry of Longfellow is more than realized:

"Oh, the famine and the fever!
Oh, the wasting of the famine!
Oh, the blasting of the fever!
Oh, the wailing of the children!
Oh, the anguish of the women!
All the earth was sick and famished;
Hungry was the air around them;
Hungry was the sky above them;
And the hungry stars from heaven,
Like the eyes of wolves, glared at them."

To our missionaries, 41 in number in India, it means an opportunity to show the spirit of Christ by doing as Jesus would do. It means the breaking down of centuries of caste prejudice. It means the preaching of the gospel of pity and power to save. It means the giving of life to dying men, women and children. It means the confirmation of the Word as if by miracle. It is the golden opportunity of speaking in a language none can mistake. It is this and much more, provided the missionaries have the means put in their hands of feeding the starving. Otherwise, it means torture next to starvation themselves.

To the Christian people of this land of plenty, it means a practical test of our Christianity. It means that we may know now what will meet us in the great day of judgment—"I was hungry and ye gave me meat: I was hungry and ye gave me no meat." It means that we may understand why our land flows with more than milk and honey. "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." It means that we may humble ourselves under the hand of God, for all our plenty is his gift. It means that we shall see how dependent we are on him who sends the early and latter rain. It means that as we are sending the Bread of Life to starving souls, we, like our blessed Master, will not neglect the starving bodies. He says to us: "Give ye them to eat." One dollar will feed 30 men one day, or one man a month. One man said, "I will feed 10 men a month," and gave $10. And there is not many who will do this; some more, some less. In the name of the starving in India, in the name of the Lord, I beseech you to heed this now. Let your offering be above and help to swell your regular offerings. Send to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O., or myself at Hiram, O., but send now. G. L. WHARTON.

Henrietta Minerva Tomkins, apposel ov Chrischun Syunce and mishunerry to the benited members ov the "old cherches," iz now in Beanville.

Missis Tomkins iz the same woman I met when I wuz visiting my dawter over to Smith Center, and had the roomaticks. She had calculaitid on stayin considrabel longer at Smith Center, but a unforchunait littel eppysode cut short her stay. Three childern ov one ov her converts wuz tuk with scarlit feever. Henrietta Minerva wuz sent for, and undertook to cure 'em. But somhow her incantashuns diddent werk jest rite in this case. In vane did she reed thoze childern chapter after chapter ov "Syunce and Helth," Missis Eddy's book; in vane did she ernestly and sollemly declair that "awl iz mind; mind iz awl." Thoze childern perzistid in the delooshun that they had the scarlit fever, until they finelly cum to bleeve that they wuz ded. The offishels ov Smith Center, not understandin the grate prinsipels ov relidjus liberty, thretened to make trubbel about the matter, and Henrietta Minerva shook the dust ov Smith Center from her feat, and hurridly departid for Beanville.

The ferst thing she did after gettin cumfertably settled at the hotel, wuz to arrange for her leckcher. She hired Bunkum Hall, had a lot ov handbills distribootid, and put notises in the paper. She anownsed that the admishun wood be free. This assured a good attendunce. The peepel ov Beanville are grate on free shows, or ennything elce that iz free. If you want to heer hearty, hole-soled, enthoosyastick singin, you want to be in enny ov the cherches in our town when the preecher gives out that grand old him:

Herald the tidings—salvashun iz free!

The nobel sentiment ov that him seems to strike the good peepel ov our town jest rite.

So Henrietta Minerva Tomkins had a good crowd out. Before time for the leckcher to begin the hall wuz packt full, and peeple wuz standin outside, not abel to get in. Me and Betsy got thare erly, and got good seets way up frunt, whare we cood see and heer good.

At last Missis Tomkins walked out on the platform, smiled a comprehensiv smile at the awjence, took a drink ov water out ov a glass and begun her speech. The ferst part ov it wuz jest too sweet and luvly for ennything! If I haddent herd her talk over to Smith Center I bleeve she wood hav fooled me like she neerly fooled sum ov her awjence. She jest rippeled along like Shady Crick duz, down at the ford, talkin about her ekstatick delite at havin the plezzure ov addressin sich a large and intellijent awjence of the cultivaitid peepel ov the bewtiful citty ov Beanville. Then she talked about the fatherhood ov God and the brutherhood ov man, sayin a lot ov things wich wuz verry pritty and verry true, but wich wuzzent Chrischun Syunce, speshully. Her intent wuz plane: She was tryin to make the peepel think that she wuz jest about orthodocks and that after awl, Chrischun Syunce wuzzent so bad. After we got home that nite, I asked my boy Zeke what he thot ov that part ov her talk, and he sed "she wuz jollyin the crowd to beat the band, and provin that she wuz a hot air generater ov the ferst magnitood." He awlso remarked that "as a slinger ov con talk she wuz an eezy ferst, with the uther entries not even numbered az awlso rans." When Zeke wuz at college he lerned menny new and pecoolyer werds. I deplore hiz langwidge, but if I correckly catch the drift ov hiz remarks, I must endorse hiz sentimint.

But after about 40 minnits ov this sort ov thing, Henrietta begun to warm up. She jumpt onto the docters and the druggists, and when she got thru with them, she begun slatherin the members ov the "old cherches," az Chrischun Syuntists call the evengellikel denominashuns. She walloped them for bein hippocrits. "I spoze most ov you in my awjence iz members of the old cherches," she sez, "and that time and time agen you have repeetid the nobel sentimint, 'In God we liv, move and hav our bein'," she sez. "You were awl hippocrits when you sed it," she sez, "for you diddent bleeve a werd ov it," she sez. "Only Chrischun Syuntists reely bleeve it and pracktis it," she sez. "Tell me," she shreekt, rizin up on her toes, and waivin her arms, "whare iz the consistuncy ov the man who sez that in God he lives, moves and haz hiz bein, and then goes rite into a drug store to get sumthin to help him move?" she sez.

Heer Henrietta Minerva made a drammatick pauze, standin with her hed throwed back, and her finger pintin at the awjence. It happened that her finger moved moved round till it got to pintin to me, and so, thinkin it wood be unpolite not to anser the lady, I roze up:

"Maddam," I sez, "sich conduck az you hav deskribed duz appeer jest a trifel inconsistunt on ferst thot," I sez, "but let me ask you what you think ov the consistuncy ov a persun who claims to make a speshulty ov bleevin that in God he lives, moves and haz hiz bein, and then goes into a resterrunt to get sumthin to help him live?" I sez. "Do Chrischun Syuntists eat?" I sez.

The awjence laffed, and Henrietta Minerva got red in the fase. "You are a irreverunt skoffer," she sez, "who haz cum heer to interfeer with the proclaimin ov the truth," she sez.

"No mam," I sez, "I only cum heer to lissen to what you had to say on Chrischun Syunce," I sez. "I don't want to interfeer with nuthin," I sez, "and I don't want to make a speech," I sez. "However," I sez, "now that I am standin up, I will make this remark: I shall advize my frends to insist, when you call to convert 'em, that you give plain, strait ansers to 2 queschuns, az follers:

"1. Do do you deny the egzistunce ov matter?

"2. Do you deny the efficasy of medisin in curin sickniss?

"If you answer 'No' to theze queschuns, you aint no Chrischun Syuntist, and if you answer 'Yes,' and after that suckseed in gettin enny converts, you are welkum to have 'em," I sez. A COMPLETE LOW-PRICED

International Lesson Commentary

Is a volume many Teachers and Bible Students whose financial resources prevent their purchasing a higher priced book, are looking for. We are happy indeed to be able to offer it to them in

THE LESSON HELPER

A well-printed volume, substantially bound in heavy boards. It is the work of W. W. Dowling, author of The Lesson Commentary, and has much of the material of that great work, only in a more condensed form. It contains a Chronological Chart of the Life of Jesus, Chronology of the Old Testament, Analysis of the Four Gospels, Four Orders of Service, with music in full, Colored Maps of Palestine, Map of Ancient Jerusalem, Numerous Engravings, and Complete Geographical, Expository, Illustrative and Practical Notes, on every one of the lessons of the year.

The Price of this complete lesson help is only Thirty-Five Cents Per Copy; or Thirty Cents in dozen lots. Aside from The Christian Lesson Commentary, which sells at $1.00 per copy, or 75 cents in dozen-lots, THE LESSON HELPER is the most complete commentary on the lessons of the current year published.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, 1522 Locust St., ST. LOUIS.

The Elkhart Carriage and Harness Co., Elkhart, Indiana, whose advertisement appears in this paper, is one of the largest and most reliable houses in their line of goods in the United States. They sell direct to the customer, thus furnishing goods at the lowest cost to the purchaser, by cutting off all commissions, agents' salaries, etc. Their catalogue is so elaborate and so perfectly represents their goods that purchasers can select what they want from its numerous styles quite as satisfactorily as if at their factory. This catalogue is the finest of the illustrator's art and in an artistic cover of unique design and pleasing effect upon the eye. This company has been in business for twenty-seven years, and any dealings you may have with them will be of the most agreeable and satisfactory kind.

Notes and News.

The Southeast District Convention will meet with the church in this city, March 5-8. On behalf of the church I extend a cordial invitation to delegates from all the churches. Please send us word if you intend coming. R. H. INGRAM.

Albia, Ia., Feb. 13, 1900.

T. S. Ballard, of Aspen, Col., writes that a gentleman there has donated a thousand packages of polish for copper, nickel, silver and tinware, to be sold for the benefit of the church debt. A package of this powder, large enough to last an ordinary family for one year, will be sent, express prepaid, to any person for 75 cents. The church is in a new field, is weak and needs help.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I have read, the past two days, Aylsworth's Frequency of the Lord's Supper. It is wonderfully rich. It ought to be read by every preacher in the land. I want to suggest that our preachers read it first, and then put a copy in the hands of his denominational neighbor. You have been wise in putting it up so it can sell for 25 cents. I don't know when I have read anything so delightful and so helpful. This is true of it from the standpoint of literature, logic and spiritual power. It deserves a wide reading. C. A. FREER.

Unnatural Hunger

A SURE SIGN OF HIDDEN DYSPEPSIA.

"It was necessary to eat dinner at 11 o'clock," says Mrs. C. F. Ollman, 1131 Preston St, Rockford, Ill., "in order to have strength to prepare the noonday meal for the family.

"While I was drinking coffee I felt so faint at 11 o'clock that I was unable to proceed with the work unless I had lunch. If I missed the 11 o'clock meal I was attacked with a severe sick headache.

"My complexion at that time was a sight, great blotches appearing on my face, and I was so nervous that I could sleep but a few minutes at a time, and would wake in the morning more tired than when I went to bed.

"Our grocer called my attention one day to Postum Cereal Coffee. This was about three years ago. I immediately quit the use of coffee and took up Postum, having it prepared properly. The change produced a remarkable result. In a week or two I was able to leave off the 11 o'clock lunch and take my dinner in the natural way with the rest of the family. My blotchy complexion disappeared and a natural complexion took its place. Now I can go from morning until night without a meal, if I desire, and no headache or inconvenience of any kind appears. I sleep sound as a baby, and my kidney trouble, which was more than serious, has entirely disappeared.

"A lady friend was recommended to try Postum, and a short time after told me she was disgusted with it, for it had no taste. I asked her if she boiled it carefully fifteen minutes after the real bubbling commenced. And in reply to another question, said she used only one heaping teaspoonful to the cup. I explained to her that she must use two heaping teaspoons to the cup and let it boil long enough. The next time I saw her she said she used Postum regularly and liked it very much indeed, and that it had made a great change in her health and the health of one or two members of her family."

It seems plain from this experiment, that one is justified in the inference that coffee is an actual poison to many human beings, and sets up all sorts of diseases. The remedy is plain enough—to abandon the coffee and use Postum Food Coffee, which is sold by all grocers at 15 and 25 cents a package.

Dr. Sheldon and the Topeka Capital.

[A despatch printed in the Chicago Record some days ago, reads: "Mr. Sheldon has always been averse to writing for the Sunday papers and has frequently said that they should not be published, yet Mr. Poponoe announces that the Sunday Morn-Capital will appear as usual the week Dr. Sheldon has charge." In reply to my query as to the accuracy of the above statement Mr. Sheldon replies as below. W. P. KEELER.

Topeka, Kan., Feb. 21, 1900.

DEAR SIR:—

The last issue of the Capital the week I have charge will be printed and delivered Saturday evening. All work on the paper will cease before midnight. No papers will be delivered or sold on Sunday with my consent. The character of the paper will be such that it can be read on Sunday with as much profit as any religious weekly.

Cordially,

CHARLES M. SHELDON.

An Architect.

For three and a half weeks I have been assisting E. J. Lampton in a meeting with his good people at Louisiana, Mo.

Bro. Lampton is well known as one of our best pastors, as well as a strong preacher of the Word, but his signal ability as a church builder is, I believe, not so generally understood. The house at Louisiana is his plan and essentially his work. It is of pressed brick, seats five hundred, has furnace, baptistery, parlor, dining room, well-equipped kitchen and is a model outside and inside. And yet the cost was only $7,500. People desiring a new church house would do well to consult this good man. CRAYTON S. BROOKS.

New London, Mo., Feb. 7th, 1900.

Prohibition Convention.

The Prohibitionists of Missouri are hereby called to meet in State Convention, in the Ferris Grand Opera House, Mexico, Mo., Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, June 13, 14 and 15, 1900, for the purpose of electing delegates to the National Convention, a new State Central Committee, and nominating a full state ticket, and transacting such other business as may be regularly brought before the convention. Information as to railroad and hotel rates, togeter with the program more in detail, and other general information, will be given later. By order of the State Central Committee, at its meeting held in Sedalia, January 17, 1900.

CHAS. E. STOKES, Chairman.

Hon. T. W. Phillips, of Newcastle, Pa., has just sent $1,000 to the Board of Church Extension to help complete the $250,000 this year. Also, Mr. and Mrs. Wilkes, of Chester, Neb., has sent $500. It will be remembered that we reported a $5,000 gift to that work two weeks ago. Let the special gifts come along and we will surely reach the goal—one quarter of a million—by our next convention. G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

This is an important and strategic point, but the work will require patience and hard work and time. There are now three of us here, Miss Clara L. Case of Ann Arbor, Mich., Mrs. Omer and I, and we expect Miss Bertha Mason, of Houston, Tex., to join us in one week, and later, a converted Mexican from San Angelo, Tex., is to be with us.

L. M. OMER.

Monterey, Mex., Feb. 3, 1900.

I note an error in the account of my resignation here in this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The account states that I will be succeeded by Victor W. Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky. He will hold a meeting for this church next winter. No one has been selected as my successor.

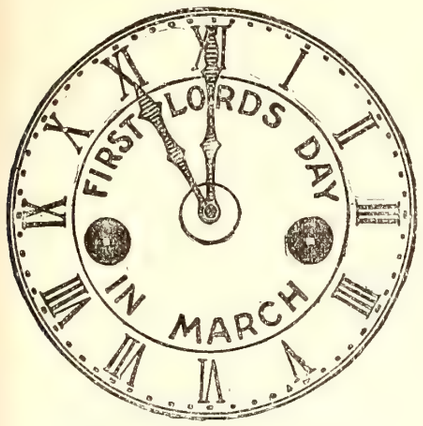
Missionary.



TIME FOR TAKING THE OFFERING.

No Time for Excuses.

March Offering next Sunday! March 4th is the time. Only one offering in the churches during the whole year for Foreign Missions. It is the one supreme subject before the churches just now. We are hopeful for a great offering. The sky is all bright. The prospects are good for $200,000 this year. A few churches, however, will straightway begin to make excuses, as follows:

1. We forgot it. Found asleep while on duty! "Arise, shine!" "Up, my comrades, up and doing!" As you value the interests of your own local church, you can not afford to forget this work.

2. Our preacher did not announce it. Then you announce it at once. Do not permit an indifferent preacher to deprive you of the luxury of sending the gospel to the ends of the earth. There are few preachers of this class, and their number is growing less year by year. If the people will stir up the preacher, he will announce it. One sister called the attention of the pastor three times to the subject before he announced it, but finally succeeded.

3. There are too many calls made upon us. This excuse is pitiful. The Foreign Society asks the churches for only one offering during the whole year. It can not ask for any less, if it asks at all. If you refuse to help, and all the churches follow your example, then the missionaries must be called home. Are you ready for that?

4. We have a church debt. It is a dangerous experiment to attempt to pay one debt to the neglect of another. We are not commanded to build churches, in any part of the New Testament, but we are positively and imperatively commanded to preach the gospel to every creature. But the way to get out of debt is to give out to missions. The light that shines farthest shines brightest nearest home. An active preacher says: "While our other burdens here are bearing heavy, I feel sure we will get a good offering this year for Foreign Missions. Have been talking and praying about it for three months."

5. We are behind on our pastor's salary. You are not apt to catch up on that by neglecting this. A real, live missionary church rarely ever gets behind on current expenses. These are the churches that meet home obligations most promptly. One of our good preachers stated that whenever his church got in debt he always went to preaching on Foreign Missions, and he invariably succeeded in removing the debt.

6. We have all we can do at home. Do you mean that you are doing more at home than the churches who give to Foreign Missions? The world is the field. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This last order of our Lord is imperative. It has never been abrogated nor modified. It is as binding upon the Christian to-day as upon the apostles to whom it was addressed.

7. We had no meeting the first Sunday in March. Then attend to it at your first meeting. The offering is more important than the time.

Please be in the column of missionary churches March 4th. Be kind enough to forward your offering to F. M. Rains, treasurer, Box 884, Cincinnati, O., Monday morning, March 5th.

A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

Missions—International.

A world-wide gospel brings international relationships. It is fraught with the message of international fraternity, inter-racial brotherhood, the unity of the human race, that "of one blood God made all the nations;" of one spirit he made the soul of humanity, and created the racial life. For a moment the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" must lose itself in the wider and weightier question, "Am I the keeper of the nations of the earth?" "I am debtor both to Greeks and to barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish." There is no limit to the obligation to preach the gospel. We are debtors to the illiterate heathen nations; the foolish barbarian; the unclean and uncouth; the vile and offensive. International brotherhood, the solidarity of the race, the Fatherhood of God, bring a new sense of a deeper obligation and a wider sympathy. As when the Mosaic legislation gives way to the Sermon on the Mount, it also lays upon the heart the burden of a new truth.

Civilization—intense, world-wide and interwoven among nations—intensifies the sense of interdependence and mutual obligations. We must help them. "Bear ye one another's burdens," for this is Christ's law of life. We must educate, elevate and Christianize them. Japan and China and India are enrolled among the nations. With them we buy and sell, exchange and communicate; shall it only be commerce and not ideas and religion? Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines are "the heathen given us for an inheritance." Shall we not be true to the trust, and "be perfect as the Father in heaven?" viz., generously give the best we have—Christ's evangel to the poor!

BAXTER WATERS.

An Irresistible Missionary Appeal.

"It is the will of God."

We need constantly to repeat and restate the appeal that calls every Christian to missionary activity. Our wills, like our watches, need daily to be rewound. What appeals strongly to one may not to another. That which appealed yesterday may not to-day.

The horrors of that hell that awaited unconverted heathen appealed yesterday; the happiness of heart and home that as a Christian he may enjoy here and now appeals to-day.

There is an appeal, however, that it seems to me must always be irresistible to every enlightened Christian conscience, namely, that it is the will of God that his gospel be sent to all nations and that we be the senders. This is all the more irresistible because there is no doubting but that this is his will. 'Tis an old story, how at the time of the first Crusade, Pope Urban, addressing a council of the church in burning words, portrayed the desecration of the Holy Land by the profane Turks and called all Christians to the rescue.

"When Jesus summons you to his defence," exclaimed the eloquent Pontiff, "let no base affection detain you in your homes." The appeal was irresistible. The assembly burst forth with one voice, "Dieu le volt! Dieu le volt!"—"It is the will of God. It is the will of God," and thousands sprang forward to enlist under the banner of the cross, and went forth to the rescue of the Holy Sepulchre.

Brethren, when we make the appeal to our churches on the first of March, if it be in the name of our empty treasury we may get fourteen cents apiece to fill it. If it be in the name our two hundred and twenty-nine heroic missionaries who depend on us for daily bread we may get enough to feed them; but if the appeal come white-hot from a burning soul, and is uttered in prophetic tones in the name of God and as his own summons to his people, then, if we be not consciousless, $200,000 will not begin to measure our gifts this Jubilee Year.

The will of God be done. God help us to do it.

"HONESTY is the best policy." Nobody contradicts it.

Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Which does he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough. They are accurate, uniform.

Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

TENNESSEE.

Johnson City.—One added at this place recently.—ADAM B. CROUCH.

COLORADO.

Denver, Feb. 19.—I have become pastor of the Highlands congregation. Three additions in last two weeks at regular services. All lines of the church work is moving off grandly.—H. A. DAVIS.

OKLAHOMA.

Ingalls.—There have been added here two by letter, one by statement and one by confession. J. W. Cats preached for us a few nights. He preaches the old Jerusalem Gospel.—D. W. JOHNSON.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

South McAlister.—Have had 50 added since I came to this place. This Southland is ripe for an abundant harvest. Why not send some missionaries here as well as to India and China? We need them badly. A cry comes from this territory saying, "Come and help us."—J. C. HOWELL.

WASHINGTON.

Palouse, Feb. 21.—We are assisting Bro. E. C. Wigmore in a meeting at this place, 32 additions to date; 22 confessions. Interest good and house crowd d.—STIVERS, WEBB AND WIFE.

Eden Valley.—We were at this place six days, with four additions; closed on account of bad roads.—STIVERS, WEBB AND WIFE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Cogan House.—Just closed a meeting at Cogan House with 19 additions. The work in this place in a prosperous condition.—GEO. C. ZEIGLER.

Philadelphia, Feb. 16.—Just closed a meeting with the Third Church. Audiences large, interest intense; 52 additions.—G. P RUTLEDGE, pastor.

OREGON.

Portland.—J. B. Lister closed a meeting recently at Canby with 21 added. Bro. Moore had 17 additions at Garfield in a short meeting. They will build a church. At my appointment last Lord's day (the 11th) one was baptized, one added from the Methodists and two from the Congregational Church. Three deacons were appointed, a hall is rented and furnished and Bro. Skaggs is continuing the meeting with good prospects. These are all in Clackamas County, of the third Oregon district. Bro. Skaggs reports good interest in the Albina Church and at Woodlawn.—BRUCE WOLVERTON.

MISSOURI.

Kirksville, Feb. 22.—Our work moves on nicely here. Three additions last Sunday and four the Sunday before.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Galena, Feb. 17.—I preached yesterday at Ponce Deleon. One confession; one by statement. Have just organized an Endeavor Society at Galena.—ELDER J. H. GAYLOR.

Albany, Feb. 19.—Better interest in church work all around at Wilcox. Large audiences yesterday, and one of the prominent men in the Southern Methodist Church at that place united with us at the morning service.—J. E. DAVIS.

Westboro, Feb. 21.—Am here in a meeting one week old. Interest and prospects flattering. I will be open for engagements in a few weeks. Churches desiring meetings or a pastor, address me at Westboro, Mo. One reclaimed at regular services at Salem, Ill., my regular charge.—G. HALLECK ROWE.

Savannah, Jan. 20.—One addition here Sunday from M. E.'s. At the age of 67 he concluded to be a Christian only. Our outlook is good.—A. R. HUNT.

Dearborn, Feb. 22.—Our meeting of two weeks closed last night, with 14 additions; 10 by baptism. F. M. Hooton did the preaching. He leaves here to assume his duties of state evangelist of the Springfield district, to which position he has recently been appointed. The state board has made a wise choice.—GEO. W. CALVERT.

Fulton, Feb. 22.—S. D. Dutcher has just closed a great meeting here. There were 32 additions; 29 baptisms, and others by letter. It is only necessary for me to say that Dutcher did the preaching to tell that it was well and faithfully done. The church at this place is happy and hopeful, and in the strength of this good meeting will plan and push larger things.—ROBT. G. FRANK, pastor.

St. Louis.—Two additions in the Fourth Chursh yesterday, 25th inst.—R. H.

NEBRASKA.

David City, Feb. 19.—Our meeting with Bro. C. C. Atwood and wife closed on the evening of the 14th. We rejoice greatly in the success of this meeting. Sixty-one were added to the membership and every department of church work is strengthened. $276 50 was raised to pay off all present indebtedness of the church. Bro. Atwood is a strong and true preacher of the Word. Every sermon was forcible and practical and presented in a loving and dignified manner. He was greatly assisted by his noble helpmeet, Sister Atwood, who led a large chorus from night to night. Bro. and Sister Atwood began in a meeting at Schuyler, with N. T. Harmon, the 15th.—H. H. HARMOM.

Overton, Feb. 21.—I am helping Pastor P. S. Wickham in a meeting with his home congregation. The attendance and interest are growing. We had one confession last Sunday evening and three more last night. The dancing element of the community claim the hall we are using one night this week. So we may have to give way and let the devil get in his work for one evening. This is a town with no saloons or billiard rooms, and drugstore will sell whiskey only with the physician's prescription. We hope for a good meeting.—R. A. GIVENS.

OHIO.

Rocky Fork, Feb. 19.—Recently closed a meeting here with nine additions. I divide my time between this congregation and Perryton for the present year.—J. H. MCCARTNEY.

Canton, Feb. 19.—A four weeks' meeting closed here on last evening. The preaching was all done and very earnestly done by our pastor, C. A. Hill. The singing was conducted by A. R. Davis. With one exception the meeting has been, both in attendance and results, the largest held in Canton this season. The entire number added is 54, and of these only six are under 20. Ten from the denominations, eight by letter, 23 confessions and 13 by statement.—CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

Painesville, Feb. 19.—We closed a three weeks' meeting with the church here last night. Bro. R. C. Sargeant, of Salem, led the singing. He is a true yokefellow in the gospel. There were 32 added; 27 by baptism. This is 42 since the beginning of our work here Sept. 1st. The outlook is very hopeful.—F. A. BRIGHT.

Canton, Feb. 19.—Our meeting closed last night; 59 additions during the meeting, all over 20 years except six. This is the largest number ever added at any one meeting in Canton. Our pastor, Bro. C. A. Hill, did the preaching and was assisted by Prof. A. R. Davis, singing evangelist.—J. D. JOHNSON.

Mark Collis assisted J. W. Maddox in a meeting at Ironton, which resulted in 45 additions.

KANSAS.

Garden City, Feb. 19.—We have just closed a splendid meeting here with 11 additions and the church in better working order than for the last two years. Our meeting was 13 days long; eight confessions, one reclaimed and two by letter. The brethren expect to have a regular pastor soon as they are able to arrange matters. Bro. John Bull, of Cimmaron, spent one Sunday with us and preached in the afternoon.—ELLIS PURLEE.

Belleville, Feb. 20.—Our meeting here is doing nicely. Six additions to date.—M. INGELS.

Colony, Feb. 19.—Held a three weeks' meeting in a schoolhouse at Fairview, with seven confessions; good interest to the last. Closed a 10 days' meeting in Colony with one added by statement. Weather and roads were bad. Interest fair.—L. H. BARNUM.

Wilsey, Feb. 21.—Two confessions here at regular services last Sunday night.—IMRI ZUMWALT.

Arkansas City, Feb. 23.—We are assisting in a meeting, with 22 additions so far. The church here is flourishing under the leadership of Bro. M. Lee Sorey. On Feb. 18th this congregation ordained Bro. Sorey to the ministry, Bro. Geo. T. Smith assisting in the service. In our absence the pulpit at Parsons was occupied on Feb. 18th by Bro. D. H. Johnston and on the 25 inst. by Bro. Sorey.—W. W. BURKS.

Kensington, Feb. 23.—Our meeting, conducted by Evangelist Hazelrigg, closed Feb. 18, with 34 additians by confession and 18 by letter and reclaimed. Many are heads of families. Junior C. E. organized and all departments of work greatly strengthened. Pastor's salary raised for all time. People of this place have heard the gospel presented as never before, the results of which have just begun. God bless her who is indeed his servant.—RUTH G. AHLBORN.

Metz, Feb. 24.—Through the organized co operation of the churches of Steuben County, J. K. Hester is now employed as county evangelist. He has held meetings at South Scott with 18 additions, North Scott with 13, and just closed a five weeks' meeting at Metz with 44 added. All expenses have been raised on the field. Next meeting begins at Fairview (Angola) March 3rd. The County Association over which C. S. Medbury, Angola, presides, holds monthly conference meetings, and aims through the evangelistic work to strengthen every church in the county. Bro. Hester's work among us has been highly commendable and receives the hearty approval of the county.—J. M. LADD, Co. Sec.

ILLINOIS.

Palmyra, Feb. 19.—Am engaged in a meeting with the brethren at Blooming Grove, four miles east of this city. Prospects are good; brethren are working and people interested. Twelve additions to date.—WILL A. GREEN.

Mt. Morris, Feb. 19.—Our new minister, D. F. Seyster, is being well received in his work here. Our meeting 12 days old. Three confessions last night; 10 to date,all by primary obedience.—M. F. BLAKE.

Rutland, Feb. 19.—C. E. Evans, of Eureka, our state evangelist, closed a 22 days' meeting with us last night (Feb. 18). Had eight by obedience and four by statement. Bro. Evans is a strong man. We are in fine shape now for going forward.—J. W. PORTER.

Centralia, Feb. 19.—We had another good day yesterday. Last night we baptized five persons and had two confessions of persons who will be baptized soon. I go to Sandoval to-day to hold a meeting for the the church there.—J. H. SMART.

Astoria, Feb. 19.—The Christian Church at Astoria is planning to build a new parsonage.—A. R. ADAMS, minister.

Carrollton, Feb. 19.—As the result of a union meeting, recently held in this city, 22 were given the hand of fellowship here yesterday; 19 by baptism, one by letter, one by statement, one from Baptists. This makes more additions to the church since I came here than were added in many years.—F. SEYMOUR SMITH, pastor.

Charleston, Feb. 19.—Six added here yesterday; four by obedience, four last week, 15 this month. Several young people from our Normal School.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Pekin, Feb. 19.—We closed our meeting last night; 17 were added to the church, four at the last service. R. R. Lovall, of Ipava, conducted the singing for us. He goes to help Bro. C. E. Evans in a meeting at Fulton.—J. T. ALSUP.

Galesburg, Feb. 19.—There were two added here yesterday. Work most encouraging.—C. H. WHITE.

DuQuoin, Feb. 20.—One addition here Lord's day morning and one at Elkville in the afternoon. J. V. Coombs begins with us the 28th inst.—W. H. KERN.

Illiopolis, Feb. 24.—We have had 18 additions to date. Will continue till the 28th.—S. T. ROGERS & V. E. RIDENOUR.

Modesto, Feb. 26.—Came here Friday night; five added to date; will remain a few days.—M. L. ANTHONY.

Pittsfield, Feb. 26.—Frequent additions here since our meeting. All departments receiving new recruits, missoinary spirit growing. Work requires constant attention.—R. F. THRAPP.

Jacksonville, Feb. 19.—Sunday, the 18th inst., a throng too large to be accommodated crowded in to hear Bro. Snively's annual address to the K. P.s of this city; and in the evening another large audience packed the house to hear Bro. J. W. Allen, of Cleveland, Ohio. Bro. Allen was our pastor for eight years in the '70s; it was a treat to hear him once more. At the close of the service two persons, one young man and a lady, made the good confession; there was one baptism also. —WALLACE BOCKMAN.

Allerton, Feb. 23.—Am in a meeting for the church here, with excellent attendance despite stormy weather. Two confessions last night.—G. F. ASSITER.

Vinton.—Last summer arrangements were made by Bro. Denny of the state board for Bro. Boyle to hold a meeting here. The meeting lasted for seven weeks and resulted in an organization of about 125 members;40 baptisms,the rest mostly members of the Christian Church at other points. We engaged Jas. T. Nichols as pastor immediately. We held meeting in the courthouse until Jan, 14th, and received 12 members. We dedicated our new church house, worth about $5,000, clear of debt Jan. 15th. Since then Bro. Nichols has held a meeting resulting in 124 additions; 87 baptized ranging in age from 8 to 80 years; 33 young men. Our Endeavor Society helped greatly in the meeting. One good brother said that what won him was the loving spirit manifested by our members. We all love Bro. Nichols for his work's sake.—S. T. SHORTESS.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

It does not need the praise of men
To make a diamond bright.
The stars may shine beyond our ken
As well as in our sight.
And flowers may bloom in untrod lands
As well as anywhere;
Though none may hold them in their hands—
God loves to see them there.

The mother, pleading for her son,
Needs not that she be heard,
Because in heaven there sits One
Regarding every word.
The poet sings with few to care
If right he sings or wrong,
But he who hears the mother's prayer
May hear the poet's song.

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XVII.

On a quiet morning in June—a delightful winter's day, the seasons being the reverse of ours—the men had made an unusually good catch of oysters, and finding no wagon lowered to the shore, had left them in the boat and walked up the hill. Upon their arrival Dr. Andral and Jack Burton decided to bring up the delicious bivalves. Accordingly the water was turned on at the mill and they, sitting in the wagon, were being carefully let down the bluff. When they had made about half the descent, and were just beyond a large rock that projects to the very edge of the road, the rope suddenly gave way and the wagon began a fearful rush down the incline. Jack Burton sprang to apply the brake, but it had evidently been tampered with and would not work. He then leaped out and suffered some severe contusions, besides a broken collar bone.

The Doctor held on to his position, while the wagon bore him with a fearfully accelerating velocity to what seemed inevitable destruction. So great was its momentum that it rushed past its station at the foot of the hill, and reaching the bank, plunged like a frantic horse headlong into the sea and disappeared with its imperiled passenger.

At the parting of the rope the release of tension was felt at the mill, and the alarm was at once given, and a party hurried down the hill.

Burton, stunned and disabled, was soon found and tenderly borne up to the village, while others hurried onward searching as they went for the Doctor, but finding neither the wagon nor its rider.

Arriving at the harbor, they saw the telltale tracks of the wagon right over the brink into the sea; but its mysterious depths, that have concealed countless tragedies and ghastly horrors, gave no answer to their anxious questionings.

The cable, on investigation, was found to have been severed by some sharp instrument. The miscreant had evidently been concealed by the big rock at the roadside, and dashing swiftly out, had struck the blow just after the wagon passed, and then escaped as swiftly, amid the rocks and bushes of the hillside.

A very diligent search, and as thorough as possible with our limited facilities, was made in the waters of the harbor. This resulted in the recovery of the wagon, but alas! it brought no tidings of the missing Doctor.

As all our efforts for the recovery of the missing body proved unavailing, a deep sorrow came to our little world, and there was with many a sense of impending danger.

The more experienced, however, thought that the ill will of the malcontents was largely against the two victims, chiefly against the Doctor, and this being now sated, and they sobered by the horrifying crime they had perpetrated, it was thought that we would suffer no further molestation; at least until our enemies were further aggravated.

While the dread calamity had brought sorrow and dismay upon the entire village, there was more than one poor heart to whom there came an unutterable grief. The sunshine was bright, the skies serene, the banks and meadows green and flower-bestrewn as ever, and yet their beauty brought no cheer to my darkened soul. And as I gazed upon the external beauty my heart was ever attuned to the chiding worde of Burns:

> "Ye banks and braes o' bonny Doon,
> How can ye bloom sae fresh an' fair?
> How can ye chant, ye little birds,
> And I sae weary fu' o' care."

But I thought of one heart sadder than my own—poor Maria's—and I went to her with words of comfort and tears of sympathy, and the effort to minister to her brought to me a sense of relief. And when I found her full of Christian fortitude, and ready to offer comfort to me, I felt rebuked for my selfish sorrow and strengthened to a brave endurance.

After the lapse of about ten days from the calamity on the bluff, and the conviction of his death seemed to settle into a certainty, it was decided to hold a solemn service in memory of Dr. Andral, and the day of the meeting was fixed.

A day or two after the memorial service was arranged Mrs. Gray, whose ministrations extended, not only to her fellowbeings but also to the dumb animals, happened to be out in the pasture to look after a sick kid. Not finding it where she expected, she wandered to a considerable distance from the village. Peering among the trees and bushes in search of it, she espied a youth sitting apathetically on a log, who on a nearer approach proved to be Tony Carver, who belonged to the harbor gang. Stealthily approaching from his back she came up to him without discovery and addressed him by name. To her surprise he did not attempt to run away, but listened to her and answered with manifest embarrassment. He was evidently very much depressed, as though burdened with a heavy sense of guilt.

She spake of the dreadful crime committed by his associates, and importuned him to make a clean breast of the whole matter; and especially to tell her whose hands were stained with the murder or Dr. Andral. She besought him to come away from the miscreant gang, to repent of his evil ways and to lead a better life. Tony was evidently much moved, but doggedly refused to either give information or to make any promise other than to meet her at their present place the next day but one.

On the appointed day Jack Burton accompanied Mrs. Gray. Arriving near the designated spot, Mrs. Gray went on, while Jack, concealed from view, remained near.

Mrs. Gray arrived first, but had not long to wait when Tony, true to his promise, cautiously approached her. She engaged him in conversation with his back in the direction of Jack. Hearing a step behind him, he suddenly turned round and beholding Jack, wheeled and started to run away. But Jack was very near and on the alert, and seizing his arm spake kindly, declaring that he should suffer no harm.

A ghastly palor overspread Tony's face, and his limbs trembled so violently that but for Jack's support he must have fallen. He was evidently the victim of a deadly fear.

Mrs. Gray spake to him kindly and sought to calm his nervous terror; but she could not induce him to remove his eyes from Jack, upon whom his gaze was fixed with every indication of alarm.

The latter observing this, said: "You have a great weight on your mind, Tony, which you must unburden. Why are you in such terror of my presence?"

Tony hesitated, and finally answered: "Because, Mr. Burton—because you was one of them."

"One of them? What do you mean by that?"

"Why one of the two—the two in the wagon. You was the one that jumped and was killed on the bluff when the rope broke," said Tony trembling in terror. The secret of his agitation was now apparent. Jack leaping from the wagon had been stunned, and apparently lifeless, had been carried up the hill, and the lawless gang supposed him killed; and so imbued was Tony with the idea of his death that even the very material grasp of Jack upon his arm could not dispel the illusion that the ghost of the murdered victim had returned to visit punishment upon his slayers.

"Tony," said Jack solemnly: "You know the rope did not break, but was cut. You know that I was aboard that wagon and barely escaped murder. Now Tony, in the presence, not only of Mrs. Gray and myself, but of the Lord who shall judge you, tell us how you know that I jumped from that wagon." Tony, quaking with alarm and breaking down completely, managed to say through his sobbing: "Because—because—I saw you."

Jack waited until he became more composed and then, by putting him through the "sweat process," managed to draw out that Col. Bird and two or three of the worst of his gang were prowling about the harbor when they discovered the boat laden with oysters. The first impulse was to seize these; the second was to attempt to secure larger game. Well knowing that a wagon would soon be let down for the oysters, they asked Tony to hide behind the big rock and cut the rope which held the descending wagon, offering as a reward a small rifle which he highly prized

To this Tony objected, because it might endanger life, but they, scoffing at the idea of there being any danger, said it was merely to have a little fun, and to give the cliff folks a good scare. He, accepting this view, then consented to the villainous work. After cutting the cable, secretly watching, he had seen the wagon with one rider plunge into the sea and disappear, and the apparently lifeless form of the other carried up to the village. Horrified with his awful crime he had gone back to the cave, and had from that time held himself aloof from the men, a prey to consuming remorse.

By degrees it dawned upon the mind of Tony, stupified with terror, that Jack was no ghost, but a being of veritable flesh and blood, and this produced a decided reaction in his mental state. He became profuse in his expressions of joy that Burton was still alive, and repeatedly declared that he would not have cut the rope for the world if he had not been persuaded that no harm could happen, and that though it might give the men in the wagon a little scare, all they had to do after the rope was cut was to apply the brake and stop the wagon. This he believed, as he did not know the brake had been tampered with.

"No, Tony," said Mrs. Gray, "I believe you. You were not intending to commit murder; but you see now the awful consequences of your being with those wicked men, and of listening to their criminal suggestions. By all means, Tony, leave them at once and come with us, and prove by your changed life that you truly repent of your awful deed."

But neither she nor Jack could dissuade him from his purpose to return to the Birds. When asked for his reason for such a strange course he reluctantly declared it was his fears of the gang, who had threatened his life if he went over to the other party, or revealed their agency in the disaster at the bluff.

Sadly Mrs. Gray and her companion turned toward the village, while Tony moved away in the opposite direction. Was it an omen signifying that his life should ever go in a contrary direction to theirs?

A Bismarck Anecdote.

One day, a young Swede, a student at the University of Berlin, received a letter from his uncle saying that his daughter, the yonng man's cousin, would stop in Berlin for a few days on her way to Ems, and would he kindly meet her and show her the city? The mail coach arrived and with it the young lady, who found a fine-looking young man, with a vivid boutonniere, awaiting her arrival. He accompanied her to the hotel. The following morning he called and took her driving in an elegant brougham. These attentions continued during the three days of her visit. The lady appeared overjoyed at the gallantry of this cousin, whom she had never seen before. On the day of her departure, while assisting her into the mail coach, the young man said: "I cannot let you depart without making a confession." The lady blushed and dropped her eyes. "I must tell you that I am not your cousin. Your cousin is a friend of mine. He had no time to accompany you, having to cram for his examinations, so he bade me take his place." "In heaven's name who are you, then?" cried the lady. The young man handed her his card. The postilion blew his trumpet, the mail coach rolled away, as the young lady read this name on the card, "Otto von Bismarck."

Mrs. Kruger and the Birds.

Mr. Kruger, the ruler or president of the Boers in South Africa, has a wife who is very fond of animals. Sometime ago the Boers wished to raise a statue of their president and the sculpter, who was to make it, brought some drawings of her husband to Mrs. Kruger to see which she liked best. The pictures showed him in his every-day clothes, with the tall hat which he always wears. When Mrs. Kruger saw this, she asked that the top of the crown of the hat should be made hollow, so that after rain the birds might be able to drink out of it. This was done, and now whenever a welcome shower has fallen a little cloud of birds may be seen fluttering round the top of the Kruger statue, drinking and bathing in the crown of the hat.—From Animal Friends, London, England.

Was it You?

There was somebody who said an unkind word which hurt somebody else. Was it you?

There was somebody who was thoughtless and selfish in his manner and mode of living. Was it you?

There was somebody who harshly criticised the actions of somebody else. Was it you?

There was somebody who found nothing but faults in the belongings of his friend. Was it you?

There was somebody who borrowed a book and kept it for months. Was it you?

There was somebody who never stopped to think who was hurt by the sarcastic word. Was it you?

There was somebody who, day in and day out, never did anything to make anybody else happy. Was it you?

There was somebody who, for years, promised to have his life insured for the benefit of his family, but did not keep his promise. Was it you?—Selected.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Some P's and Q's.

Pray, little lads and lasses gay,
One lesson do not lose;
As through the world you wend your way,
Oh, mind your P's and Q's!

For while P stands for pears and plums,
For pleasantness and plays,
For patience and for promptitude,
For peace, po iteness, praise;

Yet, lackaday! it leads in pert,
In pinches, pests and pain,
Perverse, and petulent, and pry,
And also in profane!

Q stands for Quaker quietness,
For quinces, quality,
For quickness, and for queenliness,
For quaint, and quittance free.

But then, it heralds quake and quail,
And querulous—indeed,
All quibbles, quarrels, quips, and quirks,
And quacks, it serves at need.

Then watch them, little maids and men;
For folks will soon excuse
Full many a fault and foible, when You mind your P's snd Q's.

The Angel of the Bowery.

BY EUGENE CLAY FERGUSON.

There had been trouble on Mulberry Street that night. In one of those tall, dilapidated tenement houses that abound there, one drunken man had got into a quarrel with another drunken man and had stuck a knife into him, and then the police came in. The woman was too drunk to take much notice. "Shall we take him to the morgue, or to the hospital?" said one of them. "Oh! we'll take him to the hospital," said the other. "What about the woman?"

"Oh! we can get her in the morning; she's too drunk to leave the place."

A boy eight years old, that the other boys of the neighborhood call Freckles, and a little girl of five, lay very still under the bed when all the fuss was going on, fearing to be seen. They had both taken refuge under there, when there was a fight in the room, many a time. They heard the two policemen carry the two men out and down the rickety stairs—the one probably dead and the other a prisoner—then Freckles whispered, "Quit your snufflin', Tot, the cops is gone," and the little girl promptly quit and all was quiet in the big tenement, except the heavy breathing of their mother over them, and the distant sound of some maudlin singer.

"When Mam wakes up she'll want me to get some beer, an' dem cops is comin' back to get her purty soon an' I'm goin' to leave."

"Won't you take me too?" said Tot.

When Freckles had studied a minute, he said: "Tot, don't you 'member dat angel dat come here onct an' she said if we's got into trouble to come to her?" Tot thought she did. "Well, we'll just shake dis old place an' see if we can find her," said Freckles.

"She was re'll good," said Tot, "an' she wore a white dress an' a fezzer in her hat an' we'd know her by dat."

"Dat's so," observed Freckles.

"She told us about God, an' I think he lives in one of de big churches with a bell in it, an' we'll go right now and see if we can find it."

So, hand in hand they softly opened the door and stole quietly down the stairs, and yet another, and another, and many more, until they found themselves out on the sidewalk with the cool summer night-air blowing on their grimed and dirty faces.

They walked far down the street, then turned west and walked for more than an hour, until a tall steeple loomed up before them.

"Dis may be de place," said Freckles; "we'll set down here an' rest anyhow." And the two little outcasts were soon fast asleep, Tot's head lying in Freckles' lap, and thus they slept the refreshing slumber of childhood, undisturbed by no ruder note than the twitter of a bird who imagined that a light was breaking in the east, and light was dawning for the little sleepers, but they knew it not. In the hush of the hour before the dawn of the Lord's day an angel hovered over them and said: "Let there be light." It must have been so, for there was light for Freckles and Tot—light they had never dreamed of—and the hideous night was passed.

The birds had long since flown to greet the new day, and higher and higher mounted the sun. The half blind old janitor had opened the doors of the church and had not observed the children asleep in a recess of the outer vestibule. People were dropping in now, and up the steps came a bevy of young ladies, chattering after their kind.

"What in the world is this?" said the foremost, as she spied the still slumbering waifs.

"Well, did you ever?" said another.

"If I only had my sketch book here. Give me a pencil, Hortense; I'll catch 'em anyway," said the tallest one.

"How dirty they are," said the first speaker. "I think they are slum children. Where is Blanche? She goes out on the highways and into the byways where the rest of us are afraid to go, sometimes, and she will know what to do with them."

"Here she is now," said some one. The most beautiful one of the bunch came up the steps. She had on a white dress and wore feathers in her hat.

"Here's a whole foreign country that needs a missionary, Blanche," said one of the girls, "and we have decided that you are the best equipped one to take the field."

Blanche looked at the sleeping children for a moment.

"Oh, it's virgin soil," said the last speaker, and then Blanche sat down so close that her white dress brushed against Freckles. Perhaps the sound of voices had awakened him; at any rate he sat bolt upright so quick that little Tot's head fell off on to the stone floor.

"Good morning, my little man." But Freckles, perhaps from sheer astonishment, replied not a word.

"Do you know where you are?" continued Blanche in soft tones. Still no reply except of silent, growing amazement.

"Italians, I guess," whispered one of the young ladies.

Tot was the first one to speak. "Is you angels?" she said, staring hard at Blanche and the beautiful circle of white-dressed girls back of her. This provoked a titter. "Save the mark," said one.

"No, dear," said Blanche, "this is my Sunday-school class."

"Where is your father?" said she, trying again to induce Freckles to speak.

"He's done for," said Freckles.

"When?"

"Last night."

"And your mamma?"

"Cops swiped her."

"My goodness! does Blanche understand such outlandish talk as that?"

Yes, but listen:

"Dad would ha' fixed him all good and plenty, but he was too drunk."

"Yes, dear, and what then?"

"Then the cops came in an' carried dad an' de guy out."

"And what did you do then?"

"We just shook de place."

Blanche rose up with all the girls pressing around her. "What in the world is all that talk about?" said one of them; "we can't make out a thing."

"They live in the Bowery, in a big tenement. There was a fight last night and their father was killed and their mother was too drunk to notice anything, and these children ran away and don't want to go back any more, and I'll see that they don't. Come with me dears," and she took them through the throng to the basement entrance.

She sent to her own palatial home for clothes and soon had them washed and clothed, except Tot's abundant hair, which she decided was hopeless with the accessories at hand.

"Now you will look as nice as any boy in my class, but I haven't had time to ask your name?" Freckles, who had been quite communicative, lapsed into silence, which must be the way of the Bowery when unpleasant things are broached.

"Freckles," said Tot softly.

"'Taint, either," said the boy, and the matter was dropped, for the time.

Tot got an opportunity to whisper to Freckles: "She's an angel. Don't you see her white dress an' fezzers?" "Course," said Freckles, as though he had known it all the time.

"Wes'll never go back to Mulberry Street, will we, Freckles?"

"Naw," said Freckles; "we's flewed de coop an' shook de hole bizness."

While Blanche Van Arsdall was attending to the wants and planning how she would find a home for two little street waifs, in the basement, a fashionable congregation was listening above to a sermon from the text: "I was naked and ye clothed me." Blanche Van Arsdall heard it not. She needed not to hear it, nor any sermon pointing out to her the path of duty.

The Red Box Clew.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Frank kissed Mrs. Dew warmly. "Haven't I had good luck, being left on doorsteps!" she cried. "First on yours, then on Mr. West's. I suppose Mr. Clarmont put me in the care of old Nance, and she took me at once to the doorstep, then pretended like she was boarding me, and got money all the time for nothing. I wonder if she was the same who left me on your doorstep; must be, because it seems natural to her! Then, after all, she must know who my real parents are. Oh, Mrs. Dew, I do love you so much, but somehow, I do want—it's so different!" And Frank burst into bitter tears.

"My dear," said Mrs. Dew, pressing her close, "with such a father and brother as you have, what does it matter what kind of a mother you had? Do not grieve for her. Remember that your father is God; and your brother is a Prince; he is the Lord of heaven, the Christ of the world!" It is strange how a few words can dissolve a mountain of trouble, if they are the right words! Frank's storm of sorrow showed signs of rolling away, for already there was a glimpse of sunshine and of blue through the raining tears.

In the meantime, the town Creekville was intensely active in trying to discover some clew to Ronald and his abductor. Some remembered having seen a strange woman hanging about the town for several days; they did not know where she had slept. Mr. Clarmont scoured the roads in his carriage, and later on horseback. Far out of town he met the doctor to whom he had telephoned that morning. Doctor Dibber had never been able to learn where he was wanted to go. He understood that Ronald was shot and lay bleeding to death, somewhere; the telephone had sounded like "cupboard" every time Mr. Clarmont had said "Covered Bridge." At last he had set out for Coverly, a town five miles distant. As soon as Mr. Clarmont explained, the doctor cried, "I saw a woman answering that description dart into the woods; she was alone." Mr. Clarmont turned his horse about and he and the doctor dashed toward the place. But they had not gone far, Mr. Clarmont horseback and the doctor in his buggy, when they saw somebody advancing up the road to meet them. A deep wood stretched on either side of the road. Evidently this person had stepped from among the trees. It was a little man with enormous whiskers that hid nearly all the face. He cried, "Stop!" and both men reined up their horses.

"Air you Mr. Clurmont?" the man asked in a squeaky voice, holding up a piece of soiled paper. "If ye air, this here's yourn."

Mr. Clarmont bent from the saddle and siezed the paper, which proved to be a note. The agitated father read it aloud to the doctor:

"mister Clurmont yu give the barer uv this yore check fur a thousan doller an swar to im to let im git away skots fre an swar not to never tri to kitch im nur help uthars to kitch im. an let im ave yore orse to git away on whitch he will turn luce after he have rid away sose twell kum back agin an swar not. To nevir make no diffykultie bout the drawin of that there thousan and. The barer uv this here letr will tell you whur yore boy is lade. an i can tell yu thay ainte no time tu luze caze he is like to bleed to deth bodily ef a doktur aint 4thcummin speadelie i am Nance an praie excuge Miss Takes."

"There is no time to lose," said Dr. Dibber excitedly. "What will you do?"

"It may be a hoax," groaned Mr. Clarmont, "but it is a change at least." He wrote the check for a thousand dollars. "Where is the boy?" he demanded in an agitated voice.

"Give us the check," said the ruffian. Mr. Clarmont handed it over. "Git off the orse," demanded the other, stroking his huge whiskers. Mr. Clarmont dismounted. "Now swar," said the man as he mounted nimbly. "Swar to all them things."

Mr. Clarmont went through the required ceremony, taking the precaution to hold the horse's bit in the meantime. He added, "But if you do not tell me truly where Ronald is, of course that check is worthless, for I shall notify the bank not to make it good; and in case you deceive me, I will hunt you down and put the town on your track."

"Oh, that's all right," said the other carelessly. "What do I want to deceive you for? I do not want yore sick boy on my hands, I want yore money. That's why I spirited him away. I might as well tell you that I am Nance, only I'm dressed up this way to git out of the country. 'Tain't proper, but it is pleasant and airy. You see I had a horse hitched in the Covered Bridge to git Frank away on, but when I see this young sport of yourn, thinks I, 'Theys more money in 'im than in the gal,' thinks I. So I jus hefted 'im up in my arms, after I'd stopped the blood from falling all around, rid him to that ole deserted log house over yander in the woods 'bout a mile. Guess you know where I mean. And he's thar now. He didn't give me no trouble; he jus' fainted away and played into my hands like a bird. You'd better hurry over thar, too, 'spect he's lonesome." Saying which, the wicked old woman laughed, and galloped away. She directed the horse into the woods where no path was discernible, and and almost instantly vanished. Mr. Clarmont and the doctor hurried to the deserted cabin, and sure enough, Ronald lay upon the floor, groaning from his wound, and tossing in fever. Near the house stood a horse which the old woman had stolen from a neighboring farm. Nance had chosen a good place for her scheme, for the trees grew close together, the undergrowth was dense, and the path into the clearing had long since been overgrown. Had Nance captured Frank she could have kept her here indefinitely. A wounded boy, however, was more than she had anticipated. Not long after, Ronald Clarmont lay in his own bedroom, dilirious from his pain and fright, unable to answer questions.

THE PARALYTIC HEALED.*

After the arduous labors of the Sabbath, spent in Capernaum, of which we learned in last week's lesson, Jesus was sorely in need of rest. Far into the night had he received the sufferers, whose friends brought them for healing, and not one of their prayers was denied. When at last the multitudes had retired, all others in the house fell into a deep sleep that lasted till the morning. Jesus alone could not sleep. The draught upon his sympathies had been two heavy, the consciousness of his expanding mission was becoming so intense that he must be alone with his Father for a time, that he might gather new strength to face and fully discharge his divine ministry to men. Long before day, as Mark tells us, he stole forth into one of the quiet valleys back of the city, and there spent the hours till morning in prayer. When his disciples at last found him, and told him that the crowds were again gathering at the house, to their surprise he refused to return, saying that he must preach in the other towns of Galilee. Perhaps he feared this sudden wave of popularity, knowing that it was due not so much to the truth he was teaching as to the miracles he had wrought. He ever tried to keep miracles in the background, accounting them secondary to the great cause of truth and righteousness. Without going back to the city, therefore, he started on a tour of some length, during which he visited many of the towns of Galilee, and taught in their synagogues, performing at the same time the same wonderful works of healing that had characterized his ministry elsewhere.

But one specific incident of this tour is given by the evangelists, that of the healing of a leper, perhaps because it was the first of these unfortunates that he had healed. They were seldom allowed inside the cities, and their touch was counted extreme pollution. In an advanced stage of the disease the flesh rotted and fell from the bones, the toes and fingers dropped off, one by one, the lips and eyelids festered and fell away, and the whole face and figure became hideous to behold. Such a case was this. Luke says that the man was "full of leprosy." Falling down before Jesus the poor wretch wailed out his agonizing appeal: "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make clean." The answer was immediate, but not altogether such as the disciples, or even the leper, had anticipated. "Without a gesture of repugnance, he laid his cool, clean touch upon the other's crumbling flesh. The outcast of contagion looked in vain for the expression of disgust that he was used to seeing on the faces of well and blessed men. Not a shadow crossed the eyes of the Nazarene; they were like stars become human; ineffable compassion rayed from them, only that." The simple words of Jesus were: "I will; be thou made clean." According to the Mosaic law it defiled one to touch the leper. But the Son of man touched all defilement that he might cleanse it, and no such contact could impart uncleanness. When we are so filled with the virtue of Christ that our touch imparts health to other souls, we can safely go where we will and be the friends of sinners.

Yet, though Jesus cared little for the merely ceremonial in religion, he would not dishonor the law of his people; hence he sends the healed leper to Jerusalem to offer the sacrifices required by the law. This would both show the gratitude of the recipient of divine grace, and at the same time give him entrance again into the society of his fellowmen, when declared by the priest to be cured. Warning him against making his cure public, Jesus dismissed him; but the warning was unheeded, and the whole region rang with tidings of the marvelous cure. Perhaps for this reason, because his contact with the leper had made him ceremonially unclean, Jesus avoided the cities for a time, and continued his preaching in the country districts. But the people thronged about him despite the fact that he had laid his hands on a leper, and his healing work made him known everywhere.

Some months were probably occupied in this tour, after which Jesus returned to Capernaum. No sooner was it known that he was again at home than the people again gathered about the door in multitudes, bringing with them their sick, as before. One day, as he was preaching to a great crowd, that filled the house and overflowed into the street, there was brought a man who was so helpless from palsy that he had to be carried on a couch, or mattress, by four of his friends. Finding it impossible to get near enough to the door to attract the attention of the Healer, they made their way to the roof, either by an outside stairway, or by passing from one of the adjacent houses. Removing some of the tiles with which the houses were covered, they let down through the aperture the man upon his bed. Such faith impressed the Savior with the earnestness of the sufferer and his friends. Perhaps there was that in the gaze of the man himself which showed the Master that his heart hungered for holiness even more than his body for health. He gave the best gift first. "Son, thy sins are forgiven." What peace must have entered the soul of the afflicted man at these words, and what perfect content must have stolen over his countenance, even though his palsied lips could not frame the words of loving gratitude that struggled for utterance.

But there were present some of Jesus' most watchful and determined enemies, Pharisees and scribes from all parts of Galilee, where he had been visiting and teaching. Some had come even from Judea and Jerusalem to investigate the character and work of this new prophet and rabbi. Such claim of authority as he was now making they esteemed blasphemy, and they murmured to themselves: "Who can forgive sins but God only?" The reader of hearts was in their midst. He needed not that they should utter their skepticism. He accepts their challenge and gives proof of his authority. "Which is easier, to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins are forgiven, or to say, Arise and take up thy bed and walk?" Manifestly, it was a more hazardous thing to say the latter, for the result would be such as they could test by its visible effect. Then they should see the manifestation of his authority. "I say unto thee, Arise, take up thy bed and go unto thy house!" The effect was instantaneous. The palsied man sprang to his feet, gathered up the cot on which he had been lying and went to his home. Thus the Son of Man proved his power on earth to forgive sins. God would not have set the seal of his approval on the words of a blasphemer; and the multitude glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion. It seems that this display of power, following the ministry of mercy which had brought such blessings to the afflicted, and accompanied by such discourses as men had never heard before, should have conquered the unbelief of Jesus' enemies and made them believers. But it rather deepened their hatred and intensified their purpose to accomplish his death. From this time Jesus never escapes the watchful eye of his antagonists. Already the shadow of the cross has been thrown athwart his path. His footsteps shall wander yet awhile among the needy objects of his divine compassion, but they will turn steadily toward the Via Dolorosa and the steeps of Calvary.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 11.

REJECTING CHRIST.

(Mark 12:1-9.)

This parable evidently looks forward toward Christ's rejection by the Jews. They were the husbandmen of God's vineyard, and they rejected or slew prophet after prophet that was sent to them, and finally they rejected and slew Jesus, the Son. Nor was Calvary the last rejection of Christ by the Jews. When Paul went to them with the message of Christ, they refused to hear, so that Paul shook off the dust of his feet and said: "Seeing ye put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

There are others, too, than the Jews who have rejected Christ, time and again. All of us have thrust him out of the vineyard at one time or another. All of us have slain him afresh and put him to open shame in one act or another.

Wherever an opportunity for good has come our way, and we have failed to embrace it, we have rejected Christ. Yonder stands a figure beckoning us and pointing the way down the wide, white road of a beautiful opportunity—who is it? It is Christ. We turn our backs and refuse to walk that road. We reject the opportunity. We reject Christ. O, the multitude of lost opportunities! They never can be recalled. The fatal stone of rejection has been hurled. It never can be brought back. We have a chance to do good, and instead we do nothing, or worse. The door is shut in our faces and we hear the sad song, "Too late! too late! ye cannot enter now." By refusing to prepare for the bridegroom you have rejected him. Rejecting the opportunity, you have rejected him.

In failing to be true to a responsibility to service, we are untrue to Christ. A great trust had been imposed upon those husbandmen, and they were false to the trust. In each of us there is reposed one or another trust; according as we are true or false to it shall we be true or false to Christ. "O, but my responsibility is such a little one," objects some Endeavorer; "I have no responsibility great enough to be compared with Christ." He that is faithful over a few things shall be ruler over many; and he that is false in one small particular has rejected the Lord of small things.

When one rejects some friend or neighbor, and serves oneself instead, one is choosing a great, ugly toad, like Barabbas, and rejecting Christ. Yonder is one who, though perhaps not in any great need, is nevertheless to be served by us in some way, to be placed in a higher position, to be furthered in some good work; but instead, we choose our own petty selves, and thrust us forward. Thus do we reject Christ and choose Barabbas, the thief. No matter how poor and insignificant is the one who ought to be helped, he stands in the place of our Lord to us, and if we fail of our duty, out of the eyes of that offended one shall look the mute message, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

Whenever we reject the truth for a lie; whenever we reject the high for the low, the pure for the unworthy; whenever we reject stern duty for indolence; whenever we reject noble effort and seek soft pleasure; whenever we leave the life of meditation and prayer for the whirl of earthly achievement, we are rejecting Christ our Lord.

THE PLACE AND TIME OF JESUS' MINISTRY.

By Herbert L. Willett, Director.

The land in which the events of the Scriptures found their location is the most interesting on the planet. Lying at the east end of the Mediterranean Sea, between which and the far-stretching desert, it occupies a place of supreme importance in the life of the ancient world. Palestine, receiving its name, as it does, from the Philistines, who were believed by the Greeks to be its dominant population, was the scene of some of the most important events in the story of the relations between the East and the West, from the twelfth to the second century before Christ. It is a land of striking variations—of elevation, vegetation, temperature, soil and inhabitants. Coming from the sea eastward toward the desert one traverses five distinct stretches of territory, each possessing its own striking characteristics. There is, first, the coast plain, which varies greatly in breadth, but never widens into a broad expanse. This stretches all the way from Phœnicia down to the lower end of Philistia, with the single break produced by Carmel, which flings its bold promontory out into the sea, cutting the plain to the narrowest of ledges. The second is the Shephelah or plateau, which is characteristic both of Judæa and Samaria, and is a somewhat elevated tableland, by means of which the high hills of the interior let themselves gradually down upon the plain. For the most part, however, this tableland is separated from the central range, and its occupancy by an army does not presuppose the possession of the higher mass beyond. The third division is the Central Range, the most conspicuous part of the Holy Land, as viewed by a traveler looking eastward from the sea, or westward from the desert. This is the "hill country of Judæa" and the "mountains of Ephraim," and constitutes the backbone of that great upheaval which runs all the way from the Lebanons southward to the extremity of Judah. Beyond this range to the east there is an immediate plunge into the chasm of the Jordan, which seems scooped out through the entire length of the land, furnishing the bed, not only of the Jordan itself, but of Lake Merom, the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea, and the depression continues far to the south, until it loses itself in the Gulf of Elath. This deep ravine down which the Jordan plunges, reaches a level far below the Mediterranean, and its most singular phenomenon is the Dead Sea, a considerable body of salt water, without an outlet, save that offered by evaporation. Still further to the east lie the hills of Gilead, which complete the five divisions of the land. Between the north and south, however, there is a conspicuous break which cuts across the country from west to east, separating it into two sections not always clearly defined. The plains of Ezdraelon and Jezreel constitute this break on the side toward the Mediterranean and are the cause of that similar break in the history which divided the nation into two parts or kingdoms.

In this land Jesus had his ministry, and under the conditions of life imposed in such a land he spent his days. At this period Palestine was under the government of the Roman Empire, though there was a measure of autonomy permitted the Jewish people through their hereditary monarchy of the Herods, which had grown up only a few years before. The Herods were Idumeans or Edomites by race, but Jewish by adoption, and held their power by tolerance of the Roman Emperors. However, they exercised but a nominal rule in the period following the life of Jesus. The four divisions of the territory were Judah on the south, Samaria in the center, Galilee on the north, to the west between the Jordan depression and the sea, while on the east of the river lay the territory of Perea. All these were the scenes of Jesus' work, though he seldom visited Samaria, owing to the different class of people making up its population.

The disposition of Jesus' work, so far as locality is concerned, is to be learned from a careful comparison of the Synoptic Gospels with the Fourth. The former lay emphasis upon the ministry in Galilee, while John's record speaks more particularly of the Judæan ministry, at least in the earlier period. From this comparison we learn thrt immediately after the baptism, temptation, and a hasty trip into Galilee, Jesus spent some time in evangelizing, much as John was doing in the region of the Jordan. He took his message to the people of Jerusalem and Judæa before going to the remoter regions, and if there had been a disposition to accept the gospel by the ruling classes, it could have gone forth with far greater rapidity, not only to the remainder of Palestine, but to the world. But after a time Jesus was warned by the imprisonment of John, and the growing scrutiny of the scribes, to withdraw to a greater distance from the capital, and so retired into Galilee. The great central period of his ministry was passed here, with occasional visits to Jerusalem, and it is of this part of his work that the first three Gospels speak with greatest fullness. After the period of opposition began, Jesus left Galilee and retired to the region beyond the Jordan known as Perea, where he spent some time. The account of this ministry is given to us in the Third Gospel, and constitutes one of the most precious portions of the record. All the narratives agree in the final events of his work as located in Jerusalem and its vicinity, and thus we find that our Lord traversed, in the process of his work, the entire territory which had been consecrated by centuries of prophetic activity, and even went occasionally into those more distant regions of Decapolis and Syro-Phœnicia, to which no prophet had ever penetrated. All the inspiration of this splendid land, then much more rich and prosperous than to-day, entered into his life. It was peculiarly the Holy Land, because it was the scene of these unique events in which God moved as never elsewhere in human history, and never so greatly as in the few years when Jesus was carrying on his great mission of preparing the disciples for their world-wide enterprise of accomplishing his own work of bringing men to God.

Literature.

Following up the letters of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, which were published three or four years ago, his brother, William Michael Rossetti, has issued a second volume of letters and other papers under the title, "Ruskin: Rossetti: Preraphaelitism." The volume is occupied largely by the letters which passed between Ruskin and Rossetti during the period from 1854 to 1862, the first of which dates marks the beginning of the acquaintance between Ruskin and Rossetti, and the second the death of the latter's wife. Naturally, a good deal of light is thrown on that movement in art in which both of these men were leaders. But it contains no exposition, defense or history of Preraphaelitism—rather it sets forth in the frankest and most human way the personal side of these great men. When Rossetti, poet and painter, writing to a friend sends his "love to the kids," we may be tolerably certain that he was not posing for the public. Most striking is the kindly way in which Ruskin, who was well-to-do while the other members of the group were endowed with all degrees of impecuniousness from short to broke, constantly sought ways to help them under guise of asking favors from them. He was most expert at that kind of generous hypocrisy. Ruskin gives the following frank characterization of himself in a letter to Rossetti. He had been trying to induce Rossetti to accept from him, on some pretense or other, an income sufficient to permit him to marry the woman of his choice, and fearing that he had given offense, he writes to explain: "You constantly hear a great many people saying I am very bad, and perhaps you have been yourself disposed lately to think me very good. I am neither the one nor the other. I am very self-indulgent, very proud, very obstinate and very resentful; on the other side, I am very upright—nearly as just as I suppose it is possible for a man to be in this world—exceedingly fond of making people happy, and devotedly reverent to all true mental and moral power. I never betrayed a trust—never willfully did an unkind thing, and never, in little or large matters, depreciated another that I might raise myself. I believe I once had affections as warm as most people; but partly from evil chance and partly from foolish misplacing of them, they have got tumbled down and broken to pieces. . . So that I have no friendships and no loves. . . If you hear people say that I am utterly hard and cold, depend upon it it is untrue. Though I have no friendships and no loves, I cannot read the epitaph of the Spartans at Thermopylæ with a steady voice to the end; and there is an old glove in one of my drawers which has lain there these eighteen years, which is worth something to me yet." (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Marion Crawford's latest novel, "Via Crucis," is already in its seventieth thousand, having been on the market a little more than three months. No person who has read a single one of Mr. Crawford's twenty-eight novels needs to be told that he is a literary artist, who uses the English language accurately and effectively as a master workman uses a sharp tool, and who has at his command all the resources of the accomplished story-teller. "Via Crucis," which being interpreted means the way of the cross, is an historical romance of the second crusade. The stage setting, the costumes of the court and the trappings of chivalry offer ample opportunity for the painting of a sumptuous background, and the author makes the most of this opportunity. Without unduly burdening his pages or delaying the course of the narrative, Mr. Crawford shows himself almost as good an historian as he is a novelist. There have been many sober and respectable histories of the Middle Ages which contained less genuine history of the period and contributed less to the understanding of the characters, motives and ways of life of men of that time. The common resource of the historical novelist is the painting of characters which shall be at once vigorously and vividly individual and accurately typical. This the author does, and he does it with rare success, but in addition to this he ventures upon historical generalizations which are both brilliant and true. Mr. Crawford writes his story as if he loved it, but he loves it because it is a living bit of the Middle Ages and he loves the Middle Ages more than the story. We will hazard the opinion that if he should take it into his head to depart from his chosen department of literature and write a History of the Middle Ages, it would be interesting reading, and while it might or might not—probably not—be suited for use as a text-book, it would be good history.

There is a new humorist in the field, whose writings are as provocative of laughter as those of the immortal Mark and who is as unconscious of the fact as Mrs. Eddy is of that quality in her productions. The title of the book is "Heliocentric Astrology and Solar Mentality" and, setting aside sundry treatises on Dowieism, Christian Science and the currency question (not saying, for the present, which side of the latter we have reference to), it is as delectably ridiculous as anything which has crossed our path in the present year of grace. The reader may perhaps be pardoned if he finds himself still in the dark as to the true inwardness of the thing after reading the title. Appreciating this fact, the author proceeds to clear up the matter in a section under the heading: "Argument and Intention." Dipping into this promising chapter, we learn that the science which he proposes to expound is "a new system of personally determining the primary fund of mental and physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes which dominate the nature of the individual as based upon the date of birth." This, whatever it is, is a good deal for one book to do; but it is not all. It "also contains the Harmonies, Chords and Contrasts of the Vital Forces of the Solar System." What more could any reasonable reader ask for the price of one volume? So much of this chapter may presumably be designated by the term, "Intention." But having thus clearly expounded the purpose and method of the science of solar mentality, the author conceives, not without reason, that some may doubt the possibility of "personally determining the primary fund," or in other words, as near as we can come at it, may doubt the proposition that the total amount of mentality in the universe is distributed among individuals according to the state of the solar system when they are born. Hence he proceeds to the "Argument" to establish this position: "Why the nature of a person is specifically influenced in one direction more than in another may seem strange. However, if one considers for a moment the grand contention of forces that are struggling for supremacy in the solar region where he is born, . . surging, overcoming and again equalizing each other, it should be easily realized that they may and do influence mentality, destiny and results." There is no standing against an argument like that, and as for refuting it, it simply can't be done. We accordingly stand aside and allow the forces to surge without interruption and congratulate the author on having the comfortable assurance that, however big an idiot he may have shown himself to be, it is all the fault of an unfortunate personal determination of the vital forces of the solar system whereby, owing to a luckless arrangement of the constellations and signs of the zodiac, the primary fund of common sense was all distributed somewhere else when he was born and an uncommon mental aptitude for making a jay of himself was the only personal determination which he received. You can't blame a man for acting in self-defense.

A recent book by Arthur Silva White entitled, "The Expansion of Egypt Under Anglo-Egyptian Condominium," gives the fullest statement which we have seen of the political situation in North Africa, the part which Great Britain has played in the development and the part which she must play in the future. After giving a description of the country, its geographical, topographical and climatic conditions, the author takes up historically the question of the political life of modern Egypt and constructs an elaborate argument in favor of the continuance and strengthening of British power in Egypt. The proposition in which the whole treatise issues is that Great Britain must eventually set aside the ridiculous pretense of Turkish suzerainty, which is even now nothing more than a diplomatic fiction, and declare a British protectorate. The argument is strong, as any one knows who is at all familiar with the history of modern Egypt and with the results which have followed from British control, hampered as it has been by diplomatic considerations, and it is backed up by Mr. White with a great deal of scientific information about the country, which shows that he has approached the problem, not from the standpoint of a mere politician, but of the anthropologist and the economist as well. DANGEROUS TO LIFE

Surgical Operations for Piles Dangerous and Unnecessary.

The failure of ointments, salves and pills to permanently cure piles has led many to believe the only cure to be a surgical operation.

But surgical operations are dangerous to life and moreover, are often unsuccessful and at this time are no longer used by the best physician nor recommended by them.

The safest and surest way to cure any case of piles, whether itching, bleeding or protruding, is to use the Pyramid Pile Cure, composed of vegetable oils and acids, healing and soothing to the inflamed parts, and containing no opium or other narcotic.

Dr. Williams, a prominent orificial surgeon, says: "It is the duty of every surgeon to avoid an operation if possible to cure in any other way, and after many trials with the Pyramid Pile Cure I unhesitatingly recommend it in preference to an operation.

The harmless acids and oils contained in it cause the blood vessels to contract to a natural condition and tumors are absorbed and the cure is made without pain, inconvenience or detention from business.

In bleeding and itching piles the Pyramid is equally valuable."

In some cases a single package of the Pyramid has cured long standing cases, being in suppository form it is always ready for use, can be carried in the pocket when traveling; it is applied at night and does not interfere with the daily occupation. The Pyramid Pile Cure is not only the safest and surest remedy for piles, but is the best known and most popular from Maine to California. Every physician and druggist knows it and what it will do.

The Pyramid Pile Cure can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents for full sized treatment.

A little book on cause and cure of piles mailed free by addressing the Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Michigan.

For General Debility Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. L. Severance, Greenfield, Mass., says: "For years I have prescribed it in general debility, nervous exhaustion and insomnia, with the happiest results.

Obituaries.

ALLENDER.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Allender, wife of John Allender, after a brief illness passed into rest Jan. 31, 1900, aged 61 years. She was an earnest member of the Hannibal Church, and was noted for activity when the opportunity presented itself, and for patience when a period of waiting seemed to be necessary. Her hopeful Christian life made her a kind of anchor to the varying life of the community and many sought her wise counsel in perplexity and trouble. She was a loving wife, a faithful sister and mother, and a reliable friend. She will be missed seriously in the home, the church and the city. We all have a precious memory of her. LEVI MARSHALL.

DAVIS.

Isaac Davis was born Jan. 20, 1815, in the state of Ohio. Removed to Illinois and later came to Indiana. Was a member of the Baptish Church, and later of the Methodist. Died Feb. 15, 1900, age 85 years and 25 days. Funeral conducted by A. W. Gehres at Buck Creek Chapel, near Irvington, Indiana. Mr. Davis was the father of eight children, six sons and two daughters; four of which, three sons and one daughter, survive him.

Irvington, Ind. A. W. GEHRES.

DOOLEY.

Samuel Dooley was born Feb. 14, 1837, in Clark county, Ky. He confessed his Savior under the preaching of Rev. John Allen Gano, during the fall of 1857. Bro. Dooley has been a great sufferer from cancer of the head, having been sick for eight years. He was Sunday-school superintendent for over 25 years, and was loved and respected by all. He was married to Miss Mary F. Wallin in September, 1858. Three daughters blessed this union, Mrs. Belle Priest, of Joplin, Mo., Mrs. Amelia Crane, of Barry, Mo., and Mrs. George Priest. He moved to Clay county in September, 1866, where he has lived, with the exception of six months in Kansas City. He came to Barry in 1877. He died in Joplin, Mo., where he had gone on a visit, Jan. 25, 1900. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Preston Aker, an old friend, at the Christian Church.

MRS. CLARA H. WILLIAMS.

LIPSCOMB.

Dr. W. H. Lipscomb fell asleep in Jesus Jan. 23, 1900. He was one of our ablest and most faithful members. He was bo n in Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 22, 1839, graduated from the University of Virginia in '66, was soon after ordained for a minister of the gospel. He combined the practice of medicine with preaching, as Paul did tent-making. He was a man of strong conviction and great faith. He adhered strictly to the Book, believing it means what it says. He left a wife, two sons and three daughters. All are Christians. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

J. T. BOONE.

OWENS.

Miss Clio Owens was suddenly called from pleasant fell wship in the family and village into the heavenly life. She had accepted her Savior's message several years ago and she had built a beautiful Christian life, though young in years. She was a member of the Hannibal Church, but lived in Oakwood, a neighboring town. She was rather th pride of the family, and her sudden departure leaves the parents and other relatives peculiarly sad, but may her conduct, as it is now seen in its true perspective, be the influence that shall assist those to whom she was very dear to see life in its fullest meaning, and thus in its sweep include fuller obedience to God. WHAT TWO WOMEN SAW.

Two New York women stood in front of a Broadway window watching a Persian weaver laboriously weaving upon a frame, the pattern of a beautiful rug. Slowly, almost imperceptibly, thread by thread the pattern grew beneath his hand, until what had seemed a meaningless crossing of dull threads gradually took on form and beauty.

Suddenly one of the two women began to repeat the lines:

Weaving, weaving threads of faith
Pattern of a woman's heart,
Who can ere anticipate
The hues of life in every part?
Will the colors warmly glow—
All traced in love and happiness;
Or will they fade in somber woe?
A woman's future who can guess?

There is infinite pathos in the way that women ponder over and try to trace out the purpose and meaning of their lives. To young and happy women it seems as if destiny was weaving their future in all the colors of the rainbow like a merry dance of cupids weaving garlands about a May pole in the spring-time of life. But to thousands of women life looks to be all "a warp of sorrow in a woof of pain."

WHAT LIFE REALLY IS.

A woman's life pattern is really woven by herself. A great philosopher has said "Life is neither pain, nor pleasure; it is serious business." If a woman would make it her serious business to understand herself mentally, morally and physically, using the common sense that God has given her, there would be far less misery and suffering woven into the pattern of her life. She can make it almost anything she chooses.

Every woman who wants to derive the full share of happiness, which nature intended her to find as a woman, wife and mother, ought to read that great and wise book, The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, by R. V. Pierce, M. D. Several hundred of its thousand pages are devoted to the subject of woman's special physiology, telling in plain and refined language how a woman may build up her physical self to meet the emergencies of her developing career.

The author of this great book is among the most successful of living physicians. His "Favorite Prescription" is known in every corner of the civilized globe as the most remarkable supportive tonic and health creator ever devised for weak and ailing women. It imparts direct strength and healthful vitality to woman's delicate, special structure, and increases the vigor, endurance and recuperative force of her entire system.

A Pennsylvania lady, Mrs. Alonzo Rathmell, living at the corner of Meade and Almond Sts., in Williamsport, in a recent letter, says: "My life is a story of misery. Until the birth of my boy I had health that I often boasted of. I married in my twenty-fifth year, and two years afterward my boy was born. Then the health I boasted of was suddenly gone. Pen or tongue can never describe the awful suffering I endured for a year and a half. I was so miserable I longed for death to relieve me, when a kind neighbor came in and asked me to try a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I said, despairingly: 'Oh, its of no use, I can't ever be any better.' She insisted, and my husband, who was in despair, got a bottle, and I took it just to please him. I had not taken half a bottle when I was able to walk across the room without feeling faint or having any palpitation of the heart. Oh what a God-send your medicine is to suffering humanity. We had spent two hundred dollars with the leading doctors without any benefit whatever.

"Last December I had a baby, and, thanks to your 'Favorite Prescription.' I stood the confinement well and have a fourteen pound baby girl. To-day I feel as well as I ever did in my life."

For thirty years Dr. Pierce has been chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute of Buffalo, N. Y., assisted by a staff of nearly a score of skilled specialists in the different branches of medical practice. Any woman consulting him by mail will receive, free of charge, the best professional advice anywhere obtainable. All correspondence is regarded as sacredly confidential.

The magnificently illustrated "Common Sense Medical Adviser" is now published in a paper-covered edition which will be sent absolutely free for the bare cost of mailing; 21 one-cent stamps which should be sent to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. Or 31 stamps should be sent if a durable, heavy cloth-bound volume is preferred.

I regard the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as—not among our best papers, nor one of the best, but—the best. I have much enjoyed the large, free, soul-enlightening thoughts disseminated through its columns. I am especially pleased with the doctrine of the atonement and resurrection of the dead, the unity of God and its position on higher criticism, missionary work, etc.—J. A. ABNEY, Grand View, Tex.

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main,—
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the siren sings,
And coral reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

The Christian-Evangelist in Clubs of Twenty-Five at One Dollar a Year. This offer good during March only.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST confidently expects to be a more effective and influential power for good during the present year because of two reasons: first, we are constantly learning through our successes and failures how to make the paper what it ought to be; second, the great increase in our list of readers, due to the kind yet earnest efforts of our friends, gives us a much wider field in which to put forth our efforts. We sincerely solicit the co-operation of all our readers in extending the influence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and their prayers that we may be guided with wisdom from above in order that that influence may be for the good of the cause and the elevation of our race.

We have no desire to boast, and our reason for mentioning the encouraging increase in the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is that our readers may rejoice with us over the fact that there are so many more who are brought weekly under the influence of good literature with the consequent promise of an increase in knowledge, a broadening of charity toward one another and a deepening of our spiritual life generally. Each one can materially assist in this work, and all are invited to do so.

The week has been an encouraging one in the increase of circulation. It is not practicable to even attempt to mention any considerable number of the churches which have contributed to this increase by additions of from one to fifty in our subscription list. Among the larger lists are those from Des Moines Central Church, Lathrop, Mo., Decatur, Ill (Marion Stevenson, pastor), Little Rock Ark., De Soto, Ia., and Buffalo, Mo.

Just three weeks in which to take advantage of our wonderful club offer of One Dollar in clubs of twenty-five. If your church desires to improve the character of the literature which finds its way into the homes of its membership, now is the time to do it. If you are really in earnest about it, three weeks is ample time to make a canvass of the church.

The quickest and consequently the best way is to select several of your most capable members to do the soliciting and divide the membership among them. Let them make their reports and then combine these reports, sending them promptly to this office.

Our readers who enjoyed with us the excellent articles on bicycle traveling, by W. E. Garrison, entitled "Wheeling Through England" and "Wheeling Through Europe," will be pleased to know that a similar series of letters of travel through Norway, Sweden, Finland, Russia, Turkey, Greece and perhaps several other countries will soon appear in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the same pen. Bro. Garrison's method of travel leads him away from the usual lines followed by the average tourist and enables him to see the country in its natural, every-day life. He has, also, as those who have read his letters will agree, the happy faculty of seeing the things of real interest to the average reader and of relating them in a fine literary way and an exceedingly pleasing manner. Your young as well as your old friends will enjoy this feature of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There will be nothing either "dry" or "musty" about this series of letters.

The Journeys of Jesus

Did you ever think why it is that books for children are largely filled with pictures? It is because a picture catches the eye quicker and makes a more distinct impression on the child mind than do printed words. Has it occurred to you that in studying the life of Jesus in the Sunday-school, you ought to have a good map of Palestine, showing the journeys of Jesus? Our MAP OF THE TRAVELS OF JESUS is just the thing you and your School need.

WHAT IT IS.

Strong lines of different colors show the Journeys of Jesus, beginning with the Nativity and ending with the Ascension. The most minute details of our Lord's itinerancy are distinctly shown, giving every act, incident, event, miracle, parable, etc., in the order in which they occurred in his life. Showing a complete chronological chain of events, which practically explain the worst seeming contradictions of the New Testament. The Journeys of Jesus are shown so simply and clearly that a child can comprehend. Every effort has been made to make this an improvement on any map of Palestine that has preceded it.

A. P. STOUT.

WHAT IT IS.

This map is the result of many years of labor, study and research by Rev. A. P. Stout. The map of the Travels of Jesus has been made a life-work by him. He designed it especially for Sunday-schools and Bible Classes. It is a large and correct map of Palestine at the time of Christ, showing in colors the Territorial Divisions according to the most recent explorations and surveys. Its large size, and clear, distinct style of lettering, have combined to produce a map that will be welcomed in every Sunday-school. No expense has been spared to make this map as near perfect as possible.

PRICE—Formerly Five Dollars, has been reduced to Three Dollars.
SIZE—This Map is Six Feet Long and Three Feet Wide. . . . . .
FINISH—Varnished and Mounted on Rollers, Ready to Hang Up.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The bill for the government of Porto Rico was passed by the House on Wednesday of last week by a vote of 172 to 161. The bill as passed was in the form agreed upon by the Republican caucus, embodying a tariff on commerce between the island and the United States at a rate equal to 15 per cent. of the rate under the Dingley law, with a time limit of two years. So far as the amount of revenue is concerned, the point is not an important one, but the questions involved in the imposition of this tariff promise to make it a serious matter for the party which passed the measure. The constitution provides that duties and imposts shall be equal throughout the United States and that no duty shall be levied upon commerce between different parts of the United States. In passing this bill the Republican party has taken the ground that the provisions of the constitution do not extend to territory which the United States may acquire, unless Congress so orders; that Congress has, therefore, unlimited power over territorial possessions. If this is true, then Congress could, if so desired, suspend the writ of habeas corpus, deprive persons of property without due process of law, restrict freedom of speech and of the press, prohibit peaceably assembling to petition for redress of grievances, or endow a religious establishment. We do not believe that there is any danger that Congress will do any of these things, even if it has the power, but Congress does some very queer things. It is easy to see that additional strength will be given to the argument against expansion of our territory, if it is not to be accompanied by extension of our guarantees of liberty. It is quite possible to give the liberty without giving the guarantee. Great Britain has given her colonies liberty as fast as they were able to use it, and she has no written constitution with which to guarantee liberty either at home or in the colonies. But there has been enough talk already about selfish aggression and the exploiting of our island possessions in the interest of our own pocketbooks. The withholding of the constitution and the imposition of a protective tariff against Porto Rico's sugar cannot but arouse suspicion.

The attitude of the President toward this Porto Rican tariff has been such as to excite surprise and anxiety among many of his supporters. The President was originally in favor of free trade with the island, as was also the committee which drew up the bill. The amendment imposing the tariff was made in the committee room before the bill was presented. There was great difficulty in lining up a Republican majority in favor of it, and it would not have been possible at all without a compromise. The Democrats in the House took the position against the tariff, as the President had recommended. But in the struggle in the Republican caucus, the President urged the passage of the bill with the tariff. Congressman Watson, of Indiana, testifies that the President urged him to vote for the bill, saying that he had "changed his mind" about the tariff. It is no disgrace to change one's mind for a good reason, but no creditable reason has been even suggested in this case. It appears on the surface that the President preferred to have the Republicans pass a bill which he did not favor, rather than have the Democrats pass a substitute which he did favor. It is suggested by political enemies that the influence of Mr. Havermeyer and the Sugar Trust, which is the chief beneficiary of the tariff, entered somewhat too strongly into the result. The Democratic party is at present searching with all zeal for an issue for the coming campaign, and it is possible that this incident may contribute something of importance. The immediate result of the passage of the bill has been to bring up for discussion again the whole subject of protection and free trade as it has not been discussed for years. It is an easy and safe prediction that between now and the election there will be a full discussion of the question, How far is the doctrine of protection consistent with the doctrine of expansion? The answer to that question may have an important bearing on the campaign.

It was partly as an offset to the unfortunate effects of the passage of the Porto Rican tariff, that the President sent to the House his special message recommending the appropriation of about $2,000,000 to the relief of Porto Rico. This is the amount which has been collected at ports of the United States on imports from Porto Rico from November, 1898, when the island came into our possession, until January 1, 1900. The President, by an executive order, suspended the duty on imports into the island soon after it came into our possession, but the duty as prescribed in the Dingley law has been collected on all imports into the United States from Porto Rico. The House gave immediate consideration to the President's suggestion and, after a debate limited to forty minutes, passed a bill appropriating the amount mentioned. There is no doubt but that this money ought to be used in this way. The objections to the bill were: first, that it was giving too much authority to the President to empower him to expend this money at his discretion; and second, that it was merely a sop to quiet the opposition to the tariff measure, that it was giving back to Porto Rico a portion of what had been wrongfully taken from her, and that it was an essentially hypocritical action. The charge of hypocrisy is always an easy one to make. No one is entirely safe from it except the man who is thoroughly and consistently villainous without pretense of concealment; a single virtuous act will open the way for the charge of hypocrisy. Whatever may be the motives which prompted this suggestion to relieve the Porto Ricans, it is a good thing to do. But it is a thing which cannot enter materially into the settlement of the matters which are really at issue. The question is, Does the constitution extend to all the possessions of the United States by virtue of the fact that they are possessions of the United States?

On Wednesday night of last week General Buller's forces entered Ladysmith and brought to an end the four months seige of that town. The resistance had been stubborn to the very end and the last relief expedition cost much hard fighting and many men before it was finally successful. But when the Boers retired their retreat was precipitous and a considerable amount of their supplies were left behind. Gen. White's troops were worn with their long seige and emaciated by their short rations, but will be ready for active service in a short time. It was a magnificent defense that they made, and it was a splendid fight which the Boers put up to prevent the relief of the town. No authoritative news has come concerning Gen. Roberts' operations during the last two or three days. The probability now is that there will be an important engagement at Osfontein where the Boers are massing west of Bloemfontein, and the reports indicate that the British have secured the advantage of position. A British cavalry expedition has started north from Kimberley for the relief of Mafeking, and resistence is anticipated at the crossing of the Vaal River at Fourteen Streams, about fifty miles from Kimberley. The release of Col. Baden-Powell and the presence of a strong force at Mafeking will seriously threaten the Transvaal capital. The stage of the war upon British territory is already practically over, with the relief of Ladysmith and the retreat of Joubert. The second stage, in which the scene of the war is the Orange Free State, was inaugurated by the relief of Kimberley and continued by the capture of Cronje. The movement toward Mafeking foreshadows the third stage, in which the war will be upon the soil of the South African Republic.

The case of Prof. McGiffert seems likely to reach a peaceful conclusion by his withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church. As the result of a conference with a number of his friends and prominent Presbyterians, it is reported that Prof. McGiffert has decided to withdraw from the membership of the denomination and become a Congregationalist. It will be remembered that the last General Assembly, after prolonged discussion of Prof. McGiffert's alleged heresy, turned the case over to the New York Presbytery. Specified charges were preferred by Dr. Birch, but the Presbytery by a substantial majority refused to enter upon a heresy trial. There was talk of bringing the case up again before the General Assembly, which is to convene this year in St. Louis. Dr. McGiffert's renunciation of Presbyterianism will save the scandal of a heresy trial, will relieve the consciences of the conservative Presbyterians who felt that they were giving moral support to his views so long as he was among them uncondemned, and will not necessitate his withdrawal from the faculty of Union Theological Seminary. At the same time, it affords only a temporary escape from the issue which will arise again and again. Other men in the denomination hold views as radical as those of Dr. McGiffert. Some of them will come into prominence from time to time. They will not all withdraw. What is to be done with them?

In financial circles there is exultation over the fact that bonds of the new Russian railway to the extent of $25,000,000 have been sold in New York. The sale of these bonds, with 4 per cent. interest payable in gold and guaranteed by the Russian government, constitutes virtually a loan to Russia. It is one of the first large foreign loans, if not the very first, to be floated in this country, and it is pointed to with pride as evidence that the United States is entering actively into the sphere of world-finance as well as world-politics. New York has already larger imports, exports and bank clearances than London, which has been for more than two centuries the financial capital of the world, and it does not seem imp robable that this honor, which has belonged successively to Lisbon, Amsterdam and London, may in the course of not many years follow the star of empire in her westward way.

The Industrial Commission, to which was entrusted the task of investigating the subject of trusts and recommending measures for remedying the evils incident to them, has submitted a preliminary report to Congress. It is in general a sane and conservative document, which will command general respect. No time is wasted upon denunciation, but there is frank recognition of the dangers which are inseparable from uncontrolled aggregations of capital. The safeguard proposed is publicity. It is suggested that all corporations which look to the public to purchase their stock or securities should be required to publish periodically full and accurate reports of their business. The larger corporations should be required to publish annually a report with reasonably full details showing their assets, liabilities and profits or losses. This recommendation is quite in line with President Hadley's much-discussed suggestion that social ostracism is the best cure for the evils connected with trusts. "Social ostracism" does not mean simply refusal to invite the wife of the trust-millionaire to a pink tea at your house, or the blackballing of the trust magnate himself when he wants to join your club. It stands for the operation of the entire force of public opinion in all its many channels. The essential condition for the healthy operation of public opinion is publicity and a great deal of it. That will prevent at once apathetic indifference to public dangers, and the riotous fanaticism which cries out indiscriminately against all vested interests and accumulated capital. The Commission also recommends that increased power be granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission for supervising the operation of the railroads, including power to regulate the classification of freight.

Mr. Montagu White, who is trying to secure contributions in this country for the assistance of the Boers, is on very good terms with Secretary Hay and is a frequent and welcome visitor at the department of state, though in an entirely unofficial capacity. Mr. White has during his whole mission conducted himself in a manner which does credit to his diplomatic sagacity and general intelligence. On first arriving in Washington he called upon the Secretary of State, told him that he had no credentials to present and no application to make for official recognition, but that he wanted it to be known what he was here for and that he was on a legitimate mission. He did not care to precipitate any controversy about the recognition of Boer independence or to become entangled in any question of either foreign or domestic politics. Operating on that line he has kept everybody's good will and has met with a reasonable measure of success in his mission. Moreover, there is bitter disappointment among those who have been seeking a cause of offense against the administration and thought they would find it in the chilly reception of Mr. White. Mr. White's reception has not been chilly. He has acted like a gentleman and has been treated like a gentleman, and his mission, which is an entirely unofficial one, has had nothing to do with the case.

The Democratic contestants for the minor state offices in Kentucky scored an unexpected point against their Republican adversaries by securing certificates of election from the state board of election commissionsioners. It can scarcely be maintained that this decides anything, for the Republican claimants of the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor have for several weeks held certificates of election signed by the same board. After the delivery of this second set of certificates of election, notice was served on the Republicans to vacate the offices of which they retain possession. It was, of course, not expected that they would comply, and they did not. The business of the state is thoroughly tied up, owing to the multiplicity of officers. The uncertainty as to who is treasurer of the state is particularly embarrassing, for the banks who hold public money on deposit, to be on the safe side refuse to pay to the order of either of the contestants—an evidence of the fact that there are some other things besides broth which can be spoiled by too many cooks.

The British successes during the past two weeks have produced tremendous enthusiasm in England, but no feeling of self-satisfaction and no inclination to suspend preparations for reinforcing the army in South Africa. Arrangements have been made to send 56,000 additional troops, 38,000 of which will sail from England before the close of the present month. The moment of exultation over the victories of Gens. Roberts and Buller was seized to present to Parliament the government's military estimates and to receive favorable consideration for them. Orders have been sent to the Woolwich ordnance factories for a large supply of guns of various sorts and calibers for the use of both army and navy.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

VII. THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

We have reached the point in the steps Christward where the believing penitent in quest of pardon, peace and a good conscience has committed himself unreservedly to Christ as Savior and Lord in the overt act of baptism. In this open and definite committal to Jesus Christ there is sure to come that peace which always follows a decisive act of obedience to God. This is one of the gracious purposes of baptism. "It is wise and kind on the part of Heaven to ordain such acts or to institute such ordinances as will assure ourselves and others of our new relations; and to suspend our enjoyment of the favor and love of God, not merely upon faith and penitence or any other mental operation, but upon certain clear, overt acts, such as baptism, confession, prayer, etc., which affect ourselves and others much more than they possibly can affect God himself, being the fruit of our faith or perhaps, rather, only the perfecting of our faith in the promises of God."*

Connected with this act of self-surrender to Christ, there is not only the assurance of remission of sins, but a promise, the supreme value of which has been often overlooked or underestimated. It is the promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit. True, the Holy Spirit has been active in producing conversion by convicting of sin, but He is promised as a Comforter and indwelling Guest, a helper of our infirmities, imparting strength and shedding abroad the love of God in our hearts, only to the obedient believer. This is no doubt because no other kind of person is supposed to be in condition to entertain such a Guest. In addition to that consideration, however, there is the further fact that at this point—the point of self-surrender to Christ—the believer enters actively into the service of Christ and undertakes the real work of life. The Holy Spirit is not a mere ornament. His coming into our hearts is to fit us for service, for enduring temptation, for resisting evil, for conflict with the powers of darkness.

*Christian System, p. 67.

It is a noteworthy fact that the conflict which Jesus had with the Adversary was after his baptism and just as He was entering upon his active ministry. It is when the soul dedicates itself to the service of God, puts behind it the allurements of the world and sets for itself high and holy tasks, that it is apt to meet with the fiercest assault from the powers of darkness, and stands most in need of that divine energy, lofty courage and noble enthusiasm which the Holy Spirit inspires within the true believer. Attention has often been called to the contrast between the condition of the apostles before and after the reception of the Holy Spirit. Timid, vacillating, doubting, before the glorious outpouring of the Spirit, they were afterwards bold, aggressive, unwavering in their devotion to Christ and in their testimony for Him. Similar transformations have been witnessed through all the history of the church. The great heroes, martyrs and reformers, who have not counted their lives precious if they might but advance the kingdom of God, were men who were filled with the Spirit and in whose innermost being there had been opened up perennial springs of life, which flowed out for the blessing of mankind.

It was the mission of Jesus to give life to the world. "I am come," He said, "that ye might have life, and that more abundantly." This life is imparted by and through the Holy Spirit. We have not the visible, incarnate Christ with us, as did the first disciples, but we have the invisible Holy Spirit, representing Christ and carrying on Christ's work within us. It was expedient that Christ should go away that He might come in this spiritual form to dwell with His disciples forever. The possession of the Holy Spirit is far better for us, during the process of our Christian development, than the visible, bodily presence of Christ. It is sad to think how many nominal Christians there are who have not availed themselves of the strength and joy and guidance of the Holy Spirit, and who are suffering the consequences in feeble and impoverished lives. We are slow to understand the riches of God's grace to us in Christ Jesus. We feel it to be necessary to be living at this poor dying rate when our lives might abound in all fruitfulness and blessedness through the power of the Holy Spirit. Many of us have never yet dreamed of the possibilities opened up to us in the Christian life. We have not entered into any real experience of what Paul calls the "unsearchable riches of Christ."

If it be asked how we may receive the Holy Spirit, we reply, there must, first of all, be a desire for the Holy Spirit. Having put our lives in accord with the will of God so far as we know, we may confidently pray for the Holy Spirit, expecting that God will surely fulfill his promise to us. Having made that petition in faith, let us rely upon its fulfillment and go forward in duty, claiming the promise. We will doubtless soon have occasion to thank God for the proofs of the presence and help of the Spirit in our Christian work. If we undertake what seems to us difficult tasks in the line of Christian duty, we will find the needed strength given to us to perform them. Such is the history of Christian experience. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

Christians are said to be "sealed" by the Holy Spirit unto the day of redemption. The Holy Spirit is also said to be an "earnest" of the future inheritance. The Ephesian Christians were exhorted by Paul to be "filled," not with wine, but "with the Holy Spirit." This is the privilege of Christians of our time as well as of that early day. The sanctification to which we are called by the gospel can only be realized through the possession of the Holy Spirit. He is the author of all holiness, and "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." There is a general complaint among the churches of the prevalence of the spirit of worldliness and of prayerlessness. There is frequently, too, a lack of that unity in church life which is essential to success. Have we not an explanation of these evils in the too general neglect of the Holy Spirit on the part of professed Christians? We cannot doubt that such is the case, and we therefore urge the more earnestly that the ministry give especial emphasis to this subject until there is a more intelligent understanding among the churches of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit and of the vital importance of possessing the Spirit as a condition of spiritual growth and prosperity.

PROTESTANTISM IN THE PHILIPPINES.

We print this week an interesting letter from the Philippines, by Rev. C. B. Carlisle, late Chaplain U. S. V. in Cuba, but now doing service in connection with Y. M. C. A. work in the Philippines. Our readers will remember that we published some letters from Chaplain Carlisle while he was in Cuba. The contrast which he draws between the Cubans and the Filipinos will probably be surprising to most of our readers. The question which Bro. Carlisle opens as to the propriety of planting Protestant missions in the Philippines is one of very considerable importance. We do not see our way clear, by any means, to accept our correspondent's conclusion, that it will be highly inadvisable, under the circumstances, for Protestant missionaries to inaugurate work in these islands. We can readily see, however, that a certain kind of Protestant propaganda, characterized more by sectarian zeal and the spirit of belligerency than by love for the truth and a wise adaptation of the truth to the needs of the people, would be pernicious in its influence.

We see no reason, however, why we should not expect, a mong intelligent Filipinos, and the more so as they become more enlightened, inability to accept Roman Catholic faith and practice, and a desire for a purer and more reasonable form of Christianity. History shows that where Roman Catholicism is the only religion tolerated, there exists a large amount of infidelity and immorality, and that Roman Catholicism itself becomes exceedingly corrupt. It seems to us almost a truism that if the people of these islands are to be lifted up to a higher civilization and put in a position where they will be capable of self-government, that a higher and purer type of the Christian religion must be established among them than is presented by the Roman Catholicism that is there now, or is likely to be established there by the Roman Catholics of this country.

It would have been well, it seems to us, for the leading religious bodies of this country to have held a missionary conference concerning the work in these islands, with a view of deciding upon the best methods, and of preventing such mistakes as would result from sending the wrong men, or the adoption of false methods of work. It is not a question whether the Filipinos are satisfied with Roman Catholicism, any more than it is a question whether the Mohammedans are satisfied with Mohammedanism, or the people of India with Brahminism. The simple question is: Can Roman Catholicism accomplish for the people of these islands what Christ proposes to accomplish for His people through His religion? If not—and history shows that it has failed to accomplish the political and religious emancipation of the people over whom it has had exclusive control for centuries—then it is the duty of Protestant churches to preach the pure gospel of Christ to them, even as to others.

We can hardly see any argument in favor of disturbing the status quo in those islands, in relation to education, sanitation, finance and political administration, that would not apply to religion as well. If it be said that in these respects they realize the need of improvement, it may be said in reply that to the extent this is true it is the result of their having become conscious that there is something better in these several departments, and there is no reason why many of them at least would not aspire to a higher and purer form of religion once they became acquainted with it. No attempt, of course, will be made to coerce these people to become Protestants, but if they do not have the privilege of becoming such, if they so desire, there will be no religious liberty in the islands.

The case of no man is hopeless then who yields himself to the regenerative influences of the gospel. The grace of God can overcome the most desperate sin of man. The grace, it is true, must be voluntarily received; it will be forced upon no one. But when it is heartily embraced, no heredity can defeat it. For it gives, in Christ, a new nature, a new name, a new life. It is the power of God unto a complete and eternal salvation.—N. Y. Observer.

A SCRIPTURE STUDY.

(Psalm 1.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 14.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Righteousness and sin have their eternal distinction in the being of God and in the nature of things, and work out inevitably opposite results.

Psalm 1 is profoundly ethical in character. It knows nothing about rich or poor, bond or free, high or low, educated or uneducated, kings or peasants. It recognizes just two classes of people—the righteous and the sinful. This is the classification, too, which Jesus teaches in His picture of the judgment scene in Matthew 25, when all nations shall be gathered before Him. All other distinctions sink out of sight in comparison with this ethical distinction.

The first verse of this Psalm is a beatitude upon the negative side of a righteous man's life—the things which he abstains from doing. The language, too, indicates a sort of progress in sin, just as there is progress in righteousness. A blessing is pronounced upon—

"The man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked,
Nor standeth in the way of sinners,
Nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful."

There seems to be a sort of gradation here, beginning with following the advice of the wicked and ending with sitting in the seat of the scornful, making the scorners one's companions and joining with them in their scoffs and jeers at religion. As a matter of fact, we know that evil does make gradual approaches upon men, bringing them gradually under its influence as they become hardened to it, until one who in the beginning would not have consented to such evil associations now finds congenial companionship among scorners and scoffers. The moral of this is self-evident: Beware of the beginnings of evil.

But there is a positive side to a righteous man's character:

"But his delight is in the law of the Lord;
"And in His law doth he meditate day and night."

The contrast between what the righteous man does not do and what he does do is very marked. To "delight in the law of the Lord" and to "meditate upon it day and night" are unmistakable signs that one has come to know God in the sweet experience of forgiveness and reconciliation, and has formed an appetite for spiritual things. Such an one is anxious to know more of God and of His gracious will, to the end that he may render more acceptable service.

We do not know what is the per cent. of Christians of to-day of whom it can be said that they delight in the study of the Word of God, and that they meditate upon it during the day as they go about their daily tasks, and at night as they lie upon their beds. We are sure, however, that there ought to be this relish for spiritual knowledge among all those who profess to be disciples of Christ.

The results of such a course of conduct as are thus set forth, both negatively and positively, are described as follows:

"And he shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water.
That bringeth forth its fruit in its season,
Whose leaf also doth not wither;
And whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

That is a beautiful picture of prosperity. We seem to hear the rippling of clear waters flowing through a desert waste, and to hear the rustle of green leaves on a tree that is planted on the brink of a stream and whose roots drink in its waters. Nor is it a tree simply with beautiful foliage, unwithered by the heat of the sun, for it "bringeth forth its fruit in its season."

The righteous man is like that, and "whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." The reason of this is not any favoritism on the part of God, not any partiality, but such a man works with God and does what is pleasing to God, and this is the secret of all true success. It is a great lesson learned by all of us, when we come to know that success comes from God, and that to work with Him, in His spirit and in harmony with His divine purposes, is the only way to permanent prosperity.

"The wicked are not so." Of course not! They seem to be so, for awhile, but their prosperity is short-lived. It cannot be otherwise. The results of their wickedness are set forth by a very different picture from that given to describe the lot of the righteous:

"But are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.
Therefore the wicked shall not stand in the judgment,
Nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous."

No, not if there is a God in the universe who rules in righteousness. As the wheat is separated from the chaff, so must the wicked be separated from the righteous, by a law as unchanging and irresistible as the nature of God. Sin separates here, even; separates families, separates churches, and often separates communities and nations. The winnowing process is ever going on, and its culmination is to take place in the last day.

"For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous:
But the way of the wicked shall perish."

It is assumed here, rightly, that if the Lord knows the way of the righteous it will have His divine sanction, and those who pursue it will be approved, and that for the same reason—"the way of the wicked shall perish." Here the law of "the survival of the fittest" finds its highest exemplification.

This Psalm antagonizes a loose view of life, all too prevalent, that it matters little how one lives here, as this has little to do with his present and future well-being. Such a view is contrary to human experience as it is to the teaching of Holy Scripture.

PRAYER.

O Thou God of righteousness and truth: We thank Thee that Thou hast revealed to us the everlasting distinction between right and wrong, and that Thou hast endowed us with a moral nature that perceives this distinction. We thank Thee for the warnings in Thy Word against evil doings and for the blessings Thou hast pronounced upon righteousness. Help us, we beseech Thee, our Father, to avoid the beginnings of evil in our lives and characters, and to seek the cleansing power of Jesus Christ, that our lives may be altogether such as Thou wouldst have them be. Grant that we may live the life of the righteous, and that our last end may be like His! In Christ's name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Stern Winter can, on occasion, assume the role of the beautiful, quite as effectively as Summer. At this writing the grim and grizzled old monarch of the North is bedecked with more jewelry than he knows what to do with. The trees are loaded down with crystals, and their limbs are bending gracefully under the weight of diamonds, which need only the flash of sunlight to make them sparkle with a brilliancy equal to those gathered from the fields of Kimberly. The humblest shrub and tiniest blade of grass share in this largess of beauty bestowed by the Boreal king. The strands of wire that thread a great city and do service in conveying light and power, are insulated in transparent tubes, and the cottages of the poor as well as the mansions of the rich are ornamented with crystalline pendants from eave and portico. How like fairyland it will all look when the sun breaks through his pavilion of clouds and smiles benignantly upon the scene! One would turn even from the glory of a June day to look on such a picture. There is one glory of the Summer and another of the Winter. Who can say which is the greater?

But for the beauty of Winter, no less than Summer, one needs to be out of the smoke and grime of the city, far from its madding crowds, and in the solitude of the woods. Were you ever out in the deep, wild forest in winter, when the snow was falling fast, sifting down through the branches of the trees and making the very stillness audible with its whispers as it settles on twig and branch and leaf? Memory calls up a scene from the long past: It was Midwinter, and in the midst of a forest of great oak trees that lifted their huge trunks high in the air, and spread their branches out against the wintry sky, a camp was pitched. A canvas enclosed three sides and made a roof, and the front was open. A fire blazed brightly in front of the tent and sent its smoke curling up above the tops of the trees. All through the day the snow descended until the earth was covered and every branch and twig was bending under the weight of its crystal treasures. There were no crowds of passing people, no soot from chimneys and furnaces to defile the perfect whiteness of the snow or mar the beauty of the scene. No pen or pencil can portray the glory and splendor of those long aisles through the giant trees, decorated with such delicate traceries as no artist could even imagine. In the stillness and grandeur of such a scene one seems to be so close to Nature as to hear the very beatings of her heart, and to feel the presence of that invisible Power which forms the crystals of the snow with no less perfection than that with which it fashions the flowers of the field.

The distinctness with which the scene above described reappears on the scroll of memory, after the passage of more then two score years, suggests a fact which we often forget, viz., that every one's memory is a vast picture gallery—more or less vast according to the number of scenes which have been imprinted upon it. It is a great mistake to suppose that when we have witnessed a scene of imposing grandeur, a landscape of surpassing beauty, that the enjoyment of it ceases when we cease to gaze upon it with our outward eyes. If we have seen intelligently and appreciatively, the scene will stay with us, with more or less distinctness, and constitute a part of our permanent possessions. To behold the beauty and grandeur of the scene from Mount Rigi once is to behold it forever. The blue Swiss lakes that lie beneath you, and the vast Alpine range of mountains, some of whose peaks are covered with glaciers, pass again before your mental vision, as you turn the leaves of memory in reviewing the past. It is this fact that makes travel worth while, and it is this fact that should lead each one of us to take heed what he sees as well as what he hears. We may do much to enhance the pleasures of memory by storing away in the mind all the beautiful and sublime scenes which we can gather from the vast panorama of nature.

What we have just said applies to things audible as well as things visible. Memory has a music hall as well as an art gallery. No one with music in his soul, who has ever heard Patti sing or Paderewski play can fail to have, ever afterward, a higher appreciation of the possibilities of music. The notes of these great artists linger in the chambers of memory evermore, and one may at pleasure recall some of the sensations produced by their melodies. The same is true when one has heard a great orator move a vast audience by the power of his eloquence. One may not recall a single sentence uttered, but the general purpose of the speaker and the influence which he exerted upon you at the time become a part of your permanent possessions. Thus it is that in one department or another of memory we are storing up the impressions made upon us by the scenes and associations with which we come in contact in our daily lives. Could there be a stronger argument for seeking the purest associations and opening our minds and hearts to the noblest impressions within our reach? Coming back to the point from which we started, then, this remarkable demonstration of the power of winter, notwithstanding its innumerable inconveniences, frames a thousand pictures of beauty and splendor that may well exercise an educational value upon the soul, and which may prove delightfully refreshing when reviewed during the sultry days of the coming summer.

Even a man who does not like winter for any other reason may like it because it always leads to spring. It was a New Yorker who said that he was very fond of Chicago because there were so many trains leaving every day for New York.

Questions and Answers.

Where in the Scriptures will I find an account of Christ's praying in public, and which one of the twelve was it that leaned on Christ's bosom at the last supper?

Melrose, Idaho. P. C. Summers.

What is called Christ's intercessory prayer, recorded in John 17, was probably uttered in the presence of his disciples. No doubt Jesus often prayed in the presence of his disciples, and the prayer which he taught them to pray was a common or social prayer. There is one instance, at least, in which Jesus prayed in the presence of the multitude. It was the brief prayer uttered at the grave of Lazarus. (See John 11:41-42.) Jesus laid great stress on private or secret prayer, but never disparaged praying with and in the presence of others, when the motive was right. John, otherwise known as "the disciple whom Jesus loved," was the one who leaned upon the Master's bosom at the last supper.

1. How do we harmonize John 3: 22, 26, where it is affirmed that Jesus baptized, with John 4:2, where it is affirmed that "Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples?"

2. Do the Scriptures recognize any other cause of divorce than adultery? F. E. J.

1. There is no way of harmonizing the two passages except on the common sense principle that what one does through an agent he does himself. What the first passages declare is that under the teaching and direction of Jesus people were being baptized in Judea, and in greater numbers than under the ministry of John. What the second passage declares is that this baptizing was not done by the hands of Jesus, but by his disciples, under his teaching and direction. We often so speak now, and there is no misunderstanding. We manufacture contradictions in the Bible by pressing a too hard and literalistic interpretation upon the words of Scripture.

2. It is the general consensus of opinion among Bible scholars that Christ limited the cause of divorce to adultery or a violation of the marriage bond. It is at least in the spirit of this teaching of Jesus that we must deal with the problem of divorce.

In what sense are Jesus and his Father one, as indicated in his prayer in John 17?

Learner.

They are one in nature, in character, in in purpose and in work. So completely did Christ represent the Father that he said to his disciples: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." We are not to deny the distinction in the Godhead between the Father and the Son, as we understand the Christadelphians do, nor are we to deny the deity of Jesus Christ, as the Unitarians do. What the New Testament seems to clearly teach is that in the divine nature, i. e., in the Godhead, there is a trinity of beings, manifested as Father, Son and Holy Spirit—not three Gods, but a tri-personality of the one living and true God. Here, of course, is a truth that transcends reason, but so does the truth of man's own threefold nature—body, soul and spirit. In these high regions we "walk by faith, not by sight."

Current Religious Thought.

A writer in the New York Observer exhibits a suggestive paradox in extolling the value of ruts. He says:

There is, we believe, a good deal of sympathy wasted upon people who have gotten into a rut, who from compulsion or choice follow day after day a beaten groove. It seldom occurs to us that a rut may be a good thing, that it is, in fact, a positive source of strength. It is the man in a rut who conserves his energies, who does his work with the least friction by doing it day by day in the same way, and under precisely the same conditions, and so is most likely to succeed and last longest. For he not only avoids the worry certain to diminish the efficiency of the restless, but the steady devotion to work greatly lessens or overcomes its difficulties. Nor can following a rut be truthfully said to make one a mere machine. Some of the profoundest and most original thinkers have devoted themselves to what most men would regard as dull and monotonous avocations. For them the rut did what seclusion and solitude do for many others—removed all obstacles to continuity of thought.

In place of "rut" in the above read "habit," which is after all about the same thing, and the truth of the writer's contention will be more apparent than the paradox which it bears upon its surface. Habit is the oil which makes the wheels of life run smoothly. But great and original thinkers do not do their great work by habit. Habit and rut enable them to perform without waste of effort the many activities of life, that they may save their power for the one thing in which they are original and profound.

To the same excellent journal from which the above is taken we are indebted for the following paragraph, which is worthy, not only of being reprinted, but of being reprinted several times. Almost everybody would like to get rich quick, but most sensible people have learned to distrust all schemes which promise sudden wealth. It has come to be pretty well understood that it takes several years to train a physician or a lawyer or an efficient business man, but the impression is still too prevalent that a few hurried "Bible studies" or a brief session in a "school for workers" is sufficient preparation for the calling which demands the fullest development of the whole man—the ministry. Consequently, we have too many squashes in the pulpit and not enough oaks:

There is a natural impulse which affects the minds of the young, especially in these stirring times, leading them to look around for short cuts into the professions or other honorable callings. But it takes time to grow manhood and that sort of power which after all the world most prizes, namely, consolidated character and matured, thoroughly seasoned wisdom. A story apropos of this is told of the president of Oberlin. A student asked him on one occasion whether he could not take a shorter course than the one prescribed. "Oh yes," was the reply, "but that depends upon what you want to make of yourself. When God wants to make an oak he takes one hundred years, but when he wants to make a squash he takes six months." Society has more need of oaks than of squashes. Let the over-ambitious youth remember this. Let him take time to mature himself. Society can wait for him.

JOHN RUSKIN.

WILLIAM D. HOWE.

As we think over the life of John Ruskin, it is a feeling akin to reverence that prompts us to a study of the man and his influence on the life of the nineteenth century.

Ruskin was born in 1819, the same year with Kingsley, Lowell, Whitman, ten years after the annus mirabilis that produced Chopin, Mendelssohn, Lincoln, Poe, Holmes, Darwin, Gladstone, Tennyson.

Perhaps no great man of the nineteenth century is more interesting in his early years. We are told that his whole life was planned by his parents. Ruskin's mother, though harsh and severe, must have been something of a genius in nourishing in the boy the qualities which were afterward so great a part of the man.

There are two things that stand out clearly in those years in which he grew to be a young man: First, an intense interest in everything about him, a devouring enthusiasm, an eagerness to learn. At ten he was not sent to school for fear of the excitement of competitive study. This quality of earnestness never left him. Second, his love for nature. It is perhaps along this line that his influence on English-speaking people has been the greatest and most beneficial.

As a boy of fourteen years, he poured forth a longing for the "blue hills" in the Lake District:

> "There is a thrill of strange delight
> That passes quivering o'er me,
> When blue hills rise upon the sight
> Like summer clouds before me."

What was Ruskin's conception of nature? Did he, like Wordsworth, look upon it in the spiritual way—that there is a spirit in all nature? Rather, he regarded the "normal beneficence" of nature. Nature was always kind to him, he thought. His motive may be learned from these lines, in which he compared Skiddaw to the Pyramids:

> "All that art can do
> Is nothing beside thee. The touch of man
> Raised pigmy mountains, but gigantic tombs;
> The touch of nature raised the mountain's brow,
> But made no tombs at all."

Ruskin's sympathy is so broad, he has sown in so many fields, that it would take several men to judge him at his worth. We are content to dwell on two sides, that to us are the most prominent in his work and influence: his writings, first on art, and second on political economy.

Ruskin first made his appearance in the literary world in an essay in defence of the paintings of Turner. He maintained that Turner's paintings were from nature, that the facts had been studied on the spot. He showed his romantic proclivities when he asserted that the critic has no right to force his academic rules on a great genius. He admitted the faults of Turner, but also claimed for him great beauties. This paper was the germ of "Modern Painters," a work in five volumes, which ran from 1843 to 1860.

Though the views as they are expressed in these early volumes are not now accepted as the standard of art, they made a wonderful impression at the time of their appearance. They were revolutionary, but were supported by such a number of details and such extensive examination that they forced themselves on the popular mind. The keynote of his work is truth. His reasoning is this: If painting be an expression of the human mind as poetry is, if the contents of the mind are ideas, then the best painting is that which contains the greatest number of greatest ideas. Then, Pilate-like, he asked, What is truth? He showed that old-fashioned generalization was not truth, but that "truth in landscape art was the expression of natural law, by exhibiting such facts as tell the story of the theme."

This accounts for his habit of word-painting—those gorgeous descriptions of sunrises, sunsets, mountains and clouds. We must turn also to his definition of taste and judgment. "Taste," he said, "is the faculty of receiving the greatest possible pleasure from those material sources which are attractive to our moral nature in its purity and perfection." Judgment is to be distinguished from taste in that it implies the "expression of definite action of the intellect and is applicable to every kind of object which can be submitted to it."

There are three other points that we must notice in his criticism of art.

1. A clear recognition of the historical point of view. He said that the principles of one period could not be applied to artists of another period. We know with what difficulty the literary critics of the early part of this century came to this recognition.

2. The vital connection of one form of art with different forms. "Speaking with strict propriety, therefore, we should call a man a great painter only as he excelled in precision and force in the language of lines; . . . a great versifier as he excelled in precision and force in the language of words." The duty of the painter is the same as that of the preacher. "Both are commentators on infinity, and the duty of both is to take for each discourse one essential truth, and to impress that and that alone upon those whom they address with every illustration that can be furnished by their knowledge and every adornment attainable by their power."

3. Love for the nature about us. This trait came out so often in the "Modern Painters." We quote a passage which has had as great an influence on English people as any one passage in Ruskin's work:

"There is not a moment of any day of our lives, when nature is not producing scene after scene, picture after picture, glory after glory, and working still upon such exquisite and constant principles of the most perfect beauty, that it is quite certain it is all done for us and intended for our perpetual pleasure. And every man, wherever placed, however far from other sources of interest or of beauty, has this doing for him always. . . . If, in our moments of utter idleness and insipidity, we turn to the sky as a last resource, of which of its phenomena do we speak? One says it has been wet, another it has been windy and another it has been warm. Who among the chattering crowd can tell me of the forms and the precipices of the chain of tall white mountains, that girded the horizon at noon yesterday? Who saw the narrow sunbeam that came out of the south and smote upon their summits until they wilted and mouldered away in blue rain? Who saw the dance of the dead clouds when the sunlight left them last night and the west wind blew them over it like withered leaves?"

In his last writings on art, especially after 1860, Ruskin used art as the vehicle for teachings of wider range and deeper import. His art is secondary to his ethics. He was deeply moved at what he saw in the world and wished to be left alone. Consequently, he went to the Alps, where he could think out the problems of the social world. In 1863 he wrote to Charles Eliot Norton: "The loneliness is very great and the peace in which I am at present is only as if I had buried myself in a tuft of grass on a battlefield wet with blood, for the cry of earth about me is in my ears continually." This is the storm and stress of Ruskin's life. A cloud of the morbid sense of evil in the world was settling upon him that never lifted during the rest of his life.

And now let us turn to that other side—his writings on political economy, especially "Unto This Last," 1861. Let us try to understand his views with regard to political economy, as expressed in his writings from 1861-1884. These works created a great furor, they disturbed consciences. "They aimed at the working creed, the comfortable scheme of all society, the sanction of property as then held and constituted, and the justification of life as then lived. The old political economy was the outcome of eighteenth-century philosophy. It assumed Pope's doctrine, that "whatever is, is right." Ruskin showed that the nineteenth-century political economy was the survival of the eighteenth-century civilization. He showed that "particular thought," and not generalization, was the starting-point. He showed that political economy was a "commercial economy," of advantage to the trading class, and not to the community at large. He protested against competition, for he believed that all skilled workmen should be paid alike. He protested against the common opinion that the normal condition of the race is immoral. He wished to see all employed, the outcast of society taught, even by compulsion if necessary. We should not lay aside Ruskin's writings on political economy without a remark on his definition of work. Work is "production of the means of life, not the using of them as the mere counter for gambling."

And now what are we to think of the man, Ruskin? First of all, he is a teacher. The incident told by a Yorkshire workingman shows this. The workingman tried to tell Ruskin what enjoyment he had received from Ruskin's works, "and he said to me, 'I don't care whether you enjoyed them; did they do you any good?'" In everything Ruskin did he was a teacher.

Certain results stand forth which may in some degree be due to Ruskin—the wider appreciation of art, the recognition of the interdependence of the different forms of art, a greater love for nature as she exists about us, greater opportunities to the workingman and a more forcible acknowledgement of the brotherhood of man.

It is objected that Ruskin's teaching is impractical. No one can deny this, but we cannot deny, also, that some of his ideals are much nearer realization to-day than when he lived. As a student he took unto himself all knowledge. Nothing was too remote—history, ethics, all forms of art and science.

He had the passion and imagination of a poet, but these seldom found expression in poetry. Though there may be excessive floridness, though there may be a tendency toward poetry in his prose, yet in spite of this, as a descriptive writer or word-painter, who is there in English literature to equal him?

Above all, he was a man, loving high ideals, devoured with sincere enthusiasm, living for others, with a great and noble soul.

THE GREATEST THOUGHT IN THE WORLD.

JOSEPH F. NEWTON.

The great thoughts of the world are not discovered in an instant; they are not revealed by miracle or myth; they are not the products of individual minds; we grow into them gradually, as man ascends the aclivity of culture; they dawn upon the world slowly and move in majesty and beauty to their thrones like the gods of ancient story. Bold and gifted thinkers may climb the peaks and, looking deeply into the glowing sky, announce their coming—all honor to the prophets of progress—but the thoughts that change the currents of the centuries come silently, even gently, into the life of mankind, lifting the life of the race into a purer and calmer air and filling the world with beauty, love and light. They rise from the fathomless depths of the great heart of humanity, as the sun rises from the depths of infinity. They are the natural fruit of the growing life of the race, the cumulative thought of ages, and cannot be traced or ascribed to one person; although it is not difficult to give too much praise to a great leader, for man is a hero-worshiper.

It is perfectly natural that in this, the richest and ripest age in the annals of history, the harvest time of all the past, the "far-off divine event" toward which the ages have been moving, should grow the greatest thought that ever found its throne in the mind of man. It is not strange that amid the deep thought and patient research of an age when man—

> "Searched through all he felt and saw,
> The springs of life and the depths of awe,
> To reach the law within the law;"

when the mind of man went forth in quest of truth, that the beams of faith and fact should blend in the bright radiance of discovery. Certainly there would be ample reason for the grim despair of the agnostic, if, after the earnest and tireless search for truth this century has witnessed, no gleam of light has flashed from out the depths of infinite mystery to reward our efforts. If, after an age-long quest for God, he should give no word of answer, no token of his care, nothing to satisfy the fevered brain and aching heart of mankind, we might be justified in vacating our high claim to divine sonship, living for the fleeting joys of animal passion, seeking the material things of the world and joining in the dizzy whirl of its gay and giddy life. But God is neither deaf nor dumb; he hears each cry that wells up from earnest souls and speaks to all who have ears to hear. Let us be careful lest the noisy din of earth should drown the music of his voice.

Sailors tell when they are near land by watching the birds that come out to meet them, and the bits of debris floating around their ship; these signs indicate an early arrival. Thus, for years, the victories of science and the spiritual and ethical progress of the race have been prophesying the discovery of a new world—a world of wealth and beauty, the discovery of which would change the geography of thought and life. At last we are landing on a new continent, the richness of which surpasses the dreams of the centuries. We may mention briefly some of the facts which preceded and led up to the master thought of the ages. Science revealed the unity and infinity of the universe and the universal reign of law. From the tiniest atom to the great orb it proclaimed the rule of power, law and mind. No single conception ever contributed more to the enlargement of human thought. History disclosed the greatness of humanity, revived the countless millions who slept in the unlettered night of oblivion and revealed the progress of man as he has marched onward, age by age, to his destiny. Men met in the marts of trade, mingled in the busy, bustling life of the age, and learned to feel the oneness of humanity. Religion threw off the burden of dead creeds and forms, accepted the facts of history and science, caught the spirit of the age and blessed the world with all its wondrous promise and sacred joy.

All these thoughts and influences are but the trembling notes of prelude to the sublime truth that introduces the orchestra of the universe. All these facts and experiences blend in forming the crowning conviction: that over the dark and silent past, keeping forever its changeless records, its acts of vengeance and of violence, its vices and its virtues, its truth and beauty; in the active and exciting present, its wild wars and cruel crimes, its conflicts and complexities, its thrilling and throbbing life, its wealth of greatness and goodness, and over the dim and shadowy future with all its splendor and mystery—over all and in all, is the presence of a wise, powerful and loving Father—a Father whose nature is fathomless love, and whose life is boundless beauty—a Father on whose divine bosom we can breathe the deepest yearnings of our hearts and the bitterst sorrows of our lives—a Father to whose kind protecting care we can safely commit the lives of our living and the destiny of our dead. There are no words to express the consolation and inspiration that come from the consciousness that through all the long eras of history that are saturated with blood, blistered with tears and crimson with the trail of tragedy; that over all the sin and sickness, the agony and ecstasy of human life as it blends with mystery and death; that in all the infinite pain of the world and the ceaseless wail of want and woe that goes up from the earth; that in all this are the hand and heart of One who ever lives and loves and rules; who is ever guiding man, feeling his pain more than he can himself, and slowly lifting the weary-hearted world into a higher and holier life. It is an infinite comfort to feel that God is not a great gloomy Being throned somewhere out in the viewless air, looking upon our sorrows with a painless sympathy upon our mistakes with cruel criticism, but a great, loving, merciful Father who watches over our little lives with infinite care and patience, and is working out through us and through the universe a plan that is wise and just and good. It is an unspeakable inspiration to know that truth and right are eternal; that error and evil are self-consuming; that love is the eternal motive that moves the universe, the angel that guides the life of man, and that all is right at the heart of things if we could know the aim and see the end—right, so that he who catches a glimpse of the beauty and loveliness of it all, may safely feel that "the final goal of ill is good."

When this truth finds its full fruition in the life of mankind the bickering of sect and schism will die away and from its bitterness will spring a brotherhood pure and deep and tender; the weird grief and gloom which doubt has woven of the warp of sorrow and the woof of mystery will disappear in the presence of the eternal verity and vitality of religion, as dark clouds dissolve before the rising sun, and the pathetic pessimism of the age which mourns in the presence of the apparent moral disorder of the world will vanish before a limitless, luminous hope. When this thought comes to its throne in theology the antiquated and artificial dogmas of the old creeds will be remembered as the frightful monsters of diseased dreams; and from the confusion and complexity of modern religious thought will evolve a sweeter and simpler religion—the gospel of love and duty and hope. When this truth is translated into life the meaning of existence will be deeper, its problems will be less difficult, and death will not be so dark. The faith of the poet will become the faith of the race:

> "And so besides the Silver Sea
> I wait the muffled oar;
> No harm from Him can come to me
> On ocean or on shore."

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA—II.

Authority in Matters of Religion.

A. B. JONES.

We accept the Bible as the inspired Word of God, as containing the revealed will and, in some sense, the authority of God, not because some council has so decided (many reverent, religious people do not know that a council ever did so decide), not because the Pope so decides (many godly people do not care a snap for the Pope); but because there is something within us that tells us that the Bible is God's Word, God's will, God's authority. But what is that something within? Man was created in the image of God. In spite of his weaknesses and infirmities, he is still an intellectual, moral and spiritual being. He has something within that responds to thought, to moral ideas and to spiritual conceptions. The acorn, planted in the soil, responds to the conditions and grows. A marble so planted does not respond and grow. "The Word of God is the seed." Human consciousness is the soil. The authority of human consciousness in matters of religion is a subject that needs to be more carefully studied. The authority, did I say? Yes, the Bible is submitted to every man to examine and determine its claims and its merits. On his own personal responsibility he is to consider it, to accept or to reject it. Then he is vested with the authority of a judge over the fate of the Bible so far as he himself is concerned.

But what has consciousness to do in this matter? The word consciousness is here used instead of the word reason, which is generally employed in such discussions. It is used in preference because it is more comprehensive and because it has the appearance of placing the judgment seat deeper in the human soul. Religion appeals, not only to man's rational nature to excite thought and to exercise reason, but to his heart, to arouse his emotions, his feelings, his affections; and to his intuitional nature, his spiritual intuitions. That these are distinct powers or capacities, if not distinct faculties of the soul, is conceded. There are some subjects that address themselves to our intellectual perceptions exclusively, and leave the heart unmoved. Problems in mathematics, for example, while they provoke thought, frequently most intense thought, yet do not touch our sympathetic and affectional nature. The heart is dormant during all the hours of our mental activity in considering and settling questions of geometry and trigonometry. Pure thought determines such matters. But there are other questions that pure thought cannot determine and settle—how to deal with your children, for example, with your parents, or with your wife. People who never had children can easily tell us how to govern and raise our boys and girls. They have no feelings, no heart in the matter. They simply reason on the subject. But parents both reason and feel, they think and love. The parental consciousness is a compound of these two factors. And, it is plain to be seen, that this consciousness is more comprehensive than reason, since it is composed of reason and affection combined. These two elements are blended together in our decisions, our judgments.

But intuition is still another distinct faculty or power of the soul. There are some things we know without reasoning about them, since they are primary truths, that shine by their own light. They are the initial points of all reasoning. We cannot reason without using them as the means of reasoning. Such are the axioms in mathematics—things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other, etc. On this foundation the whole science of mathematics is constructed. So, then, even in mathematics, both intuition and reason are involved and co-operate. But they both move together in the cold realm of intellectuality.

In the same way moral science, the science of right living, is conceived and established. The idea of right versus wrong is intuitional. It is a primary truth. While men may err in judgment as to what is right and what is wrong, they clearly understand and agree that there is such a distinction and such a difference. Without this we could no more teach morals to children than to animals.

Now religion is a science, the highest and grandest of sciences. The Bible comes to man as an authority on this subject, and invites man to sit as a judge, his own judge, his own authority, in considering its claims to be God's Word. In exercising his right of private judgment in a general way, and of private interpretation in detail, his profoundest consciousness is awakened. His mental, moral and spiritual powers are all laid under contribution. Thought finds its noblest sphere of activity, the heart its amplest field of delightful employment, the intuition its arena of highest effort and attainment.

Man's intuitional nature responds to the idea of God. The reality of his being is both a conception and a perception of man's spiritual insight. It is a primary truth on which all religion is founded. Without this religion would be an impossibility. With this solid rock on which to stand reason begins her constructive work, and to every effort of reason to use the facts and truths of the Scriptures in the framework of religion the heart brings its reinforcement. Nothing stirs the emotional nature like the idea of the eternal, immortal, infinite God.

But in this process, intuition, reason and emotion conspire together. There is a blending of forces, a combination of powers, a co-operation of agencies and a unity of energies, in the general make-up of consciousness. And consciousness is invested with a responsibility and royalty as never before.

Human consciousness, then, as the resultant of intuition, reason and emotion, is the supreme court to which the Bible makes its appeal. In the use of it every man sits as the arbiter of his own spiritual fortune and destiny. He must decide on the claims of the Bible for himself. Man has authority, then, to sit in judgment on this divine authority of the Scriptures. When his authority concedes the authority of the Bible, then his authority yields and submits to the authority of the Word of God; or his will and the divine will unite and blend together in one stream of sympathy and fellowship where all thought of authority is lost. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life," said the Savior. And in a public address, in 1820, Alexander Campbell said to the people: "Read your Bibles; examine the testimonies of those holy oracles; judge for yourselves and be not implicit followers of the clergy." And again he said: "We cordially wish to take the New Testament out of the abuses of the clergy and put it into the hands of the people."

But are people competent to this task?

ADORNING THE DOCTRINE.

GEO. FOWLER.

Vast sums of money have been expended in erecting stately cathedrals with their > "Lofty vaults to gather and roll back

with artistic windows mellowing and softening the light of heaven, pouring rays of exquisite richness upon the audience and beautifying the material temple; while mighty intellects have concentrated their power in developing and perfecting a form of worship, making the music, "in perfect diapason," an imitation of heaven's symphonies, the prayers cast into noblest and sublimest diction, expressing the soul's exalted conception of God—the outward service, one transcendent anthem without dissonance or discord.

But the magnificent temple and beautiful worship may stand in marked contrast to the poverty of the soul's attire. To the building of the cathedral the resources of earth and genius of man were made tribute; but to beautify the inner being and adorn the soul, Heaven lends its power and glory. The time has come when we must give more attention to the form of worship, not as a substitute for the inner life, but as its expression. Between the outward service and the soul's devotion there should be harmony.

To beautify the temple and perfect the worship, wealth, talent and time are needed, but to embellish the life and clothe the soul in the royal purple of heaven, demands the complete surrender of the whole being to the rule of our sovereign Lord. If we would adorn the soul with the doctrine of Christ, his gospel must be incarnated in us. As the beauty of the costly tapestries of the Orient is not external, but woven into their very warp and woof; as the melody and beauty of poetry is in the poet's soul before it is enshrined in verse; as the sublime symphonies of Handel and Beethoven could never have been produced with dissonance in their souls; as the beauty of the chrysanthemum, the fragrance of the rose, the purity of the lily are inseparable from the life of the flower—so Christian character is only beautiful as the golden threads of Christ's teachings, the scarlet threads of his sacrifice, the silken threads of his sympathy and the white threads of his purity are woven into the web of our daily life.

The beauty of Christ's life is not so much in any one thing he did or said as in the spirit which permeated everything he did or said. The rainbow hues of his character were never so beautiful; the matchless love of his life was never so sublime and his glory never so bright as in the dark hour of his crucifixion on Calvary.

Do we, then, expect to adorn his doctrine in our life without intense devotion, an abounding liberality, a consuming missionary zeal, a firm, unwavering loyalty to the authority of Jesus and a Godlike charity which is the "bond of perfectness?"

The brighest characters are saints as Carey, Moffat, Florence Nightingale, Livingstone, Dr. S. Rhinheart, and a vast host of other devoted souls who, forgetful of self, lived continually in the fear of God, of whom the world was not worthy.

As the sunlight is broken up and woven in various hues into the plant, and the sweetness of earth becomes the very breath of the flower, so in adorning our souls with the attributes of Christ, the life of Jesus, fragrant as the "rose of Sharon" and pure as the "lily of the valley," must become the life of our soul, the light of our life, the glory of our being and the hope of our existence.

SOME OF OUR PRESSING NEEDS—III.

The Need of Active Co-operation.

W. T. MOORE.

For several years the Disciples were warmly engaged in discussing plans of co-operation. But these plans were for the most part fruitless, except so far as they demonstrated that, after all, the best plan of co-operation is to co-operate. It is not meant by this statement that plans amount to nothing. I simply mean that constant discussion about plans may often hinder the work. If there is first the willing mind there will generally be very little difficulty about finding some method through which to co-operate. It is eminently true in this case, as in many others, that wherever there is a will there is a way.

In any case, the discussion about plans has practically ceased, and in some directions our co-operative work has developed with considerable rapidity. Our foreign and home general missionary operations are no longer to be despised. The recent Jubilee Convention emphasized the fact that, as a missionary people, the Disciples are growing. But even this growth is largely from individual centers rather than from church centers. This is a defect which ought to be remedied. I do not undervalue individual effort. All worthy activity in church life must start with individuals; but it ought to end in the hearty co-operation of the whole church.

Just here we touch one of the most imperative needs of our movement. In the olden days this need was not so keenly felt. The conditions were then different. Our churches were then mainly in the country or in the smaller towns. Now the bulk of our active membership is in the larger towns and cities. A somewhat different system of treatment, as regards co-operative work, comes with the change referred to. In seeking for the true remedy some almost fatal mistakes have been made. These mistakes have left our country churches largely barren of results in co-operative work. Indeed, not a few of these churches are practically dead. That I am not speaking at random may be domonstrated by reference to the churches in Boone County, of which Columbia is the county-seat. In this county there are twenty Christian Churches, but it is safe to say that not more than half of these may be reckoned as of any force, except for local work. These churches do not co-operate at all in any true sense of that word, and failing to do this, they do very little if anything that is worth mentioning. They are counted in our list of churches, and their church rolls help to swell the number of Disciples in the state. But for all practical purposes except a certain local influence, and that of very little force, these churches had just as well have no existence at all. Most of them have given up the old methods, and as they have been unable to provide themselves with suitable pastors, according to the city pattern, they seem to have lost heart, and in some instances there seems to no hope left in them.

Now it is easy to see how all this state of things could be remedied, if anything like active co-operation could be secured. I have the following suggestions to make:

(1) Let these churches and all like them work together. Let them appoint a suitable evangelist or evangelists to visit these churches, to set things in order, to hold protracted meetings, and in all legitimate ways strengthen, build up and instruct the Christians as well as plead with the unconverted to accept the Christ.

(2) This plan would bring efficiency where now everything is a failure. These churches should be encouraged to meet every Lord's day for the breaking of bread, for teaching, for fellowship, etc. This would emphasize the importance of the eldership, while it would bring into sympathetic touch and active co-operation through the evangelist all the churches of a given district; and this of itself would be a great gain, for there is something in co-operation which always works toward ultimate victory.

But some one may say that all this is well in theory; but it cannot be made practical. I take no such pessimistic view. If there is a strong church in the county, this church ought to take the initiative in this matter. The pastor of this church ought to be encouraged to visit the weaker churches and secure the means necessary to put an evangelist into the field. In most cases a move of this kind, if heartily inaugurated, would meet with instant success. Speaking broadly, most of these churches are waiting for some one to lead them; but while they are waiting they are dying. There is certainly no time to be lost, if our cause in the country is to be saved from a disgraceful failure.

The present system is simply deplorable. Some of these churches have monthly preaching, and this often by some one who is wholly incompetent, from almost every point of view, to lead the people he serves in any worthy development of spiritual life. In some instances these churches are served by mere boys, whose knowledge of the Scriptures is scarcely equal to deciding readily which lived first, Abraham or Moses. I do not hesitate to affirm that this is no exaggerated picture. I see the thing right around me and am constantly made to lament it. The members of these churches are for the most part excellent people, and if they could be brought into active co-operation throughout the county they would become strong factors in our religious movement. At present they practically count for nothing.

The Church Congress.

The time is March 27-29, beginning Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock and ending Thursday night. The place is the Central Christian Church, corner Delaware and Walnut Sts., Indianapolis, Ind. From the Union Station take either Central Ave., or Alabama St. cars and get off at Walnut St. A short block west is the church.

The conference set down in the provisional program for Friday morning is off, so that the Congress will comprise but eight sessions. These will be devoted to the following great questions: "The Doctrine of Holy Scripture," "Biblical Criticism," "Education," "Limits of Christian Liberty," "The Unification of our Missionary and Benevolent Organizations," "Sociological Studies" and "The Civic and Social Obligations of the Church."

Two carefully prepared addresses, by men occupying different views, as a rule, will be devoted to each theme. There will be time also for discussion from the floor.

In the construction of the program, the committee have tried to be perfectly fair to all shades of thought among us. The idea of the Congress is a free forum for the discussion of great questions which lie back of the more practical activities of the church. The importance of the Congress to our ministry can scarcely be overestimated. Can you afford to miss it? Those appointed to read papers are among our ablest men.

Last year, at St. Louis, there were two hundred present from outside the city. We ought to have more this year. Those who were at the first Congress are more enthusiastic for the second.

The members of our churches in Indianapolis give you a most cordial invitation to come. You will be entertained for lodging and breakfast free. Dinner and supper will be served at church by the ladies for twenty-five cents a meal, and you will get good meals. This plan gives a social feature which is most delightful, and besides, enables our people to attend the meetings.

Announcements about reduced rates will be made when we hear from the traffic associations.

All who expect to come should drop me a card so that entertainment may be provided.

ALLAN B. PHILPUTT.

THINK OF HOLY THINGS. Vicious thinking rots the tissues of the brain. Cicero once said: "Hold off from sensuality or soon you will be unable to think of anything else."

Our Budget.

—We hope our readers feel better after the March offering.

—This is, of course, on the supposition that you made the offering last Lord's day.

—No church or individual has any right to feel well or sleep well until that duty is discharged.

—In well-regulated churches a rainy Sunday is not permitted to interfere with an annual collection. If it is not completed one Sunday, carry it forward until all have been urged to participate.

—The call for fifty churches to each support a missionary of their own in a foreign land is one that should be responded to by that number of churches. Surely, we ought to have fifty churches which are able to pay $600 annually for such a purpose.

—The Central Christian Church, St. Louis, besides supporting a home missionary in Oklahoma, is ambitious to support a missionary in foreign lands. Its offering on last Lord's day gave assurance that it will be able to do so the coming year. This is not a rich church, but it is a missionary church, and is growing more so every year.

—The storms and severe weather throughout the country for several weeks doubtless has greatly hindered many churches in their preparatory work for the offering for Foreign Missions, but this should not permit any relaxation of effort or shrinkage of interest in the work until it be fully accomplished.

—So far as we can learn the churches generally have exceeded their apportionment in Foreign Missions and some of them doubling and even thribbling the amount. We hope that there has been an increase in every way throughout the churches.

—The Mt. Cabanne Christian Endeavor Society, of this city, has just tried a new method of soliciting funds for missionary purposes. The affair involved an element of friendly rivalry that was calculated to enlist the most indifferent persons in or out of the churches in getting their names on the list of contributors. We have not heard of the results as yet, but anticipate a goodly sum for missionary purposes.

—All persons attending the Mo. Christian Lectureship, 19-23, should they reach Palmyra Junction at night, will take the "bus" to the Dudley Hotel where reduced rates have been made for them until next day, when Bro. McDonald, committee, will meet them and assign them homes among the brethren.

—The Register-Review announces a change of name in the near future. The new name is to be the "Central Christian Register." The term Review drops out and that of Christian takes its place. This looks like a good exchange. But just why it is called Central Christian Register we do not see. The reason given as to the centrality in our brotherhood seems to be somewhat previous; but the day may come when Kansas City may be the central line of our brotherhood, and the Register-Review is doubtless looking forward to the greater things of the 20th century.

—The Christian Publishing Company has sold over twenty thousand copies of "Alone With God," by J. H. Garrison, and there seems to be no decrease in the demand. On the contrary, the sale has rather increased during the past few months. Those who have read it should not neglect to secure, if they have not already done so, the other two books of the series, by the same author—"The Heavenward Way" and Half-hour Studies at the Cross." The price of each is seventy-five cents, or the three together are given for $2.00.

—For a wide variety of interesting church news and correspondence you will find this number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST exceptionally good.

—Word by wire from the Scoville meeting in Pittsburg, Pa., reports 162 additions to date; all confessions but 17. There were 33 additions on last Sunday; all by confession but four. Brother Scoville is assisted in this meeting by Brother Wilson, singer, and Brother Thurgood, pastor.

—Attention is again called to the Map of the Travels of Jesus. This map is almost a necessity to our Sunday-schools, if the children are to be properly instructed in the life of Christ. The Sunday-school lessons for 1900 and the first half of 1901 are on the life of Christ. Every school needs a copy of this map, and in order that every school might have a copy, the price has been reduced from the former price (five dollars) to only three dollars. This is but a few cents more than the wholesale price. The map is six feet long, three feet wide, is varnished and durable and is mounted on rollers, ready to hang up. It distinctly shows all the movements of Jesus during his entire ministry.

—Many Sunday-schools order their supplies for the entire year, at one time, and this is the best plan. It is well to remind those schools that order each quarter that it is now about time to send in orders for supplies for the second quarter of 1900, which begins with the first of next month. The great majority of Sunday-school workers prefer the supplies of the Christian Publishing Co., as is shown by the fact that these supplies go to two-thirds of our Sunday-schools.

—On page two will be found a full description of Silver and Gold, with complete price list. This book, now less than two years old, has had a wonderful sale. Over one hundred thousand have been sold; and the prospect is that the circulation will be doubled during 1900. Do not think of purchasing new books for your church, Sunday-school, evangelistic services or Christian Endeavor Society, until you have examined Silver and Gold.

—The pulpit of the First Church of Christ, Brooklyn, N. Y., was occupied on the last Lord's day in February by the pastor's wife, the pastor, Bro. M. E. Harlan, being absent from the city. The New York Herald of Feb. 26 gives a synopsis of her sermon on "Dignified Humility," and characterizes it as "an eloquent address." It is not every preacher who is so fortunate as to have a wife who can fill his pulpit in his absence.

—Cotner University, so long in peril from debt, has been saved to the brotherhood, and freed from indebtedness. Particulars will be published next week. Let us all rejoice with the heroic band that has stood by this institution in its days of darkness, until a brighter future seems to be dawning.

—Keep your eye on Carnegie Hall, New York City, April 21st to May 1st. This is the time and place of the great ecumenical conference on foreign missions. There will be, it is estimated, about 2,000 delegates present. They will come from every land reached by evangelical mission workers. It will be a conference world-wide in its scope, sympathies and outlook. Already there are said to be signs of great results. The committees have been doing diligent work and the plans are near completion. It will be a conference whose deliberations will command the attention of every religious body interested in the Christianization of the world.

—The few reports printed elsewhere in this paper from the March offering of last Sunday are encouraging. If the ratio of increase over apportionments shown in these reports are generally maintained the two hundred thousand dollars for foreign missions will be easily raised this year.

—Every true friend of the Christian Standard, who feels a pride in its honorable past, and who has cherished the hope that it would work out for itself a no less honorable future, must have read the last issue of that paper with a keen sense of mortification and disappointment. For sometime it has manifested a temper and spirit not characteristic of that journal in other days. We replied to one of its articles a few weeks ago in a good-natured way, hoping to divert it from its policy of bitterness. But in its last week's issue it so far transcends the limits of common courtesy and journalistic decency as to put any reply to its insinuations and misrepresentations quite out of the question, if such reply were needed. We are sure our own readers, as well as a large proportion of the Standard's readers, will approve our course in declining to compete with it in that style of journalism. We have no feeling in the matter, except one of profound regret and are prepared to rejoice with all its friends when our contemporary shall return to the spirit and purpose which animated it in the days of its illustrious founder.

—Since the foregoing paragraph was written we have received a number of letters from well-known brethren who are readers of the Standard, expressing their chagrin and disapprobation at the attack of the Standard in its last week's issue, and urging us, by every consideration and regard for the best interests of our cause, to refuse to enter into any such controversy as they suppose the Standard's article would be likely to provoke. We have had no thought of doing anything of that kind. We appreciate none the less, however, the kindly motives of these brethren, and are sure they represent the feeling and sentiment of the brotherhood at large. We have no time, space nor inclination to engage in any such unseemly controversy. Until the Christian Standard shall manifest a different temper we shall be compelled to treat it as we have been treating a few of our other religious journals whose policy has put them entirely beyond any criticism from us.

—No reputable man having an issue to make with the editor, or with any of our contributors, and stating his issue in a manner becoming a religious journal, has ever been denied a hearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We have had to stop some discussions when we believed they had gone far enough, and we have shut out some articles written in a spirit and style unsuitable for our columns. To avoid all semblance of unfairness we have sometimes published articles that, on their own merits, would not have been printed. Sometimes we have had to suppress a microscopic critic, who has a faculty for seeing small points and who persists in making them. A story is told of a critic who, looking upon one of Raphael's great paintings, found fault with the angel's toe! But there are critics with microscopes who would have confined their attention and criticism exclusively to the toenail! A reasonable amount of space might be given to even the trimming of theological toenails and corns, but we can hardly be expected to allow a professional chiropodist to whittle away indefinitely on the same corn or deformed nail. This has offended some of the men who use microscopes instead of telescopes, and they say we are unfair!

—The preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday was well attended and full of enthusiasm. Among the visitors present were J. B. Briney, J. G. Stewart, Brother Cunningham and J. G. M. Luttenberger. The paper of the day was read by the assistant editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, on "Co-operation Among Our City Churches." The chief points brought out in the paper will be found in the St. Louis Letter in this issue.

—The Christian Endeavorers of Georgia are to eet in convention in Atlanta, April 19-22, and ıe Atlanta societies are making great prepara- ons for the occasion. They have issued an illus- ated bulletin announcing the attractions of the ity, program, etc., and in this we are glad to see ur brother T. Elmore Lucy's name and cut as hairman of the press committee. Brother Lucy attracting no little attention as a poet and an npersonator as well as an Endeavor worker.

—The church in Ballards, Mich., of which T. C. Nicholson is the pastor, recently raised $50.30 for ndia's famine sufferers. At a union meeting of he Methodist and Baptist Churches in Sparta, Mich., $30 was also raised for the same purpose, vhich was also sent through F. M. Rains, the reasurer of our Foreign Missionary Society. The Church of Christ in Sparta has raised more than its pportionment for the March offering for Foreign Missions.

—A new departure in local Christian missionary work was inaugurated by the Church of Christ in Missoula, Mont., within the past few weeks, in the way of an evening school to teach the Japanese to read and write, and aid them in their Bible studies. The school is conducted under the charge of the church, and under the personal direction of the pastor, James Egbert. Studies are conducted in the pastor's study on four evenings of each week, and a corps of four teachers are now in charge of the class, one for each evening. These teachers are volnnteers and receive no compensation for their services.

—Through Sister Bantz, of this city, we are nformed of the death of Miss Elizabeth Turpin, of Carrollton, Mo., on last Thursday. She was for 11 years C. W. B. M. manager of the Brookfield (Mo.) district, a remarkably bright, well-read woman and an earnest, devoted worker in the church. She was found dead in her bed, pre- sumably from a hemorrhage. She lived alone and was alone at the time of her death. She was 54 years old, had two brothers and a sister, all married, who lived in Carrollton. She had lived there 32 years and was widely known throughout the state.

—According to a recent cartoon in the Ram's Horn American civilization in the Philippine Islands means down with cock fighting and up with the saloon. Where then is our ground for boasting?

—The Chicago Record in speaking of the bill imposing a tariff on Porto Rico, recently passed by the House, calls it a study in occulism and concludes with the following pertinent statement and question:

The spectacle is truly puzzling. The President, the Secretary of War and the great majority of the members of the House individually are in favor of the free-trade policy, yet collectively they are putting into effect the opposite policy, and that despite the fact that public sentiment and all observable operating influences have been and are exerted in support of the President's original recommendation. Manifestly the unseen influences operating in Washington are more powerful than the seen. Whose can be the hidden hand, what the guiding influence that directs legislation contrary to the publicly expressed judgment of those who are supposed to be the responsible authors of legislative action?

You will please find below my order for the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for I do not feel that I could do without it, and I want to congratulate Bro. Garrison on his straightforward management of the grandest paper in our ranks through the crisis. May our kind Heavenly Father spare, bless and strengthen you to carry the work for many years.—LUAN REYNOLDS, Minburn, Ia.

Colorado Springs, Col., noted for its intelligence and spirituality has increased its list of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to fifty-two. No wonder Bro. B. B. Tyler finds labor among such people congenial.

Personal Mention.

J. P. McKnight began his work in Oskaloosa, Iowa, March 1. He was at Peoria, Ill.

A: R. Hunt, of Savannah, Mo., writes that J. D. Dillard recently visited that place and received $12 for the Orphans' Home, of St. Louis.

J. K. Hester's present address is Erlanger, Ky., but he is engaged as evangelist for the churches in Steuben County, Indiana.

I. W. Cameron, of Sioux City, Ia., has accepted the pastorate of the church at Weldon, Ia., and will begin work on Sunday, March 11th.

R. Lin Cave, ex-president of Kentucky University, is now pastor of the church in Independence, Mo. This adds another strong man and popular preacher to the Missouri pulpit.

A good report comes to us of B. H. Linkenfelder's work in the First Church in Seattle, Wash., to which he has recently been called. The church expects to be in fine shape for work soon.

F. L. Davis, evangelist, is now engaged in a protracted meeting in Kellerton, Ia. He uses invitation cards, on which the sermon themes for a week in advance are announced.

Z. O. Doward, pastor of the church in Grand Island, Neb., recently delivered a sermon that was appreciated to the old veterans in the Soldiers' Home Chapel. The church there seems also to be in a prosperous state.

J. P. Lucas has been holding a protracted meeting in Cripple Creek, Col. This looks like attacking one of the strongholds of the enemy. At all events it is a war upon sin in a high place. From a list of subjects announced for public lectures we should also say that he is evidently one of the popular lecturers of the land.

F. L. Davis, of Charles City, Iowa, will close his work at that place March 25th, after which he will be available for work elsewhere. The official board of that church has complimented him with a hearty official endorsement of his ability and work in that city.

D. F. Seyster, on removing from Lynnville to Pine Creek, Ill., was tendered a farewell reception by the church which so reluctantly released him for another field. Some highly appreciated presents were given to Brother and Sister Seyster on that occasion.

F. E. Meigs, of Nankin, China, is on his way home to Missouri for his vacation, and will come via Palestine and Europe. Bro. Wm. Remfry Hunt writes concerning Bro. Meigs' work: "He has built up a fine institution of the educational and evangelistic character in Nankin." The Missouri Disciples especially should give Bro. Meigs a hearty welcome.

J. E. Deihl, of Loami, Ill., has closed his work in that city. A large and appreciative audience attended his farewell sermon. It is said that he is esteemed in that city by people without regard to their church affiliations. The good will and prayers of the church will go with Bro. Deihl to Ipava, his new field of labor.

W. E. Reeves has closed his work in Dennison, Kan., and gone to join R. A. Burriss' colony near Port Arthur, Ont., and will join with A. O. Pasley and I. W. Lowman in pioneer evangelistic work in Northwestern Ontario. Two hundred families, mostly members of the Church of Christ, are expected to settle in that vicinity the coming spring and summer.

J. G. M. Luttenberger and his wife have returned to their home in Dorchester, Ill., from Florida. Sister Luttenberger's health was greatly improved by the trip, Bro. and Sister Luttenberger are now making arrangements for their European trip. They expect to sail about the first of May for Hamburg, Germany. Bro. Luttenberger expects to preach primitive Christianity to his own countrymen in the "Fatherland" for a season.

The yearly report of the Sixth and Prospect Church, Kansas City, Mo., Geo. W. Combs, pastor, showed that there were 84 additions to the church in 1899; raised for all purposes, $12,630.91, $3 395.72 of which was a thanksgiving offering, canceling the remainder of an old church debt; present church membership, 961. Chas. Reign Scoville will be with this church in a meeting in April. There have been 41 additions at the regular services during January and February.

Dr. A. Clark, of Add-Ran University, is delivering a course of lectures in Austin, Tex., under the auspices of the Bible Lectureship Annex to the University of Texas, established by J. W. Lowber. Dr. Clark is also conducting the chapel exercises of the University.

John A. Allen, pastor of the church in Philadelphia, Ill., was recently interrupted in his evening services by the unexpected appearance in his home of about thirty of his brethren, bearing many material evidences of their good will and kindly greetings.

John Logan, who has recently been employed as an evangelist for the Missouri Sedalia district, is thus commended by the church at Holden, Mo., where he recently held a meeting: "He is a man of pure life and a preacher of the simple gospel of Christ, combining the qualities of conclusive argument and pleasing address; an evangelist who uses none of the objectionable methods so common, but one who, with force, logic and earnestness, preaches Jesus Christ; a preacher whose services any church is fortunate in securing and a coworker whom any worthy pastor can trust implicitly."

J. G. Stewart, of Monmouth, Ill., and president of the Christian Alliance, of St. Louis, has identified himself with us in his standing in the religious world. He placed his membership in the University Place Church, Des Moines, Iowa, and Brother I. N. McCash gave him a personal letter attesting the step he had taken. Brother Stewart has several brothers, all of whom we believe are Presbyterian ministers. One of them is one of the prominent Presbyterian pastors and preachers of this city. Bro. Stewart was present at our preacher's meeting in this city on last Monday and made the acquaintance of our preachers. It is his desire to devote his time and talent to the ministry of the gospel, and we have no doubt will become an earnest, efficient evangelist.

Notes and News.

The Needs of Southern Illinois.

What Southern Illinois needs to increase her Christian activity may be needed in many other sections of the United States. Our churches need many things to aid them in doing the work the Lord has called them to do. We have the greatest plea in the world, for it is from heaven, what the Savior gave to those whom he commissioned to disciple all the nations. But this plea will not work itself, however great it may be. It must be worked by disciples of the Master. There is no other way by which the gospel can reach the people and save them.

Southern Illinois has thousands of nominal church members who were converted (if they were truly converted) in revival meetings held by evangelists during the past twenty years. These converts have not been cared for, have not been trained and developed for the Master's use in saving others. Many of them have gone back to sinful lives in the world, others are cold and indifferent and cannot be relied upon for any activity in the church. The need of the churches is to revive all who can be induced to take up the Lord's work and to get rid of those who are dead spiritually. Because this is not done the majority of our Southern Illinois churches have a name to live, but are dead to our missionary interests and are making no progress in the better life and the conversion of the world. The time is on us for an advance movement along this line, and to neglect it longer is suicidal. This burden we are carrying cannot be borne indefinitely. If there is no relief in the near future our work in Southern Illinois will be crippled and hampered for a full generation to come.

We need a number of wise, godly evangelists who will make this their life work. We need patient men, full of the Holy Spirit, who are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, to enter this field and visit all these starved and starving churches. In this way a great work can be accomplished, and the foundation can be laid for the conversion of thousands of people who can never be reached by our present methods.

J. H. SMART.

Centralia, Ill., Feb. 28, 1900.

A Great Field for an Evangelist.

How unevenly this world is divided! All East and South the gospel is preached in almost all localities, and here this town is fifteen years old, and near two thousand souls, and one brother told me that there had never been a Christian preacher in it or in all this Black Hills country, to the best of his knowledge.

The Congregationalists, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Catholics all have churches here and good memberships. If any of our people come they have to unite with them or live out in the cold; but a few others, like myself, prefer the latter. I often wonder why some of those wishing to do missionary work could not come into this Northwest country and labor. We are so weak we cannot afford to support a man at present, but are civilized and can talk the English language.

Truly, the harvest is great, and not a laborer! We have the Soldiers' Home, a state institution, here, and no doubt many of them, like myself, cannot yield to those churches who worship according to disciplines or confessions of faith, consequently are passing to the great Beyond without a ray of hope except their good morals.

Why Not an Evangelist for Ireland?

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I notice Bro. W. Durban's letter in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of February 8 in regard to missionary work in Ireland, England and Scotland. I agree with him and could heartily wish that the old gospel could be preached and a Church of Christ planted in old Ireland, the native home of Alexander Campbell. Why not send one of our first-class evangelists to Belfast, the enterprising center of the Protestant North of Ireland, and let him hold a couple of months' meeting and plant the cause there? A Scotch-Irishman like James Small, who knows the field and its peculiarities like a book, and who is second to none as an evangelist of power, would just be the man. I have known Bro. Small for thirteen years, and we have few more consecrated men than he.

In my meeting at Bedford with him, recently, we talked over this very matter and he can arrange to give a couple of months this year or next to the work if the support is forthcoming, and it would be a delight to make a wise and strong effort to preach the old gospel and establish "the plea" in Dublin or Belfast. The undersigned will help to send Bro. Small on his holy mission. Will others? Fraternally,

Tired Out

And she does not understand why. Her work used to seem so easy. You could tell her whereabouts as she worked by the snatches of song which now and again overflowed her happy lips. And now she can hardly keep up. Her head pains, her back hurts, and she feels entirely worn out. What is the matter? The probability is that the stomach is disordered, the liver is not performing its whole duty. Poisons are accumulating in the blood, and unless these are removed, and the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition cured and strengthened, there is liable to be a serious illness. There is no medicine can equal Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for prompt help and perfect cure for diseases of the stomach and blood. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, nourishes the nerves, and brings back the happy days of health, when life is all song and sunshine.

"I suffered ten months from a complicated case of liver complaint, constipation, indigestion, suppression of monthly function, and kidney disease, too," writes Miss Lula M. Brittle, of Ivor, Va. "I also suffered excruciating pain in my back and head. I am glad to say that six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' three vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and two bottles of 'Compound Extract of Swart-Weed' cured me entirely. I gladly recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all sufferers."

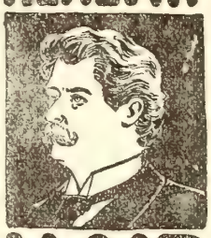
HEALTHY HAIR



A man with a thin head of hair is a marked man. But the big bald spot is not the kind of a mark most men like.

Too many men in their twenties are bald. This is absurd and all unnecessary. Healthy hair shows man's strength. To build up the hair from the roots, to prevent and to cure baldness, use—

Ayer's Hair Vigor

It always restores color to faded or gray hair. Notice that word, "always." And it cures dandruff.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"My business calls me out among strangers a great deal. I would actually feel ashamed every time I would take off my hat, my hair was so thin and the bald spots showed so plainly. I began the use of your Hair Vigor less than three months ago. Today I find I have as fine a head of hair as I ever had. I tell everybody what I used, and they say 'it must be a wonderful remedy.'" ESCONDIDO, CAL.

The work at Escondido is prospering. Bro. R. A. Hopper is still with us, and we believe he is sowing the seed most effectively, although, numerically speaking, we cannot boast of great results. He is at present preaching an interesting series of sermons on "Justification by Grace, Not of Works." I am making a synopsis of these sermons as they are delivered, and one of the local papers publishes them. This seems to be rssulting in a vast amount of good, judging from the comments and the increased audiences. In this way Bro. Hopper is succeeding in bringing "our plea" before many people who would otherwise never hear it. Yesterday, February 4, he preached upon the "Divine Creed." At the close of the sermon, and in response to the gospel invitation, two persons, mother and daughter, came forward to confess their Savior. The husband and father will likely follow. He is "almost persuaded." Others are wavering in the borderland. May God help them to decide aright. Bro. M. D. Nichols serprised the church by paying off the balance of our church debt. We are now clear of debt, thanks to this one of God's faithful stewards. MRS. A. G. CAMPBELL.

Correspondence.

Chicago Letter.

The Municipal Voters' League, of this city, appears to be a robust body, in excellent health. A month ago, in ample time to prepare for the spring elections, they issued an address and report to the citizens which, to say the least, "gives no uncertain sound." "At this critical time," they declare, "there is the most urgent need of sending to the council men who, besides being honest, are trained business men, experienced in large affairs, clear-headed and far-sighted. . . . For some years the city's finances have gone from bad to worse, until there is now required a fearless exposure and facing of facts and the application of radical remedies if our city is to preserve its financial honor."

The report calls attention to pending issues, and publishes the names of candidates for the council and their records. A certain lot are characterized — in capitals — as "CONTEMPTWORTHY." One Cullerton is described, a summary of his work given, and then the league says: "His ward should rid itself of such a representative and the city of such a nuisance." A number are recommended in terms more or less strong for re-election. This is a sample of the spleneid service such a league can render the voters in a large city. If they are careful to obtain reliable information, they can furnish the voter with facts without which he is absolutely in the dark.

The missionary co-operation of Chicago churches had its rise at a meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, July 25th, 1887. There were present, J. W. Maxwell, J. G. Hester, W. P. Keeler, C. S. Blackwell, J. W. Allen, Geo. F. Childs and W. A. Belding. The churches represented were "South Side," "Western Avenue," "Oakley Avenue" and "Englewood." At the meeting of August 29th the minutes have the following: "Bro. Blackwell expressed his dissatisfaction at the thought of our newly elected treasurer having no funds to cover, and immediately dropped some coin into said officer's hat; and the hat circulated around the board, resulting in a fund of $2.91 for the treasury." That was a capital hat! During the years since then the society has had a checkered career, and yet much good work has been accomplished. On Sept. 5th, 1887, "a resolution passed that it be the rule of this board to open its meetings with prayer."

Recently the society has been reorganized under the name, "Chicago Christian Missionary Society." It is auxiliary to the American Christian Missionary Society, from which it receives more than two dollars raised on the ground for city work. The whole power is lodged in the hands of an executive committee of seven men, who are expected and enabled to bring things to pass.

M. O. Narramore is president; E. M. Bowman, secretary; Dr. J. C. Lindsay, corresponding secretary. The evangelist, E. W. Darst, has been for several days laid up with serious illness and has been ordered South; he expects to go to Texas for a month or two.

A great labor disturbance is on. Thousands of workingmen are out, and other thousands are expected. Building is practically at a standstill. Material men, machinists, builders and nearly every other line are affected. It is a complex situation, and illustrates again the need of compulsory arbitration.

That is a most excellent suggestion of the "Kansas City Letter" to have a number of able men to speak on our distinctive features in the large cities from the platform of the largest auditoriums. Such meetings could be made so profitable to the membership alone as to be well worth the cost, not to mention the great help in propaganda.

Colorado Letter.

The man who says that I said "the Bible is half made up of myths," is doubtless a member, in good standing, and full fellowship, in a flourishing Ananias and Sapphira Society! Give him my compliments and tell him that in his chosen realm he is, so far as I know, without a peer!! He no doubt would like to believe that the following quotation from the Apocalypse is a myth:

"The fearful, and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and fornicators, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and ALL LIARS, their part shall be in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." But it is not. This is no myth.

Certain scholars are engaged in an investigation and discussion of certain literary questions relating to the books of the Bible. Some of them are evangelical in their belief; some are not. The questions are critical in their character. The opinion of the average preacher on these questions—the writer of this letter, for instance—is not worth the paper on which it is written, nor the physical strength expended in its expression.

It is safe to say that after the investigation shall have ended and the somewhat clamorous discussion shall have been brought to a conclusion, the Bible will remain and the gospel of the Son of God will continue to be the power of God unto the salvation of those who believe. Do not be anxious about the result. That is certain. God is not dead. His providence continues. The Head of the body, our Lord Jesus Christ, still loves his church. He has cared for it in the past: cares for it now. "Fret not thyself."

While it is true that the opinion of the average preacher possesses but little value—his opinion on the literary and critical questions in which biblical scholars are now especially interested—he ought to read up on the current discussion. He ought to know that an investigation is in progress and its nature. He ought to be able to state definitely the questions in issue, and in a general way, at least, be able to give the arguments on this side and on that. Preachers should be open-eyed men. "Prove all things," said Paul to pastors, "hold fast that which is good." This word of exhortation is pertinent now; it applies to the current discussion concerning the authorship of certain books of the Bible, and questions connected therewith.

A man is not necessarily an infidel because he calls in question the common opinion as to the authorship of a given biblical book or books. Martin Luther was not an infidel because he spoke of the epistle of James as "a straw epistle." Later he entertained a more favorable opinion concerning this portion of the New Testament.

President McGarvey has this to say about the authorship of the epistle to the Hebrews:

"From the second century to the present time many eminent scholars have doubted or denied its Pauline authorship. Three early writers, all born in the second century, but active in the early part of the third, may be regarded as the representatives of the opinions on the question until recent times. Origen said that the thoughts were Paul's, but that the style was not. He was not able to decide who composed it. Clement, of Alexandria, was of the opinion that Paul wrote it in Hebrew and that it was translated into Greek by Luke. He thought that the style was Luke's, but the thoughts Paul's. Tertullian ascribed it to Barnabas. In modern time Luther suggested that it might have been written by Apollos, and quite a number of recent scholars have revived and advocated this opinion. Perhaps the question as to the authorship of the epistle of the Hebrews will never be settled to the satisfaction of all."

Was Origen an infidel because he was unable to decide in his own mind that Paul wrote the epistle to the Hebrews? Was Clement, of Alexandria, an infidel because he entertained the opinion that he held concerning the manner in which the Hebrew letter came into existence? Was Tertullian an infidel because he thought that this portion of the New Testament was written by Barnabas? Shall we brand Martin Luther with infidelity because he believed that the Epistle to the Hebrews "might have been written by Apollos?" But you think, so I infer, that Paul was its author. And what shall we say of our own beloved McGarvey who, in the above quotation, leaves the subject in doubt when he says: "Perhaps the question," as to the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews, "will never be settled to the satisfaction of all?" This leaves the authorship of that portion of the New Testament in uncertainty. But shall President McGarvey be regarded as an infidel for this reason, and his book, "A Guide to Bible Study," hurtful reading for our young people?

The following is what he says, in the book above named, about "The Song of Songs," in the common version, "The Song of Solomon:"

"If there is any book in the Bible which found a place in it by mistake or misjudgment of those who put the inspired book together, it must be this; for it is so totally unlike all the rest that it is difficult to see what connection it can have with the general design of the whole. Many interpreters have affected to find in it a parabolic meaning, and even a foreshadowing of the love of the Church of Christ; while others have re-

PERHAPS YOUR TROUBLE IS CHRONIC KIDNEY DISEASE.

Often Difficult To Determine And Likely to Deceive The Best Physicians.

It is always best to be on the safe side.

There are many different ways in which kidney trouble will show itself.

Some of its most common symptoms are often mistaken for other diseases.

Some of them are other diseases, but being brought about by kidney derangement, the only way to cure them is to first get rid of the kidney trouble.

The indefinite symptoms which go with kidney derangement are a sense of general lassitude and indisposition, weakness, sickness and depression.

Headache, backache, and pains in the joints and limbs, irregular heart, stomach derangement, vomiting, nervousness, restlessness, sleeplessness, are also indications of diseased kidney poison in the blood.

Whenever you feel "under the weather," it is a good plan to take a few doses of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

When any of the symptoms described above show that your kidneys are weak or out of order, and your system needs bracing, Swamp-Root will afford prompt relief and cure the most chronic and complicated cases.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles.

To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you every reader of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST who will send their name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., will be sent immediately, free by mail, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. Be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles of Swamp-Root are for sale at all drug stores.

garded it as nothing more than a love-song with a very obscure connection of thought. According to either view it has afforded little edification to the great majority of Bible readers, and unless some significance can be found in it hereafter which has not yet been pointed out, it will continue to be but little read, and but of little practical value."

This is a quotation from one of the books prepared for our young people in the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses, and there are persons who are ready to condemn such thoughts about certain of the books of the Bible as hurtful in the extreme to the faith of immature readers. With such persons I cannot agree. Men can be named who regard the language of the venerable president of the College of the Bible as savoring of infidelity. Such persons are evidently in error.

The Christian faith is belief in Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ, the Son of the living God and the Savior of lost men.

This belief is not in the least interfered with by the teaching quoted above.

This is sufficient, on this subject for the present. The grace of the Lord Jesus be with you.

Milwaukee Letter.

Wisconsin is having its winter in February this year. The people of this northern climate seem to a Southerner as strange as their climate. In the South if we have a snow or a storm we look for but a very few to attend church, school, or indeed any public gathering. If we have a pretty day we may expect a large gathering at any meeting in which the people are interested. In the North the rain or snow, or even a storm, has little influence toward keeping the people from church or other meeeings. But when we have a beautiful day, just when one would naturally expect to see a large audience, he is likely to find himself sorely disappointed. I can account for the difference in no other way than on the ground that there are so few pretty days in this climate, when one can get out to the parks or to the country, that all who can do so utilize those few in that way, while in the South they have so few cold or disagreeable days that every one feels that he has a special license to stay at home during those days. I aided in a unique dedicatory service, Jan. 18th, at Waupun, the seat of our state prison. Waupun is a town of 20,000 inhabitants. There were a Baptist, a Free Baptist and Church of Disciples in the town. All were weak and barely living. About two years ago they formed a confederation under the name of "The Union Church of Waupun." A board of appraisal was appointed to place a valuation upon their separate pieces of property. Then each piece of property was transferred to a board of trustees elected by the united societies with this agreement: "Each transfer shall be by warrantee deed, which shall state the net value of each separate parcel, and in case of dissolution the net transfer valuation contained in deeds shall revert in cash or property to the proper representation of the church organization from which it came, but in no case within seven years from the formation of the union."

The different pieces of property were disposed of in such a way as to net a fair sum toward a new house. The new house is a beautiful structure, and would be a credit to any city of twenty thousand inhabitants.

There was a deficit of two thousand dollars when the house was completed, all of which was pledged on the day of dedication.

Ministers from the three bodies (Baptist, Free Baptist and Disciples) were present. I had the pleasure to represent the Disciples. Three services were held during the day, culminating with the dedicatory service at night, when there were about 1,000 persons present. The best of feeling prevailed throughout the day. The present pastor is Fred Tower Galpin, a regularly ordained Baptist minister, but a young man of large sympathies and thoroughly imbued with the union sentiment. If he remains with the church I predict a glorious future for it.

Our work in Milwaukee has taken several important forward steps recently. We are having frequent additions since the opening of the new year. The daughter of Bro. and Sister Lindsay, who are well known to many of the brethren in other states, made confession of her faith in Christ last Sunday and will be baptized next Sunday. She is a very promising young lady, and I predict that she, like her father and mother, will be a useful member of the body of Christ, blessing the world in which she lives.

We have our plans for the new house in the contractor's hands, and are trying to count the cost before we begin, so as not to make the mistake rebuked by our Lord Luke 14:28-32.

I preached last night for the Rescue Mission. These missions are a great blessing to a city. We had a large audience of men present, and the attention was perfect.

The earnest attention of many present showed that men are just as hungry now for the gospel of the divine Friend as they ever were.

One of the most delightful departments of our work this winter is the "Twelve Studies in the Life of Christ," prepared by the Ann Arbor Bible Chair Extension Department. We have a class of thirty-five and they are taking great interest in the study.

OUR WORKING BOYS' HOME.

Many are feeling and saying that the time is come for us to pay more attention to philanthropy. We must put the produce of our great evangelism at work. We now have numbers and no little means to develop other forms of service as well as the evangelistic. Some months ago Bro. H. E. Oberdorsten and wife opened a mission in a river ward, holding nightly services. Boys and young men were converted, but the old environment was an enemy almost invulnerable, and when they went back to their boarding-places in saloons the battle was often all too short. The need of a home for homeless boys impressed itself upon them as the most imperative they had discovered. So they set about in full assurance of faith to found one. There is a Catholic institution of the kind in the city, and its success was an inspiration to them. The work was put under the supervisory direction of our local missionary executive committee, and most satisfactory progress in being made in furnishing the home and providing means for its support. Homeless boys will be received who have no work and who get small wages. They will be given a home at such rates as their income will justify and surrounded by Christian influences. The good project meets with such warm sympathy among business men that it is confidentially expected to assume some proportions in time.

"MY MISSIONARY SERMON."

No doubt some hundreds of preachers have been revolving that phrase in their minds for some time. If all our sermons were missionary the problem would be solved. Let us enlarge our evangelistic conception of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles into the world-wide evangelism of the Master's purpose. There is one thing that shines resplendently above even faith, repentance and baptism in that portion of the Book; it is the church and all its powers as a missionary dynamic. When our pulpits begin to radiate an atmosphere of apostolic missionary zeal, then will our "thus saith the Lord" find the spirit of life; the gospel in the twentieth century will become as glorious as it was in the first, and quite as prolific of results. Nothing will induce a man to invest so quickly as a promise of good results. Well, try it in the missionary sermon. Spend an half hour telling your people what transformed New Zealand, how John Williams' conquest of the South Seas ranks with Alexander in its glory; relate the heroism of Judson in his sowing and tell of the great harvest others are now reaping, make an illustration of Moffat's conversion of Africaner and tell it with all its tragic and picturesque background. How marvelous is this story of Christ's conquest in the past century; Christian mothers should tell it to their children and Christian pastors should thrill their people with it. Double and treble your offering by telling the congregation how their investment in the souls of black men and yellow men will pay and the jingle of the penny will yield to the clink of the dollar when the basket goes around. The Lord's cause should not be recorded in the column side by side with pin money.

The Editor's Recipe For Insomnia Not a Failure.

The Editor's Easy Chair recipe for insomnia deeply interested me, for it had been my remedy for a number of years. I would like to say to those who found the remedy a failure that it was not properly applied. The Apostle Paul wrote to the Philippians: "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, ... think on these things." If our friends, who were attempting to make use of the remedy, had left out the rasping memories that were calculated to produce wakefulness, and thought only of the tender, soothing bygones of childhood, of some quaint, peaceful day in the woods with nature, or had wandered back to the old-fashioned flower garden of other days and roamed, hand in hand, as did this writer, with the sweetest and most congenial companion childhood ever knew, inhaling again the fragrance of "sweet williams" and "mourning bride," and retracing in the evening sunset the wonderful things seen, then in the floating clouds very soon would they have found themselves sweetly and peacefully sleeping.

A SISTER.

CAUSE UNKNOWN

Finally Found to Lie in the Coffee.

"We have had a curious and unpleasant experience with coffee drinking, husband and I. I have been a great sufferer for several years with indigestion and heart trouble, and did not know the cause of it until I finally came to the conclusion that it was the use of coffee. So we abandoned the coffee and took up Postum Cereal Food Coffee, which I had seen advertised in the daily papers.

"Since using it, I have, to my great surprise, improved wonderfully. Husband has gained 11 pounds in two months since he left off coffee and began the use of Postum. He sleeps soundly at night now, which he does not remember having done for several years on account of nervousness. It is remarkable that people go on in ill health and do not discover the cause of the trouble.

"You may depend upon it we know how to make Postum good, and that is easy, if one will use a sufficient amount and boil it long enough. It is really an elegant and delicious drink. I don't want my name to appear in the papers, if you should publish this testimonial."——, Chattanooga, Tenn. The Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., are permitted to give the name of this lady by letter, if desired.

Letter From The Philippines.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—

Leaving New York as one of the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A., filling the request of the Secretary of War, to send experienced men to take the places of chaplains which Congress failed to provide for the provisional army of 35,000, I arrived in Manila a few days prior to Christmas. I brought with me a large shipment of supplies and many personal gifts for the men from Helen Gould, and after unpacking and repacking I came here and opened association quarters or rooms for the use and betterment of the soldiers at this point. At present I have a chapel tent 40x20 feet, where the men gather, day and evening, to read, write, play checkers, sing gospel songs, listen to the preacher and all that sort of thing. I am not in favor of secularizing the gospel, but I think that the plan of the Y. M. C. A. in gospelizing the secularities, is a fine comprehension of the real nature and measure of man. In this work, which is broad and inclusive, the whole man is embraced, spiritual, intellectual and physical. Even in my own distinct work as a pastor at home I found the attempt to differentiate between the material and the spiritual man a futile one. I cannot for the life of me see any physical man apart from the mental and moral. Nor can I see any mental or moral man separate from the physical.

I do not believe that I can influence the spiritual in a man for good without a corresponding effect upon the physical and intellectual nature. Every honest theory of mental or physical attainment must, it seems to me, necessarily reach anything like perfect realization by being grounded upon high moral considerations. I have studied the life of Christ among men to little purpose if I am not to see that he followed this method. His mission, then, is my mission. So we erect this tent, invite men to spend their off-duty hours in its shelter doing that which in different ways upbuilds and strengthens them, using the time that but for this association effort would be thrown away; squandered, in many cases, damagingly.

My tent is on the bank of a beautiful river about two miles from the sea. The town of Dagupan is 118 miles due north from Manila and the terminal of the railway line. The whole line is now safely in the hands of the Americans and is being put into excellent condition, and the warehouses along its length filled with supplies to carry the army over the season when the rain is in evidence. Our troops hold the whole country beyond this point.

It is my opinion that with the exception of a scrap now and then with the bandits, as we used to call them in Cuba, the fighting part of this campaign is over. To me there is a very marked contrast between the Filipino and the Cuban, in intelligence, in tact, in industry as a habit, in frugality, in morals, in cleanliness, in respect for law and order and the civil authority. It is all more than 80 per cent. in favor of the Filipino. These people are quite intelligent; they are rather tactful, have a great deal of moral sense, and I think that once the military tangle has been straightened out and our people inaugurate a Civil Status, these natives will very gladly and heartily accept the new conditions. They seem apt at imitating or adapting, and will make progress in all that pertains to their material and moral betterment.

One of the radical questions is the religious. Of course, I do not touch it in any working way, but I have studied the status, both here and in Cuba. The conditions in the two islands parallel. As a minister and a Christian worker I am candid in saying that if the the minister or other religious worker who goes to Cuba or who comes here with the avowed purpose of disturbing the present prevailing religious conditions by an aggressive campaign against Catholicism has a decently working conscience, it is more than likely to question both his right and motive. If this is the avowed purpose I think it will be wisdom-wise and in consonance with Christian principles for the people of American churches to decline to vote either means or sympathy to support it. In spite of the fact that Catholicism has not been all that it should have been; that under the bond of church and state the Spanish priest was a far greater oppressor than the state, the religion of the Catholic Church is now and has always been the prevailing religion, and it will go without saying that it is so deeply, firmly and universally mortised into the very nature of the Cuban and the Filipino that 99 out of every 100 are Catholic to the marrow and will be always. These people had a justifiable grievance in the evils growing out of the bond between church and state, and under which the Spanish priest was an oppressor. But that bond has been broken; the Spanish priest has been substituted by the native or the American priest, and the Catholic laymen, both in Cuba and here have been accorded the status of his brother churchman in America. This is a guarantee of greater religious freedom, the interest of the church in the education of her children, immunity from the dominance of the priest and whatever else comes with this new and radical change. As a result of this, both in Cuba and here, the native element has flocked back to the church, showing that he had not rebelled against the Catholic Church or Catholic faith, but only against the oppression of the Spanish priest. In the present unsettled condition of things here as well as in Cuba, I can think of no more harmful thing than the introduction of a Protestant religious effort, from which it will be out of the question to eliminate the sectarian factor. Already here in Manila this dissension and sectarian bitterness compels attention. It was so in Cuba.

To have half a dozen Christian denominations settle themselves in the midst of these people and begin the process of changing the faith of these natives into a belief in some particular dogma held by these churches would be little else than a calamity. As the case now stands and the Catholic prelates doing what they can to elevate and in all ways better the spiritual condition of these people, that church has the right of way, both in Cuba and in the Philippines. I, for one, say let them have it, at least until a change of civic conditions makes a clearer opening—one that the Christian can enter with a clear conscience.

A Circuit of the Globe. About four years ago A. McLean, of the Foreign Society, made the circuit of the globe, visiting all the missionary stations in Japan, China, India, Turkey, Armenia, Denmark, Norway and Great Britain, and also visiting Australia and other countries. His account of his journey makes one of our most valuable missionary works. The volume is splendidly gotten up and copiously illustrated. Price, $2.00.

Missionary Addresses. These are the addresses on foreign missions of A. McLean, who has spent his life as the advocate and promoter of foreign missionary work. No preacher who desires to make his church a missionary church, and who preaches on missions, can afford to do without this book. Neatly bound in cloth. Price, $1.00.

St. Louis Letter.

If I were asked to name the greatest needs of our cause in St. Louis I should say (1) a better co-operation of the churches; (2) a better working plant for each of our churches, and (3) a better propaganda of the faith.

In a previous letter I have given credit to our people in this city for what they have done in the last decade and are doing to-day, but with this growth, creditable as it is, no one should be satisfied. All would rejoice in a larger growth and a larger hold upon the city.

But before there can be a forward movement there must be an account taken of present conditions and their demands, one of the first of which, in the judgment of the writer, is that of a better co-operation of our present forces. It is the purpose of this letter, therefore, to set forth this want in as strong a light as the ability of the writer and nature of our plea will admit.

One of the distinctive features of our plea is the unity of God's people upon a New Testament working as well as a doctrinal basis; and yet, no religious body seems to more persistently ignore that feature of New Testament Christianity in their practical work in the larger cities than ourselves.

Take St. Louis, for example. We have here a dozen congregations pleading for primitive oneness in Christ, yet living, working and feeling as independent of each other as the denominations about us, save for a few general religious and neighborly courtesies. The young people and the sisters have an occasional union service, our preachers see each other presumably once a week, in the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and our City Mission Board in one way or another quietly collects money enough to support an evangelist, but there is not that open, living, practical oneness of our people implied in our plea for Christian unity nor exemplified by the primitive church.

In the first place, we have no general registry of the Disciples of Christ in St. Louis, and through this means alone we lose presumably about one-half of our actual membership in the city. Even the different congregational enrollments are not generally known, displayed, valued or accessible. We believe that not only should there be greater care in the keeping of each congregational enrollment, but that there should be a general enrollment of all the Disciples of Christ in the city, and revised at least annually; but of the benefits of this we cannot now speak.

In the next place, we have no church paper devoted exclusively to our cause in St. Louis. We have several cangregational leaflets, but these have no general circulation beyond the churches they represent, severally. Knowledge is power, and the power of congregational sympathy cannot exist without knowledge of the congregations, severally; and this knowledge, so essential to sympathy, cannot be properly supplied without a common church paper. The churches of Pittsburg, Pa., and vicinity, however, are making an effort in this direction. They have a journal of sixteen pages published weekly, in which twelve or more congregations are represented. We believe that the churches of each of our larger cities ought to co-operate in the maintenance of such a journal for their mutual benefit.

In the third place, we have no common emergency or relief fund. In a feeble way each congregation manages to relieve its own worst cases of distress, but there the matter usually rests. The writer of this letter does not believe in indiscriminate charity, but a Christianity that does not extend help to the unfortunate is not of Christ, and this we cannot do in the New Testament sense, as the situation demands, without systematic co-operation. This is properly a co-operative work, and it should be so recognized. In a feeble way our Benevolent Association is trying to do this work, but theirs is not a metropolitan work, and besides, their funds are inadequate. In every city of this size there is needed a nursery for infants, an orphans' home and a hospital or sanitarium. As you know, some of the religious bodies of this city are so equipped.

Then again, there is not that fellowship of symapathy between the congregations essential to their highest interests. As already insinuated, this is due largely to a lack of knowledge; but it is no less a weakness in our ranks as a religious body in the city. We are not arguing for a religious or social communism nor an ecclesiasticism, but for an articulation of interests, resources and energies, so essential to organic spiritual unity and metropolitan success.

Such a thing as a meeting of the official boards of the different churches in the city to compare notes and consult together concerning the welfare of this or that church or mission, or the cause of Christ in St. Louis, has not been held in our history to the writer's knowledge or hearing. And yet, such a meeting ought to be held quarterly or semi-annually. The very knowledge that all our official boards were meeting quarterly to talk and pray together over the congregations, severally, and as whole, would be a power that has not yet been felt or known in our midst. The monthly meetings of the City Mission Board cannot supply this lack.

Then there should be occasional mass meetings for worship. Not mass meetings for this or that mission, home or foreign, nor for money-raising of any kind, but purely for worship. Such meetings would be of incalculable value to our congregations. More spirital vitality would be imparted to a congregation by such a meeting than could be obtained in a month's special effort alone. We would then feel that we were members of the great body of Christ in St. Louis and not of this or that mission, chapel or weaker church only, as the case might be. In such meetings there would be such co-operation of heart-power that the weakest church in the city would feel strengthened for better work.

There is need, also, for a closer co-operation of our forces in the city against the enemy in this or that locality within or without the church. Each congregation should be made to feel that in any engagement with the enemy it had the united support of the entire brotherhood of the city. In one locality the overshadowing cloud may be the breweries; in another, Romanism; in another, Spiritism; in another, the social tide, etc. Mass meetings should be held at such places in which the entire force of the city might be directed against the overshadowing evil of that place. Such meetings would not only give great strength to the church in that locality, but would also have great influence upon the community. The people would see that the church was there for good and endorsed by the brotherhood of the city in its position against this or that evil and would feel more inclined to become identified with such a people.

Such meetings would also help to crystallize a too often weak and feeble sentiment against some of the dangerous customs of the irreligious within the church, such as the social glass, card-playing, dancing or other amusements of questionable Christian propriety and influence. A frank and open expression of the entire church in the city would be a great restraining power against the practice of any of these things in a given congregation.

There should also be devised some system for co-operation in the improvement of our houses of worship, especially with the weaker churches. Some good may come of spasmodic efforts, but the moral force of unity in such cases is lost. We hardly have a church in the city that is not in need of a larger and better plant for its work, even if all present church building debts were paid. The First, Mt. Cabanne, Beulah, Compton Heights and the Fourth church buildings may be especially mentioned as being too small. Each of these churches could do a larger work with a larger house. A house that will not offend the taste of the cultured is not only legitimate, but one of the demands of the hour with our people in this and other of our larger cities; and herein is a splendid field for co-operation.

The Chicago Letter in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Feb. 18th tells us that the brethren in that city have organized a kind of miniature Church Extension Society for this very purpose, and St. Louis ought to do as much. Our brethren, through the churches, could and would contribute something annually to such a fund if only guaranteed of its wise use, and we greatly need both the fund and the fruit which would result from such a co operation.

That such a living exemplification of our plea for Christian unity would marvelously accelerate our work in this city cannot be disputed. This, too, is the kind of unity which would command the respect of business men, the kind for which Jesus prayed and Paul preached. Simply unity of doctrine will not meet the demands of the hour nor the teaching of the New Testament. As well might we expect a man who does not practice what he preaches to have power with men as a church. The kind of unity taught in the 12th chapter of 1 Cor., and for which Jesus prayed, was a living, visible, working unity, and until we make some better effort to exemplify that unity in our city churches we cannot expect to exert that commanding influence upon metropolitan life that our plea merits.

Los Angeles Letter.

California posesses another splendid church house, devoted to the cause of primitive Christianity. It is one of the very best and most commodious houses in the state. It is located at Fresno. It will seat, the Sunday-school room included, about 800 persons. It has all the modern conveniences and is well adapted to the work of the Fresno Church. I was invited to attend the dedicatory services, Feb. 18, 1900, and to preach the dedicatory sermon. Very large audiences were present at each of the four services of the day. $2,500 was needed to liquidate the entire indebtedness against the building and congregation. It fell to my lot to make the appeal for it. The people responded heartily. Much to the surprise and gratification of the entire membership, the entire amount was secured in pledges and cash, and I have seldom seen a happier church people. It is the best church building in Fresno and one of the very best owned by our people on the Pacific Coast.

The church in Fresno is the strongest in that growing little city of twenty thousand inhabitants, including within its membership many of the leading people of the city. Its influence throughout Fresno and vicinity, and for that matter in the state, is only in behalf of righteousness. Its present strength and power must be largely attributed to the work and influence of its pastor, W. H. Martin, who is now in the eleventh year of his ministry with that church. He is a man of fine character and ability and the work has grown greatly under his long pastorate. That church building and congregation are other witnesses to the wisdom of long pastorates. Give California forty such men and pastorates and we should have forty such strong and influential churches.

California at present is suffering from its third successive drought. For nearly eight weeks, and that, too, in the rainy season of the year, Southern California has had no rain. Such a length of time at this time of the year without rain is unprecedented in our history here. The rainfall for this year and the past two winters in Southern California has just about equaled our average annual rainfall. This section of the state will lose its grain crop unless we have heavy rainfalls in the next few weeks. The fruit crop of this section will be greatly injured. The light rainfall of the past two seasons has not been without its compensation, as much water has been developed and added to the permanent supply of this section. Water development still goes on, and it is hoped that by this means and the rainfall we are hoping to have later, that we shall get through this season fairly well. The Lord knows best. He doeth all things well. His orderings will be for the best good of the race. We shall commit our ways to him.

I have been wondering, of late, if there can be any good, any of the spirit of the Master, in the spirit of criticism, fault-finding and censure that seems to be abroad in some of our preachers, teachers and papers to-day. Is the good of our common cause subserved by it? Does it minister to the higher spiritual life which is so appalling a need in our churches? Does it foster the missionary sentiment among us? Does it inspire men with the heroism and self-sacrifice of the apostles? Does it ever advance the genuine good of the cause? The religion of Christ is, as I understand it, constructive, rather the destructive. Jesus' principal censure and criticism was against hypocrisy. The bruised reed he did not break, the smoking flax did he not quench. Should this not be the better way for his fellows? The good will conquer the evil, so the new life of the tree pushes off the last year's leaves that have long resisted the storm. So will truth overcome evil.

"Bells of Easter-Tide."

A Beautiful, New Concert Service for Easter Sunday.

It is now only a short time until Easter Sunday. It is time to prepare for any special service which your Sunday-school will have upon that occasion. Do not wait until the last moment, but begin in time. Easter Day should be made beautiful with music and flowers.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" is a concert service, including music, recitations and appropriate selections from the Scriptures. The songs are by W.J.King and W. E. M. Hackleman. The poems and recitations are the work of Birdie Bell, E. E. Hewitt and Jennie Wilson. Both the authors and composers have done their work excellently.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" makes a pamphlet of sixteen pages, with a handsomely designed Easter cover. The price for single copy is five cents; per dozen; fifty cents, postpaid. Send the publishers five cents at once for a sample copy.

Once again, let us warn all our Sunday-school friends that the time is short. Easter Sunday comes on April 15, or in about six weeks from the present time. Not a day should be lost. "Bells of Easter-Tide" is not a difficult exercise, but time and careful preparation are required to satisfactorily present the simplest service.

SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS; PER DOZEN, 50 CENTS.

Shall Creighton Avenue Church be Lost to Our Cause?

There is a property worth from ten to twelve thousand dollars, having one of the best locations in the city of Fort Wayne. It is located on the Belt Line Street Railway, making it accessible from any part of the city, as well as being the only Protestant church in the midst of ten thousand English speaking people. Several thousand dollars have already been paid. The present financial condition of the church is through no fault of those who are working so earnestly and sacrificing so nobly to save it. There is a bright outlook for a splendid growth if the property can only be made secure to our cause. The total indebtedness now is $7,080. The Church Extension has granted a loan of $3,000 when balance is secured. The church has raised among its members and friends in the city of Ft. Wayne $3,000 if the property can be saved. The C. W. B. M. has promised to help with $200 on Bro. Harris' salary for the present year, providing the church makes good the $3,000. Under this plan $6,000 of the $7,080 is provided for, still they are $1,100 short of the necessary amount.

Last October the district convention which convened at Ft. Wayne recommended that the district raise $1,000 for saving the property, but after having made a strenuous effort it is found to be absolutely impossible; $500 is the highest possible amount that can be raised in the district. There is no chance whatever to raise any more from the above sources. But this amount is now absolutely sure. NOW SHALL THIS PROPERTY BE LOST WHEN $600 WILL SAVE IT? "That is the question."

Having considered this question thoroughly, and in view of the above facts, we, the undersigned officers of the Indiana Christian Missionary Society, after prayerfully considering this matter in state board meeting and by direction of the members of the state board in regular session Jan. 8, 1900, do earnestly recommend and prayerfully beseech the brotherhood everywhere, especially throughout the state of Indiana, to join in the saving of this property to the extent of raising the necessary $600; and to this end we authorize Bro. T. J. Legg, field secretary, to assist Bro. Harris, who is pastor of the church at Fort Wayne, in raising the above-named amount, by visiting and calling upon the churches throughout the state; and we beg you thus to receive him in the name of the Lord.

It is understood, in case the property should not be saved, every dollar is to be refunded to the respective churches and parties who have contributed. Give your offerings to Bro. Legg or Harris when they are making the personal canvass. Or you can send by draft or money order to W. W. Dyggert, 50 Miner, St., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

SAVE TIME AND EXPENSE.

1. The property must be saved or lost by March 20, 1900.
2. Since action of state board above mentioned, all arrangements have been perfected except the raising of the $600 to be raised outside of Ft. Wayne and the fifth district.
3. I am extremely busy. Many calls for my time must remain unanswered till this property is saved to our brotherhood. Besides, we have only a few days in which to act. Save time and expense by remitting at once and save canvass. The state board will credit you for so much contributed to state work.
4. This is the plan that saved the splendid church in Toledo. It will save Creighton Ave.

The Awakening of Mexico.

The subject of Mexico brings unbounded interest to us, because it is our neighbor on the south and is a country of unlimited wealth, both in agricultural and mineral products.

The people of Mexico are called Indians, although they are a very different type from the American Indians. They are of the average height, with black eyes and hair and dark skin, and some of the young women are said to be rather handsome. They were in a semicivilized condition many years before our country was settled, and looking through their ancient cities at their architecture, sculpture and paintings, we cannot help but confess that those "gone before" were indeed a more noble and worthy people than the present Mexicans.

You ask what is the cause of all this? It is due to the cruelty and oppression of the Spaniard and the Roman Catholic Church.

In 1519 the Spaniards, under Hernando Cortez, entered the city of Mexico, the guest of the emperor of this country, the Montezuma. Cortez, with all his Spanish cruelty and trickery, seized the Montezuma and made him his prisoner and forced him to appear before his people, advising them to lay down their arms, which so enraged the Mexicans that they slew their own emperor for his lack of patriotism, and now a bloody conflict ensued for several months, but in August, 1821, Cortez and his followers entered the city as conquerors and this mighty empire became a subject of Spain.

For three hundred years Spain, with all her brutality, oppressed and abused these inoffensive natives, but their sufferings finally became unbearable, and in 1810 a poor Indian curate, by the name of Hidalgo, undertook to lead his people out of this bondage, although it cost Hidalgo his life. Thanks be to his martyrdom, the independence of Mexico was established in 1821.

In a crude way they patterned after our noble republican form of government, but the end was not yet. Two parties sprang into existence, the Church party and the Liberal party. The Church party was for the restoration of the monarchy and the continuunce of the Roman Catholic religion as the sole religion of this country. The Liberal party was for liberty and freedom of the people.

For thirty years Mexico was in a state of turmoil and conflict. In 1856, when everything seemed so dark and hopeless, Benito Jaurez, the Washington of Mexico, took upon himself the yoke of the Mexicans and led them on to victory, and in 1858 he was made the President of Mexico.

To-day the Republic of Mexico consists of twenty-seven states, two territories and one federal district. Their laws are made by their Congress and they elect a President every four years, the same as our President is elected.

The outlook for Mexico is hopeful, although she has undergone much for liberty and freedom. I question sometimes, Have we, as a sister nation, done what we ought to aid these poor Mexicans in their fight for liberty? I know it has laid close to the hearts of some of our statesmen in the past. Daniel Webster, in speaking of some of our national difficulties, said: "Our greatest danger is that we have a sister republic on our southern borders almost in mortal agony, and no one among us seems willing to lend a helping hand." What we have left undone for them in this battle for freedom, can we not make up to them by sending this blessed gospel of Jesus Christ which saves to the uttermost?

Our laborers in this vineyard are few in number as yet, but I believe the day of religious grandeur in Mexico is just in its dawn, as it were. The day is not far distant when our blessed Bible will be reverenced in Mexico as it is in our own fair country. Let our ascending prayer ever be for these heathens so near our doors. May we with God's help be an incentive to help these people up in a broader and better plane of life, and make this awakening extend through time itself.

SILVER AND GOLD was published eighteen months ago. Over One Hundred Thousand Copies have already been sold. No poor song-book could have had such a sale. No "pretty good" song-book could have reached such a circulation. Only first-class collections have such success. The superiority of SILVER AND GOLD made it a success, and its success has proven its superiority.

SILVER AND GOLD was compiled and edited by J. V. Coombs and W. E. M. Hackleman. It sprang immediately into popularity, and that popularity has since grown rapidly, and is still growing. The following are some of the composers whose work is found in SILVER AND GOLD:

KENTUCKY.

At Cedar Springs I preached 21 times; 17 were baptized and one "came in another way." Post office box 497, Lexington, Ky.—JOHN MARCROM.

OKLAHOMA.

Medford, Feb. 27.—I have just closed a short meeting at Sand Creek, with two baptisms. I preach for them once a month.—E. B. HUFF.

INDIANA.

Greencastle, Feb. 26.—There were two additions by letter to the church at Cayuga yesterday.—L. V. BARBRE.

Indianopolis, March 2.—There were 38 additions in the meeting at Palestine.—J. M. CANFIELD.

COLORADO.

Florence, Feb. 26.—Six were added at morning and evening services. Three were by letter, the others from other churches and some reclaimed. The Lord is blessing the heroic efforts of this people. This is an important point and many realize it.—DANIEL TRUNDLE.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City.—W. H. Bagby is in the midst of a most interesting meeting. Four young ladies were baptized last week, and two others united with the church by letter yesterday. The meeting will continue through the week and perhaps longer.—W. T. EDDINGFIELD.

CALIFORNIA.

San Jose, Feb. 27.—There were seven added by letter at the Central, Lord's day, the 25th; two confessions recently, 11 in all added since the first of January.—F. B. SAPP.

Artesia, Feb. 23.—Twelve added in the last six weeks; six by statement, four from the Baptists and two by letter.—N. B. MCGHEE, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Joplin, Feb. 28.—Ten additions during February; three by confession. One was a grey-headed man and one was raised a Catholic. Our gambling houses are all closed and all saloons closed on Sunday and have been for two months.—W. F. TURNER.

Springfield, Feb. 26.—Six accessions in all to the Washington Ave. Church since our last report.—F. S. HALTOM.

Glasgow, Feb. 26.—One addition by letter at regular services here yesterday. The future outlook is bright.—K. W. WHITE.

Nevada, Feb. 26.—Two more confessions at Richards yesterday. The work at this point is booming.—S. MAGEE.

Grant City, March 3.—Good meeting last Lord's day, with six additions; four confessions. All departments of work doing well.—W. H. HARRIS.

Westboro, Feb. 26.—Meeting 10 days old, five added to date; one from the Baptists, three from the world and one from the Methodists, but by confession and baptism. Meeting continues.—G. HALLECK ROWE.

KANSAS.

Ft. Scott, March 2.—We closed at Illiapolis, Ill., with 20 additions. Will rest up for a week or so.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

Augusta, March 2.—I preached at Latham last Lord's day and baptized one. Four were added there by letter the month previous. Probably I will preach for them monthly.—C. W. YARD.

Scottsville, March 3.—Nine confessions to date in my meeting here. Meeting continues.—L. P. RIDNOUR, evangelist.

Olathe, Feb. 26.—Two additions here yesterday, one by confession. Our first year's work here closed yesterday. We met all our expenses and have reduced the old debt to $50, which we expect to pay soon. We start the new year full of hope and expecting a good offering for Foreign Missions. I have had a total of 43 additions in my work this year.—C. H. HILTON.

Crestline, Feb. 28.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting with 20 additions, most of them confessions, and we were able to settle some old difficulties between members of the church. We are all united and happy, and we desire the help of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to keep us so. Yours for Christ.—W. S. MOORE.

Chanute, Feb. 28.—Meeting closed last week. The immediate results were 10 additions. All departments of work in good shape. The Bible-school numbers 140. I will begin a meeting near Yates Center next week.—W. T. ADAMS.

OREGON.

I just closed a two weeks' meeting at Elgin, with 27 additions. Organized Junior Endeavor with 56 members; senior Endeavor, 48 members. One thousand dollars subscribed toward a new church building and money raised to pay a preacher for half time. They will commence work on their new building at once.—W. B. ROSE, Dixie, Wash.

WASHINGTON.

Palouse, Feb. 28.—We began a meeting Jan. 26, with home forces. Nine were added the first week. Stivers and Webb then came to our help and 30 more were added. There were 24 by confession, one from the Baptists, and the rest by letter or statement.—E. C. WIGMORE.

Zillah, Feb. 27.—F. Walden closed a three weeks' meeting here (his home) last night. There were in all 56 additions; good interest was awakened. We are going to build a house of worship this summer.—AMOS BUSH.

IOWA.

Kellerton, Feb. 26.—Our meeting here is 11 days old, with 13 confessions and two added by statement. We are having a crowded house at each service.—F. L. DAVIS, evangelist.

Moulton, Feb. 26.—There were four additions here yesterday; 38 since Jan. 1.—PERCY LEACH.

Sloan, March 3.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here last Lord's day. Twenty-one added since I took charge here in December. We held the meeting with home forces.—M. S. JAMESON, pastor.

Ames, March 1.—On Feb. 27 we closed a 24 days' meeting. B. B. Burton, of San Jose, did the preaching and J. E. Shakespeare, of Drake University, led the singing for last 10 days. There were 20 confessions and baptisms, two from other churches and eight other additions; 30 in all.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE, pastor.

MONTANA.

Missoula, Feb. 26.—Two weeks ago we opened a Japanese Christian mission, with six enrolled. Several teachers are assisting and English and the Bible are taught five nights each week. Last night Charles White made the good confession and was baptized. He is a brilliant young Japanese and has a good knowledge of English. For several years he has been a believer and an earnest worker for Christ. As soon as financially able he desires to take a course in college and become a missionary to his people. This week on Wednesday night he will begin to teach a class in the Bible in Japanese. We have five New Testaments in Japanese, but no Bible or tracts. Should any of the brethren know of tracts in Japanese on our plea and position, will they kindly inform us? We believe God has great things in store for this mission.—JOHN EGBERT, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

St. Joseph, Feb. 27.—Four confessions since taking the work here. Began our meeting last night; good prospects. Mrs. Hostetler organized a Junior C. E., with 32 members, Sunday.—H. J. HOSTETLER.

Clay City, Feb. 27.—We closed a two weeks' meeting here last Sunday with eight additions.—WALTER KLINE.

Clay City, March 1.—At our regular prayer-meeting service last night one young man was baptized at the close of the service.—WALTER KLINE.

Pine Creek, Feb. 23.—We conducted a 20 days' meeting at Mt. Morris this month. There were 15 accessions; 14 baptisms. The German Baptists have their college here where 240 students attend. Our brethren are much encouraged over the meeting. We shall labor for them this year for half time.—D. F. SEYSTER.

Sidell, Feb. 27.—Recently closed a meeting here with five baptisms, one by statement, one from Baptists, two reclaimed. Sister Laura Cross, of Clinton, led the singing.

Mattoon, March 2.—Twenty-five additions at the regular services during February, making 117 in a little less than 11 months; all at the regular services.—ARTHUR A. WILSON, pastor.

Watseka, March 2.—We are in a meeting with Bro. Victor W. Dorris, of Kentucky, as chief speaker. He is holding forth to large and appreciative audiences. At once strong in his personality, fearless in his denunciation of error, plain in his truth-teaching, he is daily leading men and women to the blessed Christ. We are all happy in the service of love.—B. S. FERRALL.

Arthur.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here, February 24, with nine additions.—A.H.HARRELL.

Toledo, Feb. 28.—I assisted E. A. Hibler and the Johnstown (Pa.) Church in a 25 days' meeting, commencing January 14. There were 26 accessions. I held a meeting for this church one year ago, and much improvement was manifested. The attendance was much larger and there was a deeper spiritual power manifested. I am now in a meeting with Bro. H. F. MacLane, with the Norwood Avenue Church, this city.—F. A. WIGHT.

Campbellstown, March 1.—We closed our four weeks' meeting at this point with E. V. Spicer, of Selma, Ala., with 37 accessions; nearly all by baptism. Much greater visible results would have been obtained had not Bro. Spicer been called away by the serious illness of his wife. He is both fearless and loving in his presentation of the truth. The church at this place was organized January 17, 1899, with a membership of 19, and has grown until the membership now numbers 66. They have built a neat and substantial chapel and are entirely out of debt, with the brightest of prospects for the future. We take especial pride in the fact that our good sister, Rosa Oxer, missionary at Mahoba, India, is a member of our congregation. The writer has labored with this people since last May, and a more earnest and consecrated people we never have seen.—S. G. NEFF, minister, Richmond, Ind.

W. T. MOORE.

There was a change in the weather, the wind blew cold,
And the elms rocked under its power;
A young life rocked with the bending trees,
And we all kept watch on the hour.

As the clock struck ten, the wind blew strong,
And a blast from the clouds came down;
It swept through the house with the chill of death,
While a cross was exchanged for a crown.

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XVIII.

On the appointed day for service in memory of Dr. Andral, the entire village turned out. So great, in fact, was the interest that the audience was present many minutes before the stated time, and sat in solemn silence awaiting the hour.

Prof. Fergus was to make the address. Jack Burton had been asked to do so, but declined on account of inability to control his feelings.

The solemn preliminary exercises of songs and prayer were conducted with many tears, and Mr. Fergus, arising, said: "It is in no vindictive spirit toward the perpetrators of the awful deed that has destroyed the life of one so dear and so eminently useful to this colony that I arise to address you.

"In fact, our great sorrow and our great love of the victim withdraws all thoughts from the guilty agents and focuses them on him who was our friend and counsellor, whose body lies beneath the great sea.

"As embodying the sorrows and the hopefulness, the tears and sunshine in our hearts, I have selected the words of Psalm 30:5: 'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.'

"Brethren, a great life has gone from our narrow circle. Our little world is wrapped in gloom, but the clouds will lift, and—"

The professor stood transfixed staring at the entrance. All eyes turned to see the cause, and then there was a wild delirium of joy, for Dr. Andral was gazing in at the door.

The whole audience arose, some shouted, some wept, some laughed, many flung their arms about him, and he was for the moment in iminent danger of his life.

Maria, after some allayment of the storm, went up to the Doctor with streaming eyes and with a happy, almost glorified face, as it seemed to me, and gave him both her hands. I thought for the moment he was going to fling his arms around her before all. Who could have blamed him?

But he simply grasped her dainty hands in his manly palms and beamed upon her with joy.

And then I quietly stole up, ashamed of my tear-stained face, and gave him my hand without lifting my eyes.

When mental soundness and quiet was restored, Mr. Fergus said: "We came here in sorrow and in tears, but our mourning has been turned into joy. The night of sorrow is past, the gladness of the morning is here.

"'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' We came here to mourn; let it be an occasion of thanksgiving. I know all hearts, welling with joy and gratitude, are ready to give adoring thanks to him whose providence has restored our friend."

Then we all bowed in prayer, and with tearful hearts and fervent words and enthusiastic amens, bore our devout thanksgiving to the all-hearing Father for his goodness.

The afternoon of the day of Dr. Andral's return was the time appointed for our religious conference.

Mr. Withrow introduced the subject by saying: "I take it for granted that we, from all denominations, are to come together on common ground. To do this we must give the fullest latitude in faith and practice.

"Now, I have always held that, as regards the mode of baptism, Pedobaptists are much more liberal than Baptists. The first will admit the validity of immersion, but the Baptist denies the validity of sprinkling.

"The first is a liberal, the second a narrow position. The first makes union easy, the second makes it hard. In the sprit of concession and liberty, and for the sake of harmony, I hope therefore that we will leave each one free to select whatever mode of baptism he prefers."

Mr. Burton following, said: "Like Mr. Withrow, I was brought up among those who practiced sprinkling for baptism; but I cannot agree with him that it is the spirit of harmony to adopt either sprinkling, or pouring, or immersion, or all of these, unless in harmony with God's truth. True, it sounds liberal to say: 'Take your choice of modes.' So it does to say to your neighbor: 'Take your way—swear, gamble and get drunk if you will; you can still be a member of our church in good standing.'

"But have we any right to depart from the express teachings of the Bible, to be liberal? 'Whosoever shall break the least of these commandments and shall teach men so shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven.' These words of Jesus forever condemn us for breaking down the barriers that he has set up. No, no; we are bound to go by what Christ has commanded. If it be sprinkling, I say heartily amen to that. If it be immersion, amen to that. If all modes, amen to that.

"Our friend is right when he says we must come to common ground, but what is common ground?"

Withrow: "It is where we can all agree. As I said, give each his choice of mode in baptism and all are satisfied."

Burton: "Now let us see: is Mr. Withrow right in his common ground? Can all agree? Are all satisfied? Let us put the matter to a practical proof. How many before me are satisfied with sprinkling for baptism?" About one-half of the house voted "aye," the other half "no," on this question.

The question of pouring was submitted and decided by a larger negative vote.

"How many are satisfied that immersion is baptism?" The house gave a unanimous vote in the affirmative.

"Now, how many are satisfied with all these modes?" About one-half voted "aye," the other half "no."

"Now, I think all can see what is common ground; where and where only we can all agree. Half of us think sprinkling will answer for baptism. The other half do not think it will do at all. We are about similarly divided in respect to pouring.

"One-half think sprinkling, pouring or immersion is a matter of indifference. The other half do not believe that sprinkling or pouring is baptism at all. But all come together in the conviction that when a penitent is buried in baptism, or immersed, he is truly baptized.

"Where, then, alone, is common ground? Wherein alone can we agree? It must be clear by your decision that we can be united only by accepting that which all agree is valid baptism. And, since the advocates of sprinkling and pouring agree that the mode is a matter of indifference, why not give up that which is questionable and accept the only method that all agree is genuine baptism?"

Prof. Fergus, following, said: "It must be clear to all, after the remarks just made, that the only way to unity and harmony is to accept that in which we all agree. As all accept immersion as valid baptism, no one really gives up anything when he gives up sprinkling, for the sake of him who cannot conscientiously accept it as baptism. Certainly, if Paul could say: 'If meat cause my brother to offend, I never will eat meat so long as the world shall stand,' we for our brother's sake can and must give up that which is of doubtful validity for that which is certain in baptism. Yet, the fact that we can all agree in this matter ought not to commit us to that method unless it is clearly taught in the Word of God.

"Let us, therefore, enter into a very careful and candid study of the Scriptures upon this subject between the present and our next meeting and ask the Lord to help us, and having learned what Jesus would have us do, follow him though the heavens fall."

CHAPTER XIX.

We all felt a deep interest in the strange disappearance, the detention and return of Dr. Andral. He had given a partial account to some. Others had only heard it at second-hand. Some had received no details at all. He was, therefore, requested at the opening of our next meeting to give a brief narration of what befell him from the terrific descent of the hill to his return to the village.

"We were slowly going down the hill," said he, "when suddenly the wagon shot downward as by a strong impulse from behind, and I knew the rope was severed. My first impulse was to jump out as did Mr. Burton, but the swiftness of motion and the piles of rock on either side made that course dangerous, and so I clung to my seat. I received a shock as though struck by a solid body when, with the wagon, I was shot into the bay. I was stunned, but not unconscious as yet, and gasping for breath I arose to the surface and struck out for the shore. I remember no more until I came to consciousness and found myself bound hand and foot. I was lying in a thicket. Three men were standing over me discussing what to do with me. Simulating unconscious, I listened; for it was a matter of vital interest to me.

"Rio Sam thought the best thing to do was to stop my wind. Pete said: ''Tother's killed and it can't be helped now, but I'll not consent to a cold-blooded murder.'

" 'What does it matter?' said Sam, 'we're in for it anyhow, so let's finish the job.'

" 'Rubbish,' said Pete, 'we didn't do it; it was the kid. Besides, the kid didn't do it; the rope broke. Let them show it wasn't a axident.'

" 'Stop your blatherin', idiots!' said a voice that I recognized as Bird's. 'There'll be no killin', though I wish he's broke his neck. We'll put him in the cooler, and after the excitement is over the fellows on the bluff, if were up to diplomacy, will pay a handsome reward for the return of the darling pet poodle to the ladies that are crying their eyes out because of his ride away in such a hurry.'

"I lay in the thicket until dark, compelled to hear the silly and profane words of my captors, and occasionally the distant voices of my friends, who were searching about the harbor for me. At nightfall I was taken to a little sheltered inlet where a boat was concealed. In this I was carried round to a bay in the south of the island, and was made to walk thence to a cavern in the mountain. Here I was put in a long, low, narrow room, which had a very narrow entrance, and this was securely barred by a heavy latticed door, on the threshold of which some one slept at night. I was fed regularly and each day given an hour's exercise in the open air, accompanied by a guard with a double-barreled shotgun.

"Thus, day by day wore away until the day of my return. That morning there suddenly arose a great smoke at the entrance to the cavern, and as there was a strong south wind it was driven directly into the interior.

Along with the inrushing smoke came the swift feet of Pat O'Callaghan with the cry: 'Stir yerselves ivry wan o' yes—the inemy's a schmokin' iv us out!' There was instantly a great commotion, which Bird quieted somewhat, and said: 'Boys, they think they've got us, but thank fortune there's more ways out than one. Come; we'll show them a trick worth knowing, and while they're watching the hole we'll make it hot for them in the rear.'

"Snatching whatever of arms were at hand they rushed into the interior of the cavern, evidently seeking another outlet. In two minutes from the alarm the echo of the last footfall died out and all was still.

"Suddenly a shadow crossed the latticed entrance to my prison. Then a mighty blow crashed upon the door, followed by a succession of others. Before I could decide whether it meant murder or deliverance to me, the door was shattered, its fragments pulled outward and the heavy stones used in the assault tossed inward. This was a great relief to me. The telltale positions of stone and door were to lead to the view that the assault was from within the cell, and that I had broken out without aid.

"The door shattered, a voice said: 'Come.' A hand grasped my arm, and I was rapidly led through the darkness. Presently a dim light dawned upon us; this we rapidly approached, and in the growing light I looked upon my deliverer to behold the face of Pat. He motioned me to stop, then stepping cautiously out, he pointed to the left and said: 'Aff wid ye into the thecket!'

"It is needless to say, I took him at hi word and used all haste, otherwise I shoul have missed my funeral."

When the Doctor had closed, the Captai said: "Certainly, Doctor, if we hadn't be lieved you in the sea we would have smoke out the scoundrels long ago.

"As it was, none of us was never near th cave. How do you account for the fire i the entrance?"

"I cannot positively say," said the Doctor "and yet I am well-nigh sure that it was ruse of Pat's to clear the cavern preparator to delivering me. I am now persuaded tha Pat's return to the Birds was not becaus he was an enemy to us, but that he migh be able to thwart their plots againts us."

At the close of Dr. Andral's story, th time having arrived, the subject of th action of baptism was resumed.

Mr. Fergus, having doubtless given more study to the theme than any other, wa asked to give the result of his investiga tion.

He began by saying: "To quote th words of an able Pedobaptist, in an articl prepared for the Encyclopedia of Religiou Knowledge, 'The question at issue is no this: whether immersion is valid baptism we admit that it is.'

"So do all really profound students of th religious world; and so do all who hear my voice admit that it is.

"Immersion passes current as gold all ove the world. The real question is, wil sprinkling and pouring do also? And, a these stand or fall together, we will narrow the subject by asking, is the sprinkling of a proper subject valid baptism? Now pleas tell me what authority do we find in th Old and New Testaments for the ceremonia sprinkling of water?"

McGregor: "The prophet Isaiah, 52n chapter, says of Christ: 'So shall he sprinkl many nations.' "

Mr. White: "There are frequent refer ences in Numbers to sprinkling people wit the waters of purification."

Miss Petyon: "Ezekiel, 36th chapter prophesying of Christ, says: 'Then will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shal be clean.' "

To these I added: "There are severa references to sptinkling in Hebrews, also i 1 Peter 2nd verse.'

Prof. Fergus resumed: "Very good. Yo have referred to all the passages in the Bibl that speak of sprinkling water, and more than all, for some of these passages speak of sprinkling blood or some element other than water, and some do not mention what is sprinkled.

"We will attend to these passages in the order you have given them:

"First, we will look at the verse in Isaiah 52: 'So shall he sprinkle many nations.' The Greek Septuagint Bible was in general use among the Jews in the Savior's day, and had the approval of Jesus and the New Testament writers; for they almost constantly quoted it. This verse reads in that: 'So shall he astonish many nations; which makes much better sense than if we use the word sprinkle.

"The Peshito Version, following the idea of the Hebrew, reads: 'So shall he purify many nations.'

"Lowth says: 'So shall he sprinkle with blood,' etc. Adam Clarke says: 'I retain the common rendering, though I am by no means satisfied with it.'

"The Speaker's Commentary says of the Hebrew word in question: 'The verb refers, not to a literal process of sprinkling, but to an act of purification analogous to that which was effected by ceremonial sprinkling. We may, then, dismiss the passage as of doubtful interpretation. There is probably, if correctly given, no such thing as sprinkling in it.

"Give it the most favorable interpretation that Pedobaptists have ever claimed, and it is positively certain, on the highest authority, that the sprinkling is not of simple water, but the sin-water of ceremonial purification.

"And this we will now consider in the two and only two chapters in which it occurs in the law (Num. 8:7, and Num. 19:13, 18, 19, 21). Here we have in Num. 8:7: 'Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.' You will see in the margin that the Hebrew is: 'Sprinkle sin-water,' etc. In Num. 19th chapter, we have several allusions to sprinkling the water of separation or purification.

"In the last chapter referred to we have an account of the preparation of this 'water.' Read it and you find that it was made of the ashes of a red heifer mingled with the water of a running stream.

"Only blood can cleanse from sin; but blood coagulates and cannot be sprinkled when cold. Hence, to teach the perpetual cleansing efficacy of the blood, a blood-red heifer was burnt to ashes, and these mixed with water were substituted for blood, and cleansed of sin as did the latter.

"There is no such thing in the Bible as the sprinkling upon a person of unmixed or pure water.

"There is one passage, that found in Ezekiel, 36th chapter, that seems to contradict the assertion just made. It is: 'Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean.'

"In the first place, it has no reference to baptism in the New Testament. Ezekiel was with the Jews, in Babylonish captivity, and his prophecy refers to the time of their return to their own country, and to the restoration of levitical offerings, and the sprinkling of the water of purification. This 'clean water' is so called nut because it is pure water, but because it makes free from sin. Just as it is called 'sin-water,' not because it is full of sin, but because it purges from sin.

To overlook the levitical meaning of this passage, and to divert the prophecy from its plain reference to the restoration of the captive Jews to their own country, and to apply it to the Christian era, making the sprinkling to mean Christian baptism, is not only to pervert the passage from its legitimate application, but to exalt the waters of baptism to a place equal in cleansing power to the blood of Christ. That is putting too much stress on baptism for me. Not all the waters of the earth can ever erase a sin. It is the blood of Jesus, typified in the offering of every victim on Jewish altar, and in the levitical cleansing of the 'sin-water' or 'purifying water' in Numbers, and in the 'clean water' of Ezekiel.

"It remains to briefly consider sprinkling in the New Testament. Beginning with Matthew's Gospel, we do not find the term 'sprinkle' until we reach Heb. 9:13. Here we have 'the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean.' This is clearly a reference to the levitical cleansing described in Numbers. So also in the 19th verse. Here it is the blood of calves and of goats with water that is sprinkled.

"Also in the 21st verse we have: 'He sprinkled likewise with blood the tabernacle,' etc.

"Now turn to Heb. 10:22. Here we have the heart sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, as the context shows, and the body washed with pure water.

"In Heb. 11:28 we have 'the sprinkling of blood.' In the 12th chapter, 24th verse, we have 'the blood of sprinkling.'

"In 1 Pet. 1:2 we have 'sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ.'

"We have now examined every case of the sprinkling of water in the Old Testament. Invariably it was mixed with something else. We have also examined every case in the New Testament in which the word occurs; and nowhere do we find a solitary reference to the sprinkling of pure, unmixed water. We therefore assert: There is no authority for the sprinkling of pure water upon a human being as a religious rite from the beginning of Genesis to the end of Revelation. There is no example of such practice in all the Bible."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

What Is The Price?

BY L. A. CUTLER.

"What is the price of the boy who stands,
Noble and fair, as a god of old,
Reaching to life his innocent hands,
Dreaming the dream that lips never told?
What is his price? kind father, say,
What is his price? fond mother, I pray,
But the rumseller says, 'To make him my prey,
I bid one thousand dollars.'"

"What is the price of the daughter who leans
On the arm which supports her, noble and fair?
A being of beauty, one of earth's queens,
Pure as a lily, glorious and rare?
What is her price? Oh! ask of thine heart,
Parent, who loves her, whoever thou art!
But the rumseller says, 'For her in my mart,
I bid one thousand dollars.'"

Will some praying, pious church official or private member advocate the right and propriety of legalizing the whisky traffic? No, no such man ever will. But will some member of the church undertake the task? If he will, please give him the opportunity. Let us have one good reason for legalizing the liquor saloons, just one. If any man will give one, crown him with the gift of penetration. Will some man come to the front with a substantial reason for issuing liquor licenses? I have read every reason for permitting and protecting by law this iniquitous, body-destroying and soul-damning business, and I have also read a complete refutation of every one of them.

Nine-tenths of the professing Christians who are voters, by casting their ballots for the old rum-soaked and whisky-protecting political parties, sustain the license policy and help to legalize and support the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage! Are men slaves to party? Does a Christian man belong to a political party? Does his political party own him? I heard a Christian gentleman say in a political speech: "I once belonged to a political party, yes, belonged to it. The party owned me. I would do anything my party wanted me to do. I said that if the party nominated the devil I would vote for him; and, my friends, I think I did vote for him sometimes by voting for his agents. I do not belong to the Prohibition party, but I vote with it because it represents my principles, and when it ceases to represent them, count me out." We cheered him heartily for this noble sentiment.

A little circular pasteboard check is distributed to strangers in Nagasaki, Japan, by a Christian Endeavor Society in that city. The check on the front reads as follows: "If you want a good meal and clean bed, go to Christian Endeavor Seamen's House, Oura 26, Nagasaki, Japan." On the back is the following table:

makes four gallons of whisky worth	$16.00.
The government gets	$4.80
The railroad gets	1.00
The manufacturer gets	3.50
The saloon gets	6.00
The farmer (for corn) gets	.30
The laborer (for work) gets	.40

The DRINKER GETS HELL.

The NATION, HARD TIMES.

The prohibitionist is the only man who has a right to complain of high taxes and hard times.

An OHIOAN'S REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT

Invents a Device That Brings Happiness and Health to Every User and Cures Without Drugs the Most Obstinate Diseases by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the Blood.

"JUST WHAT ALL OUR READERS NEED."

A genius of Cincinnati has placed on the market a new Bath Cabinet, whereby any one resting on a chair within enjoys the famous Turkish, hot or medicated baths at home for 3 cents each, heretofore enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, curative, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long-sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

The makers inform the writer that more than 116,337 of the Cabinets have been sold since August, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satisfaction, and a most marvelous Health Producer and Preserver.

Dr. M. R. Beech, Chicago; E. M. D. Moore, of Brooklyn, and hundreds of our best doctors have given up their practice to sell these Cabinets because they say it benefits humanity more than drugs, and is all that is necessary to get well and keep well.

Congressman John J. Lentz, Rt. Rev. Bishop J. L. Spaulding, Rev. C. M. Keith, editor Holiness Advocate; Prof. Kline, Ottawa University; Edw. Rischert, M. D., University of Pennsylvania; Senator McCarrell, Mrs. Kendricks, Principal Vassar College; Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. John A. Ferry, Brooklyn, and a host of our most eminent people use and recommend it.

Persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and had been given up to die, were restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

J. A. Gehring, 342 Naghten Street, Columbus, O., afflicted for years with Rheumatism in its worst form, also Pleurisy, Headaches, Dizziness, Stomach Troubles, was cured with three treatments, and says: "My wife finds it a grand remedy for her ills; also, for our children. A neighbor cured Scrofula and Bad Blood, after drugs failed." W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., found it better than $50 worth of drugs. A lady in Rochester, Mrs. F. B. Williams, was cured of woman's ailments after suffering for years, and writes: "It's a God-sent blessing to me worth $1 000. No woman should be without it." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., unable to walk, was cured of Rheumatism, Piles and Kidney Troubles. A prominent citizen of Mt. Healthy, O., Mr. Owen C. Smith, afflicted since childhood, was cured of Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, and writes: "Have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted." Rev. H. C. Roeruaes, Everett, Kan., says: "It is a blessing; made me full of life and vigor. Should be in use in every family." Rev. Baker Smith, D. D., of Fair mont, says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pains, and, as cleanliness is next to Godliness, it merits high recommendation."

After examination, we can say this 1902 style Square Quaker Bath is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of best materials, rubber lined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a lifetime. It folds flat in 1 inch space when not in use; can be easily carried; weighs but 10 lbs.

It Is Important to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure Nervousness, Weakness, that Tired Feeling and the worst forms of Rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Headache, Piles, Dropsy, Eczema, Malaria, all Blood and Skin Diseases, Stomach, Liver, Kidney, Bladder, Nervous Troubles and all ailments peculiar to women. It cures the worst Cold in one night and breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Pneumonia, Fevers, Bronchitis, and is really a house-hold neccssity—a God send to every family.

To please the ladies a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes Pimples, Blackheads, Eruptions, and is a sure cure for Skin Diseases, Catarrh and Asthma.

All Our Readers

should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinet complete, with Heater, formulas and directions, only $5. Head Steamer, $1 extra; and it is, indeed, difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 1571 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable. Capital, $100,000.00. The Cabinet is just as represented, and does all they claim, and will be sent promptly on receipt of remittance by express or P. O. money order, draft or check.

Don't fail to send for booklet anyway.

The Advance Society.

Hurrah for the Advance Society! There are now about one thousand members! That means, there are nearly a thousand people who have resolved to accomplish 5 pp. of history, 30 lines of poetry, and a quotation each week, and read a Bible verse each day. Of course, some can do more than that. Gerald Dever and his mother (Hume, Ill.) say: "We can find it easy to keep the requirements and to do much other reading and study." On the other hand, Bertha Beesley (Mosella, Mo.) says: "I will contiune in the Advance Society, although it keeps me busy during school days." And people are joining right along. Maud Braley, Puxico, Mo.: "I wish to join the Advance Society. I think I will like it. I am 11. My favorite books are Little Women, Tempest and Sunshine and Black Beauty. I have begun the life of Garfield." Here is encouragement from Cora Scribner, Billfry, Minn.: "We have held our meeting (the Billfry branch of the Advance Society) with grand success. We will have five new members soon. Our officers: Hazel Pulver, president; Willie Scribner, vice-president; Cora Scribner, secretary; Frances Scribner, program committee. Some of our members have dropped out." (That is a favorite habit of old members.) "I will send full particulars next time." (I hope you will; the fuller the better; tell us all about it.)

How to get fun out of winter: Julia Cox, Cox, Mo.: "I hardly know, unless it is by skating, or coasting, or sleigh-riding, or making snowmen. I guess you can get fun out of all those ways. Red Box Clew is fine. I had not thought Mr. Clarmont was Mrs. Dew's brother. I thought Mrs. Clarmont would be Mrs. Dew's relation." Iola Cox: "When there is snow on the ground, I ride downhill on a sled or board. I tell you, it's fun." (I should think so!) "Another thing is, I am not sick in the winter as I am in the summer. I am about well now." (Well, that's better fun. If we have a few more snow storms and blizzards, such as we were entertained with in February, I will expect you to be quite restored to health.) Here is a narrow escape, from Maudie Keeley, Beardsley, Minn.: "Last night the dogs began to bark and scared a team of horses that had stopped at the door. The gentleman had just stepped out to help out the lady. The horses got scared at the dogs and started to run. He was holding the lines. The horses ran out to the trees in front of our house, dragging the gentleman almost under the wheels of the buggy; he hit his head against a tree. The lady does not remember how she got out, but thinks she was thrown out when the buggy hit the tree." This is a good true story, and shows how different real life is from most of the stories you read. Who ever heard of a hero in a storybook getting his head hit against a tree in such a situation, or of a heroine who didn't know how she got out of the buggy? If any of you ever knew of a case where a person stopped a runaway buggy by springing out in the road and grasping the animal, or where a girl stopped a train that was about to crash through a weak-kneed bridge by waving a red lantern, I'd like to know it.

Clara Moses writes good news: "Lily Gooch and I joined the church and were baptized, Jan. 19th. We have had our pictures taken. I don't know whether you would like one or not." (Oh, Clara! how can you say so? Do you think it right to tantalize an old friend?) "We have a nice book of poems, 'Beautiful Gems of Thought and Sentiment.' Your little girl, Clara Moses." (If you are my little girl, you will send that picture immediately.) Here is a letter from Anna Irons, which I have enjoyed very much, but to save my life I don't know who it was had the fleas. Perhaps, however, you children know more about such things than I: "I am so sorry I have not kept the rules, but I will start in new again. I started in to-night, read thirty lines of poetry and two pages of history; I will read the rest to-morrow." (That's the way to start in new. Some people always wait till Monday; why not begin right away?) "My address is Monitor, Ore. I will be 10 in April. I have a cat; its name is Captain Miles Standish. A mother cat was here a few days ago, and had a fight with my cat and my cat got his leg skinned awful bad, but I say he had no use to fight. My mamma said the other cat came here, so he had to fight." (I think your mamma quite right. Mother cats had much better be at home tending to their families. The captain could console himself with his three legs that were not skinned, and then he'd have more sound ones than you or I.) "I have a black cat and I call her Mrs. Biddy." (I would have named her Priscilla.) "One day" (now here is where the story grows mysterious) "Biddy Standish caught a rabbit and let it come in the house and had so many fleas on it that mamma caught it and took the fleas off. I think Red Box Clew is nice." Stella Strawn, Moberly, Mo.: "You remember at the first of Red Box Clew, Mrs. Clarmont had Frank eat in the kitchen; Vega said Frank must eat with the family. After Vega got mad with Frank, did Frank continue to eat in the kitchen or did she eat with the Clarmont family? I think it a deeply interesting story; I am saving all the chapters." (After Vega and Frank became friends again, and got to reading the Bible together, Frank ate with the family; but Mrs. Clarmont, who was an uncommonly unpleasant lady, never spoke a word to her. But Vega was kind to her; so was Ronald.)

New Honor List: Bertha Beesley (4th report), Lola Cox (4th report), Julia Cox (5th report), Gerald Dever and his mother (5th report), Stella Strawn (2nd report), Maudie Keeley, Lily Gooch (5th report), Clara Moses (5th report), Delight Shafer, Decatur, Tex., (5th report), Lillie Belle Tinker, Upperlake, Cal. All the letters were written before the story told that Frank was NOT Mrs. Dew's daughter, so I will not repeat the many things that were said about my story, since every guess was wrong. But I thank you all for the interest you take in it, and for your kindness in telling me so. Let's have some stories from you, real experiences, something about school life, parties, books, anything. What have you got to say? Next week, more Clew.

Fried Onions

Indirectly Caused the Death of the World's Greatest General.

It is a matter of history that Napoleon was a gourmand, an inordinate lover of the good things of the table, and history further records that his favorite dish was fried onions; his death from cancer of stomach it is claimed also was probably caused from his excessive indulgence of this fondness for the odorous vegetable.

The onion is undoubtedly a wholesome article of food, in fact has many medicinal qualities of value, but it would be difficult to find a more indigestible article than fried onions, and to many people they are simply poison, but the onion does not stand alone in this respect. Any article of food that is uot thoroughly digested becomes a source of disease and discomfort whether it be fried onions or beefsteak.

The reason why any wholesome food is not promptly digested is because the stomach lacks some important element of digestion. Some stomachs lack peptone, others are deficient in gastric juice, still others lack Hydro chloric acid.

The one thing necessary to do in any case of poor digestion is to supply those elements of digestion which the stomach lacks, and nothing does this so thoroughly and safely as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dr. Richardson, in writing a thesis on treatment of dyspepsia and indigestion, closes his remarks by saying: "For those suffering from acid dyspepsia, shown by sour, watery risings, or for flatulent dyspepsia, shown by gas on stomach, causing heart trouble and difficult breathing, as well as for all other forms of treatment, is to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. I advise them because they contain no harmful drugs, but are composed of valuable digestives, which act promptly upon the food eaten. I never knew a case of indigestion or even chronic dyspepsia which Stuart's Tablets would not reach."

Cheap cathartic medicines claiming to cure dyspepsia and indigestion can have no effect whatever in actively digesting the food, and to call any cathartic medicine a cure for indigestion is a misnomer.

Every druggist in the United States and Canada sells Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and they are not only the safest and most successful but the most scientific of any treatment for indigestion and stomach troubles.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

JESUS AT MATTHEW'S HOUSE.

The present lesson follows closely the one of last Lord's day. At the close of the scene in Peter's house, when the Savior healed the paralytic, after having forgiven his sins, he took his way down to the shore of the Sea of Galilee, followed by a crowd, such as now dogged his steps daily. On the street that led to the lakeside was the office of one of the collectors of Roman taxes, known as publicans. These men were the objects of bitterest hate on the part of the Jewish people. They were classed with harlots and other vile characters in the popular mind. In many cases they doubtless deserved their odious reputation, for the system of Roman taxation was such as to encourage the spirit of fraud and extortion. The taxes of a given district were "farmed out," or sold to the highest bidder, who was allowed to make out of it what he could, the ignorant and helpless people having scant recourse against his arrogant and iniquitous demands. The payment of Roman taxes was in itself humiliating to a people who reckoned themselves the chosen of God. How much more degrading would they consider the despicable work of wringing these slavish tributes from one's own nation to enrich the treasury of an alien power. There were doubtless some good men among these publicans, who would exercise their authority with as gentle a hand as possible. We are told that the towns of Lesser Asia raised inscriptions to the father of Vespasian as "the good publican." But as a class they were such as could not hope to be held in favor by the victims of their exactions.

Yet, from this hated class Jesus chose one of his apostles, Matthew, as he calls himself, Levi, as he is called by Mark and Luke. Perhaps no other act of Jesus gave greater offense to the Pharisees and scribes. But the Master did not act without the best of reasons. He knew that if he would give to the world a gospel which should save the sinful, he must prove its power in the very persons of those who preached it. He felt that much of the sin in the world came from lack of opportunity, or the influence of evil surroundings; that beneath the surface of many a life of sin there was the capacity and desire for holiness. He knew that "if he drew the magnet across the top of the rubbish it would attract to itself many a piece of precious metal." The name Levi would imply that this publican was of the Levitical tribe, that one which had been set apart for the service of the sanctuary. What a fall had come to him, from serving in the holy place to collecting tribute of his own people for the uncircumcised and cruel rulers! "But he who came to seek and save the lost—he could evoke Christian holiness out of the midst of heathen corruption—could make even out of a Jewish publican the apostle and the first evangelist of a new and living faith."

Levi, or Matthew, as he is more commonly called, must have felt deeply the honor accorded him, being chosen one of the Lord's disciples. He could not be ignorant of the public estimate of his office, and well knew that Jesus was prejudicing his cause by accepting him as one of its advocates. Conscious of his own integrity, however, and believing with all his heart in the divine mission of the Master, he had, at his bidding, given up the lucrative position that was his to follow the steps of the Teacher whose only reward for his disciples was that of a pure heart and a good conscience. Matthew himself simply tells us that when Jesus said to him, "Follow me," he "arose and followed him." Luke adds the striking fact, "He forsook all, and arose and followed him." In honor of the great Teacher, whose disciple he had now become, Matthew made a dinner and naturally invited to it not only Jesus and his disciples, but many of the class to which he had himself belonged. "Many publicans and sinners sat down with Jesus and his disciples; for there were many, and they followed him." The scene did not escape the eyes of his enemies. So soon as opportunity offered, they taunted the disciples with the kind of company their Master was keeping. Possibly some of the disciples felt that Jesus had made a mistake in mixing so freely with the rabble, whom the "better classes" held in detestation. But Jesus corrected any fears they may have felt by reminding them and the Pharisees of the remedial nature of his mission. The physician must visit the sick if he is to do his work of healing. The well do not need him. If the Pharisees were righteous, as they considered themselves to be, they needed no savior. The sinners must be the objects of divine mercy. And these Jesus came to call. But not as his enemies charged, because he approved their sins, or would make light of their evil deeds. He called them unto repentance. He sought them that he might save them. He was willing that his purity should come into contact with their foulness only that they might be cleansed. No sinner ever went out from the presence of Jesus feeling a complacent self-satisfaction because he had been permitted to associate with so holy a man. An hour with Jesus made one ashamed of his selfish and sensual life, and awoke within him new purposes of holiness.

While Jesus and his disciples were thus enjoying the feast prepared for them by the grateful publican, the Pharisees and the disciples of John the Baptist were observing one of the many severe fasts which had been for many generations a burden upon the pious Jew. The law of Moses required but one fast in the year, on the day of atonement, but the Pharisees of Jesus' time had made this an important part of the religious life. Besides numerous annual fast days, it was their habit to fast two days in every week. It offended them that the Nazarene should on one of these days be eating and drinking as usual, and especially in such base company. John's disciples joined in this criticism, and Jesus for their sakes treated the criticism more gently than he would otherwise have done. He told them that the meaning of fasting was obscured by making it formal. It was for times of sorrow and not of joy. In the presence of the bridegroom his companions could not consistently fast. When he should be rudely taken away from them, then their broken hearts would refuse food. In accordance with this principle Jesus instituted no formal fast in his church. The observance of Lent is a mockery when it means nothing more than a church custom. Food is made for the body, and under ordinary circumstances we serve God rather by its use than by abstinence. In times of overwhelming grief we naturally turn from the gratification of our bodily appetites. And in seasons of deep anxiety or absorbing devotion we may feel it to be spiritually helpful to deny for a time the bodily wants. Under such circumstances fasting becomes a means of grace.

By the use of two simple illustrations Jesus indicates to those about him the radical difference between the religion which he has come to establish and that of their fathers. To embody the new and energizing truth of the kingdom of God in the forms of Judaism would be as unwise as to patch an old and rotten garment with new cloth. The result would be the enlarging of the rent and the loss of the good cloth. It would be like putting new wine into old wineskins; the fermenting of the wine would destroy the skin-bottles, and the wine itself would be spilled. Had Jesus consented to restrict the gospel within the limits defined for it by even his own disciples, it would have perished from the earth centuries ago. But he set it forth in new institutions, in spiritual ordinances, which have proved their fitness for every age and people, and have lost none of their beauty or power with the passing of time. The bloody rite of circumcision, the burdensome law of the Sabbath, and the intricate ritual of the levitical service, expressive symbols of baptism and the Lord's Supper, the spontaneous worship of the Lord's day, and the practical, joyous service of daily holy and helpful living. The new garment of righteousness is better than the old and patched robe of legal morality. The new wine of love is better than the old, musty wine of law. He who only tastes of the new may say, the old is better; but he who will drink freely but once of the new will never thirst again for any other.

TOPIC FOR MARBH 18.

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

(John 3:1-15.)

(Meeting led by pastor.)

Sometimes it is necessary for religious teachers to use very strong metaphors to convey strikingly their meaning. Jesus often did this. His figures of speech were extremely vivid. Here is an instance in which he employs one of these beautiful and attractive expressions which enter the soul like a shaft from a crossbow. It brings one instantly face to face with a great idea, "stung by the splendor of a sudden thought." It would have been tame to say, "Ye must reform, must change your lives."

Every one feels the necessity, at one time or another in one's life, for a re-creation of one's self. "Not what I now am, but something greater and better." And, indeed, we feel that the true self is hidden away within us, like the butterfly imprisoned in the worm, like the angel in the marble, and that it ought to be brought forth and set free. This is altogether in keeping with Jesus' ideas, for he speaks of the prodigal who "came to himself." It was only at his best that he was his true self. It was only when he felt that he must rise and go to his father that he really began to be.

Paul has the same idea when he declares that we must die to our old selves, nay that our old selves must die and be buried in the watery grave as Christ was buried in the hewn sepulchre, and that the true self of us must rise and walk with men.

Endeavorers, do we not all of us feel that there is something diviner in us than has ever yet blossomed into full being? We may have been born again when we first consciously gave ourselves in obedience to Christ; but is it not possible for us to grow, get more and more into that likeness of Christ which is our truer selves?

This is a great mystery—this birth and growth of the soul. Literalists will ever say as Nicodemus, "How can this be?" But nevertheless, true religion has ever been concerned with mystery. That very element of the mysterious which concerns the spirit that breatheth where it listeth, and of which no man can say lo here, or lo there, is one of the attractive things about religion to the souls of men.

Nevertheless, unless this mysterious new birth crystallize into very concrete acts of obedience to Christ, all exhortations to it are vain. Character, after all, is the test of the newly born members of the Christian family. By their fruits shall ye know them. If we have escaped from the shell our lives must be as beautiful as the butterfly, and not as sordid as the worm. If we have sloughed off the imprisoning marble, we must show characters angelic in symmetry, else we are no better than the marble block. No emphasis of the mysterious in religion will ever compensate for actions that are not good and true. No emotionalism can take the place of true worth.

This topic, naturally, has most application to those who are not yet in the church. It should, therefore, be the effort of every Endeavorer to see to it that some friend who has not yet been brought to Christ be present at this meeting, and that the pastor be ready with a warm exhortation at the close, and that the meeting pass easily over into the regular evening evangelistic service. Endeavorers who will speak to their pastors and plan earnestly that this meeting may be fruitful in bringing some persons to Christ will not only warm the pastor's heart, but may turn some to righteousness.

"Housework is hard work without Gold Dust"

WASHING CROCKS AND MILK VESSELS

A great deal depends upon the care of crocks or pans in which milk is kept. They should be washed as soon as possible after being used. Rinse first with cold water, then wash thoroughly inside and out with hot water, in which enough of

has been dissolved to make a good suds. Finish by rinsing with scalding water; wipe dry and set out, with right side up, in the fresh air and sunshine, and they will be clean and sweet.

THE HAYSTACK MONUMENT; OR, "WE CAN DO IT IF WE WILL."

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

One of the most unique and interesting of all missionary memorials is the Haystack Monument. Judging by the photograph of it that appears in the Missionary Review of the World, it consists of a heavy column of marble, surmounted by a capital, the latter supporting a globe. This globe represents the world. There is sculptured upon the face of it a haystack, and it bears the following legend: "The Field is the World." "Birthplace of American Foreign Missions. 1806." Near the base it bears the names of five young men who, in 1806, were students of Williams College; they are as follows: Samuel J. Mills, James Richards, Francis L. Robbins, Harvey Loomis and Bryan Green. These young men and others were accustomed to meet in a grove for prayer. On the occasion commemorated by the monument these five had met, and were driven by a thunderstorm to the refuge of a haystack. It was at this haystack meetlng that Samuel J. Mills proposed to send the gospel to the heathen, saying: "We can do it if we will."

The moral heroism of these young men is admirably set forth by Dudley Field, LL. D., in a jubilee speech in Williams College in 1856. The quotation is reproduced from the last issue of the Missionary Review of the World: "The world was filled with war and carnage. Europe was covered with armed battalions from Gibraltar to Archangel. In that year the battle of Jena had prostrated Prussia at the feet of the French Emperor, whose beams thence culminated from the equator, portending an universal military and irreligious domination. Our own country was about to be swept into the vortex of war."

But these young men went forth to greater conquests than any of the rulers of their times attained. Mills went down in the Atlantic, Richards died in India, but the cause they championed marches to ever-fresh conquests in the remotest quarters of the globe. Were these triumphs among those which Richards, dying at thirty-six, saw when the last words fell from his lips: "O, what glories I see!"

"We can do it if we will." These were the daring and inspiring words of Samuel J. Mills. And though, as indicated above, he never became a foreign missionary, he did what was equally important and quite as difficult; he did much in the way of organization and inspiration. He died at the early age of thirty-five, on his return voyage from the West African Coast, whither he had gone to select a site for a colony of American colored people. He traveled and lectured extensively in the interests of missions, and was active in the organization of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Bible Society, the United Foreign Missionary Society and other agencies for the world-wide work.

Could those young men have foreseen what we are now privileged to see they would have deserved less credit for walking by faith and more for walking by sight. The heroism of their faith has been justified by the achievements of the century. No one can look soberly upon what has been done and call it failure. Though the work of the century is feeble, viewed from the standpoint of a consummation, it is, nevertheless, wonderful viewed from the standpoint of an inception.

We, therefore, have the double incentive to work, namely, our faith in the gospel and our vision of the work already done. Through faith, looking forward, these young men said: "We can if we will." Through faith and history we are privileged to look forward and say: "We can and we will." Our Foreign Society is doing a gracious and growing work. It calls for $200,000 for its work the coming year. We can give it and more if we will. It is calling for men. There are sons who can go if they will.

$100.00 a Month and Expenses for 1900.

Trustworthy men and women who are honest and industrious should write and engage with The World Mfg. Co., World B'ld'g, a reliable firm and one of the largest concerns in Cincinnati, Ohio, who offer splendid inducements to sell their Quaker Bath Cabinet and appoint good agents in unoccupied territory. Experience not necessary, for the firm furnish everything and teach you the business.

This is a splendid chance to make money and the books of this Company prove that they paid their agents for last month's work $46,834.00.

The demand for this remarkable Cabinet is something enormous, as there are millions of families all over this country who have no bathing facilities. Those who have bath tubs have discarded them since the invention of this Cabinet, for it is so much superior in every way, as it opens the millions of pores all over your body, steams out the poisons that cause disease, and gives the most cleansing, refreshing, invigorating Turkish, hot air and vapor baths at home for three cents each. It is the best blood cleanser and system purifier known, far superior to poisonous drugs, sarsaparillas, tonics, etc. It is a regular hot springs at your home, and not only cures the most obstinate disease but also kills the germs, eradicates them from the system and prevents disease. A good position is offered those who mention this paper and write them at once, giving age, references and experience.

Literature.

A pamphlet, by Rev. Andrew Murray, "In Defense of the Boers," deserves attention if only for the author's sake. Dr. Murray is known the world over as a man of spiritual vision and a helpful writer on devotional themes. He is a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, which is the established church of the Boers, is Dutch by lineage and is a resident of long standing in South Africa. He knows the situation there almost as well as President Kruger does and takes the same view of it. His statement of the case of Boer vs. Briton is as thoroughly ex parte as one would be by Oom Paul on one side or Cecil Rhodes on the other. It is interesting as the opinion of one whose information, honesty and devotion to duty it would be madness to doubt, but who cannot claim to be a disinterested spectator and who is not conspicuously successful in seeing two sides of a question. (Pub. by W. C. Wilcox, Oberlin, O. 10 cents.)

Another excellent book on Christion Science, which may be used to advantage in connection to the one which was commended in this column a few weeks ago, is entitled, "Christian Science, or the False Christ of 1866: An Examination of the Origin, Animus, Claims, Philosophical Absurdities, Medical Fallacies and Doctrinal Contents of the New Gospel of Mental Healing," by William P. McCorcle. Mr. McCorcle's treatise consists in part of material already published in the Presbyterian Quarterly. He treats the subject comprehensively in three divisions: first, general view; second, Christian Science as a system of mental healing; third, the doctrinal contents of Christian Science. In the last section, in which the author points out the theological foundation and religious consequences of the so-called science, and exhibits its relation to other forms of religious error, ancient and modern, the book goes beyond anything else which we have seen on the subject. (Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. $1,25.)

Speaking of this alleged science and pseudo-religion, there comes to us a pamphlet entitled "Scriptural References Sustaining the Doctrines of Christian Science." The author states it as his purpose to show "that the teachings of Christian Science as expounded by Mary Baker G. Eddy are in strict accord with the spiritual interpretation of the Bible." He shows it, too. That is to say, he shows that the principles of the science as expounded by Mrs. Eddy are in accord with the Bible as interpreted by Mrs. Eddy. The whole secret of the matter lies in the "spiritual interpretation" which, as the mother of the science sets it forth in Key to the Scriptures, is allegorical nonsense. For example: "Observe the two symbolic trees in the midst of the garden. One, the Tree of Life (spiritual reality), and the other, the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil (false material beliefs). From the first tree we may freely eat, but we are forbidden to partake of the fruit of the second. It is very evident that man is here forbidden to partake of that product of thought which says there is both good and evil in God's creation, because it is a lie, a deception." Such allegory is not even ingenious enough to be interesting, to say nothing of being convincing.

The ranks of Methodism are more or less agitated over the charges of heresy which have been made against Prof. H. G. Mitchell, of the Boston University School of Theology, by some of his students. A pamphlet of nearly a hundred pages has been published, entitled, "Shall Methodism remain Wesleyan in Type and Evangelical?" containing the statements made by the students, the replies by the professor, and various threats and warnings to the denomination. The charges include the teaching of destructive biblical criticism, rationalism and Unitarianism. Prof. Mitchell is quoted as boasting of his purpose "to revolutionize the theology of the Methodist Church." Well, it needs it, at some points. Some of Prof. Mitchell's utterances, however, seem to us dangerously loose.

Dr. Lyman Abbott's address last October on "Why I am not a Universalist" has been widely commented upon. It was reviewed and answered by Prof. W. G. Tousey in the Universalist Leader and two or three rejoinders have passed back and forth. Dr. Abbott's original paper and Prof. Tousey's two replies are published in a pamphlet by the Universalist Publishing House, Boston, for general distribution, under the title, "Why Dr. Abbott is not a Universalist and why he might be." It is an important document and well worth reading over carefully.

The student of missions cannot afford to overlook the recently published "Missionary Annals of the Nineteenth Century," by Dr. D. L. Leonard, associate editor of the Missionary Review of the World. The author presents by decades the foreign missionary work of the closing century and is at pains to show how political movements, diplomacy, conquest, imperial expansion, exploration and invention have affected the spread and increase of missions. As a comprehensive history of nineteenth-century missions and a summary of the achievements up to date, it is, so far as we know, unsurpassed in missionary literature. (F. M. Barton, Cleveland, O., publisher. $1.50.)

MAGAZINES FOR MARCH.

The Record of Christian Work contains the first of two papers by D. L. Pierson on "The Growth of Foreign Missions During the Nineteenth Century."

The following are some of the topics which are treated in the current number of the Coming Age: "The Relation of Religious Classes to Social Regeneration;" "Applied Psychology, or Hypno-Suggestive Therapeutics;" "Victor Hugo's Poem on 'God' "; "The Poems of Emerson;" "The Employments of the World to Come;" "Dreams and Visions."

The St. Nicholas, the magazine which is so well adaptad to the use of children that healthy-minded people of all ages can read it with delight has a thrilling story of a personal adventure in the Rockies by Brig.-Gen. Funston, and a copiously illustrated article on automobiles, and an historical story about Cromwell, and another about the boyhood of William the Conquerer, and several other things which are good for children, both old and young.

The South African war, which is making more or less of an impression on all of the magazines, is represented in Scribner's by an illustrated article describing the fighting of Gen. Methuen's division at Belmont, Gras Pan and Modder River. In Roosevelt's Life of Cromwell, the illustrations are turning out to be of an exceptionally meritorious sort. Those in the present installment, by Seymour Lucas and E. C. Peixotto, exhibit some of the best work of these well-known artists.

The article on the growth of our foreign policy, by Richard Olney, former Secretary of State, is the leading feature of the Atlantic Monthly. It is a statesman's view of some of the largest questions of national policy. His standpoint, in brief, is that of a man who believes that the acquisition of distant possessions was a tremendous and unnecessary mistake, but who considers that we are definitely committed to the policy of expansion now and hopefully concedes that some good results may come out of it. Henry Loomis Nelson begins a series on "The Political Horizon."

IF YOU HAVE
and drugs and doctors fail to cure you write to me, and I will send you free a trial package of a simple remedy, which cured me and thousands of others, among them cases of over 50 years' standing. This is no humbug or deception but an honest remedy that you can test without spending a cent. It recently cured a lady who had been an invalid for 52 years. Address
JOHN A. SMITH, 1195 Summerfield Church Building,
MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The cover of the Ladies' Home Journal is gorgeous with red golf coats and jackets, and the interior is equally strong in the matter of pictures. H. C. Cristy, who is not only one of the most promising of the younger illustrators, but is pleasing in his present accomplishments, has a full-page drawing of "the American Girl at Church," the first of a series of eight drawings of the American girl. Our personal opinion is that Mr. Cristy's American girl looks a good deal more like an American and a good deal more like a girl than the glittering figure which has given Mr. Gibson his reputation.

"The Outlook for Africa" might mean the outlook of the European powers for conquest in that continent, or the prospect for the development of its natural resources. But as treated by Bishop Penick in the Missionary Review of the World it means the outlook for the Africans. Really, we had almost forgotten that there are Africans in Africa and that they constitute any important element of the African problem. From the standpoint of Christian missions they are the all-important element. Bishop Penick treats of the possibilities of Christian civilization among the Africans.

Alkahest, which calls itself the literary magazine of the South, is steadily improving. It is not heavy and its table of contents presents no glittering array of famous names, but it contains some genuinely good work over names which are not famous—yet. It would not be surprising if some of them become famous some day. Any editor with money behind him can fill a magazine with articles by well-known writers; but it takes editorial talent to fill fifty pages with good work by comparatively unknown writers. We appreciate the service which this magazine is rendering in helping toward fame some writers who deserve it, rather than seeking to borrow the fame of those who have already won it.

The "Constructive Studies in the Life of Christ," by Ernest D. Burton and Shailer Matthews, which are being published in the Biblical World during the present year, deserve a wide reading. Both of the writers are authors of standard works on New Testament times, and their work in this series of articles is fully up to that of their most carefully prepared books. We suggest that Sunday-school teachers, especially those who are teaching primary and intermediate classes, ought also to be students. They ought not to live entirely on the intellectual plane of their immature students, yet they seldom have opportunity to be members of a Bible class. To follow up this series of studies will come as near to giving the teacher and general Bible student what he needs as anything we know of.

BLACK.

Joseph Franklin Black was born in Murray County, Tenn., Feb. 23, 1823, and departed this life at his home in Virginia, Ill., Feb. 21st, 1900, aged 71 years, 11 months and 28 days. He came to Illinois in 1834, and to this county in 1846. He was a mechanic of high order, as his works abundantly testify. To him belongs the distinction of having invented and patented the first self-binder that was ever made. He took out three different patents on it, and in partnership with his brother got out two patents on a gang-plow. He was perhaps best known, in a mechanical way, as an architect and builder. He was architect in both the M. E. and Church of Christ buildings in Virginia, that stand as monuments to his greatness. The latter, especially, is a marvel of beauty and utility. But Brother Black builded better than that; he builded a Christian character that was noble indeed. He became a Christian when a young man and ever remained true to his profession. He was elder of this congregation at the time of his death. He had been married twice and was especially fortunate in both cases. By his first wife he had three children, three sons and two daughters, all of whom are living and were at the funeral. He was kind, sunshiny, honorable and ever true. The world would be much better off if it had more such men as J. F. Black. The church, the community, all feel that they have sustained a great loss. The writer conducted the funeral services, assisted by Rev. G. L. Snively, of Jacksonville, and Rev. Humphrey, of the Methodist Church, of this city, in the presence of a large audience of relatives and friends, for we believe he had no enemies. He leaves a wife, five children, three brothers and a number of grandchildren, with many ardent friends to mourn his decease. May the good Father of life and light and love comfort the bereaved widow and children in this their great loss. J. H. STARK.

Virginia, Ill., Feb. 24, 1900.

BOWMAN.

Baby Bowman, infant child of Bro. and Sister Gist Bowman, born and died Sunday, Feb. 18th, 1900. Funeral at home and interment in Home Cemetery. Not all the choicest fruit hangs till winter. A. R. HUNT.

ELDER.

Mrs. Mary Ellen Elder was born in Kentucky June 13, 1830, and departed this life Feb. 14, 1900. Her maiden name was Mary Ellen French. She was married to Jackson Barker, Oct. 15, 1846, he departing this life Dec. 5, 1875. To this union four sons were born. She was married to Thomas Elder, Sept. 28, 1881. In 1862 she became a member of the Christian Church and lived a consistent Christian until her death. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bros. J. C. Myers and C. H. Deboe.—H. A. WINGARD.

FURRY.

James H. Furry, son of Michael and Martha Furry, was born near Mt. Auburn, Benton Co., Ia., Oct. 30, 1872, died at the parental home at Mt. Auburn, Ia., Feb. 8, 1900, aged 27 years, three months and eight days. After doctoring over a year, by the advice of his physician he spent more than a year in Colorado. Failing to recover his health there he came home, where he remained until his death. He confessed Christ and was baptized by J. P. Martindale about seven years ago, and has since endeavored to lead a Christian life. He said: "I am not afraid to die." Christ had removed death's sting. May the good Lord comfort the bereaved and bless the example of this young man to the good of the young people in Mt. Auburn.—N. A. MCCONNELL.

JANUARY.

Ruth Ashe January died at Osawatomie, Kansas, after a long illness, December 3, 1899. She was born Oct. 17, 1830, in Gibson County, Ind. She was married to Joseph H. January in Logan County, Ill., Feb. 19, 1860. Early in life she united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, but soon afterwards became a member of the Christian Church, of which she remained a faithful member. For several years she was a helpless invalid and deprived of the privilege of attending church, but she was alive to its interests and died in the triumphs of a living faith, leaving her lifelong companion and three children and a host of friends to mourn her loss. J. A. SMITH.

KELLOGG.

James Henry Kellogg was born in Ohio, Feb. 22nd, 1854, and died at his home near Guilford, Nodaway County, Mo., Feb. 13th, 1900. He came to Missouri when young. Was married to Sarah Leader, Feb. 20th, 1876. Ordie, the only child, and her mother survive him. He became a Christian March 1st, 1899, and died an elder of the Christian Church. He was willing to die. Funeral and interment at Guilford. A. R. HUNT.

LARKIN.

Mrs. John Larkin died at her home in New Haven, Conn., of heart disease, Feb. 12th. She had not been seriously ill, and her sudden death came as a shock to her husband and two children, who survive her. Mrs. Larkin's maiden name was Mary Elizabeth Redd. She was a daughter of Judge John T. Redd, who for many years served as judge in one of the principal circuits of the state of Missouri. She was born in Palmyra, Mo., May 2, 1848. She loved the Savior from a child, and very early in life obeyed the gospel under the ministry of the lamented Jacob Creath, Jr. She was married to John Larkin Jan. 20th, 1867, and of this union three children were born. One boy died in early childhood, the other two, Elizabeth and Ridgeley, are with their father in New Haven. Mrs. Larkin moved with her husband to Danbury, Conn., in the spring of 1880, where for 14 years she was a faithful member of the Christian Church, aiding the church in many ways by her untiring service. From there the family moved to New Haven, Conn., in May, 1894. Judge John Redd raised a family of 10 children. He died Dec. 25, 1884. His devoted wife followed him May 7, 1886. One of their two sons died in 1892, and a daughter in 1896. There are remaining six sisters and one brother, E. B. Redd, pastor of the Christian Church in Platte City, Mo. Mrs. Larkin was a loving sister and a devoted wife and mother. She will be greatly missed in her home by these who feel the loss most keenly, and by her brother and sisters, none of whom could come to the funeral services, excepting Miss Frances P. Redd, who is a teacher in Brooklyn, N. Y. During the first five years of my pastorate in Danbury, there was no more faithful member than Mrs. Larkin. She was a teacher in the Sunday-school, active in the C. E. work, Ladies' Aid and the missionary organizations of the church. Besides this church activity, she was constantly in the homes of friends and strangers, relieving necessities and ministering to the sick and dying. Hers was indeed a life of active service for her Master and for humanity. When she moved to New Haven she endeavored earnestly to gather together the few Disciples of that city and form a church, but failing in this, her time there was not lost to the Master's work, for she engaged actively in the work of the Baptist Church, and was one of the leading spirits in an extended mission work among the Italians of the city. These people looked upon her as a mother. She gathered them into her own home, where she taught them to read the English Bible and assisted in leading many of them to the Savior. On the sad day of her burial, among many floral tributes from hosts of friends, none carried deeper sympathy than a large standing cross, presented by the members of the Italian mission, with whom she had labored so faithfully and for whom she had sacrificed so devotedly. The leader of the Italian mission spoke briefly at the service, conducted by the writer, and the Baptist minister also assisted. While the friends and loved ones are burdened with the feeling of sadness because of their loss, yet they all rejoice in the fact of an immortality which awaits each true and faithful child of the Master. THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

RICKABAUGH.

Ella Almeda Rickabaugh was born April 5, 1864, and died Feb. 19, 1900, aged 35 years, 10 months and four days. She united with the Christian Church at Blackleville, live a devoted Christian life and did a great work in a short time. In a quiet way her monument of good deeds will remain to declare the power of truth in conflict with disease, and her patience will lead many others in the way of truth. She leaves a mother, four brothers, one sister and many admirers to remember her parting words as a basis of her living and abiding hope. "She hath done what she could."—A. M. BIRD.

SECKLES.

Henry Seckles was born in Philadelphia, Penn., June 10th, 1813, and died at his home near Savannah, Mo., Feb. 6th, 1900. From Pennsylvania he went to Ohio and from there to Ray County, Mo., in 1839. Was married to Agnes Wilson March 19th, 1840. He was the father of 13 children, nine of whom and his wife survive him. Was in youth a member of the M. E. Church, and to a friend expressed his willingness to die. Funeral at his home and interment at Baptist Church, five miles west of Savannah, Mo. A. R. HUNT.

TANSILL.

James William Tansill was born in Virginia, Sept. 17th, 1825, and died at his home, Savannah, Mo., Feb. 17th, 1900. He has lived in Andrew County, Mo., since 1870. Was married to Susan M. Bennett Aug. 11th, 1853. Of this union four children were born, two of whom and their mother survive him. He became a Christian in 1858 and died a faithful, consistent and intelligent member and elder of the Christian Church. As man, neighbor, friend, citizen and Christian there is no better. Funeral and interment at Savannah.

New Church Home.

Lord's day, Feb. 25th, was a day of rejoicing and marked an epoch in the history of our cause in Galion, O. By diligent effort and heroic sacrifices the small but faithful band of Disciples were able to dedicate to the Lord a most substantial and beautiful tabernacle, elegantly furnished and free from debt. There yet remains some obligation against the lot, but it is expected that all will be provided for by April 1.

With a few months there has been a marvelous change in conditions here. Our people have moved out of an obscure, dingy hall to one of the best locations in the city, and have come into possession of a $2,500 property.

Last October, state secretary, S. H. Bartlett, visited the field and was at once impressed with its possibilities. He wisely decided on the movement which has resulted in so grand a victory.

Ohio made no mistake in committing into Bro. Bartlett's hands the sacred interests of our state work. The success here is signal and prophesies an enlarged work for Ohio.

Bro Bartlett was present and had charge of affairs on dedication day. His appeal touched all hearts. It was the coldest day of the winter and the audience was not what we had expected, but there was a most generous response. Giving was put on the right basis and all could see the wondrous beauty and blessing of this grace.

A delightful congratulatory service was held in the afternoon, followed by the communion, conducted by C. S. Cliffe, former pastor.

Bro. Cliffe, while shepherd of this flock, did most excellent and substantial work, and this must be counted among the many elements making the success of the day possible.

The writer came in November, by direction of our state board, to assume the management of the work, and it is a source of great joy that our plans are so soon realized, and our first work in the dear old home state successful.

In the evening we preached the initial sermon of our revival, which is now in progress and promises much.

Additional pledges were taken, bringing the entire amount of the day to nearly $500. The building was then turned over to the church by W. E. Haycox, chairman of building committee, and by an impressive service dedicated to the Lord.

With gladness and even a larger spirit of sacrifice the church presses forward to the things before. O. L. Cook, State Evangelist.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

Dear Sisters:—I want you to share with me the hope and encouragement I got from this letter from auxiliary of Wyatt Park Church, St. Joseph. Let many others like it come. It confirms more than ever my conviction that our slow growth is the result of the apathy and lukewarmness of our individual members and not of the so-called local conditions. As souls must be now for Christ, one by one, by individual effort, so must our sisters be won to our beautiful work by patient, prayerful, individual effort. Let us never forget this, my sisters. Lovingly,

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Dear Sister Bantz:—It isn't quite time for our quarterly report, but I must write and tell you of our Wyatt Park Auxiliary. I want you to be very proud of us. This society was organized a year ago in September with 13 members (12 active and one honorary), all new to the work except five. We have gained right along, until in January we numbered 31, active and seven honorary. It was suggested at this meeting that we divide the society into three companies to solicit new members, the one getting the most names to be entertained by the other two. We had two meetings this month, the first day being stormy. It would have encouraged you wonderfully could you have been present. You would have thought Missouri surely would have her 6,000 women when the captains of the different companies had reported. I had the pleasure of announcing 26 new names added, 19 active, seven honorary, making a total of 50 active and 14 honorary; 64 enrolled. The captains announced, amidst our rejoicing, their companies were not through yet. Now, Mrs. Bantz, the membership of our church is only 235. Behold how long a letter I have written you! but this is a great society, and I want you to know we are at work and enthusiastic over our results—64 out of 235, and not through.

Now I don't know that I will write you again soon in this mnaner, but hope to meet you at Kansas City in September. May God bless you in your efforts. In His name,

Mrs. W. A. Primm, Sec.

Christian University News.

The enrollment for the term beginning January 2nd shows quite an increased attendance.

The good work of Chancellor Hardy, the strong faculty and increased enrollment of Christian University—in fact, all things indicate that this is the most prosperous year in the institution.

Some recent visitors to the University were Judge Alexander, of Gallatin, Mo., an alumnus of the institution, who has been honored as Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Missouri Legislature; Mr. Burgman, a student of Drake University; L. S. Cupp, pastor of the Christian Church at Huntsville, Mo., one of C. U. alumni, and P. H. Castle, pastor of the Christian Church at Virdin, Ill., a former student of C. U.

There are forty-eight students of Christian University who are engaged in preaching, ministering to more than 60 congregations within a radius of 200 miles around Canton. The report of their work for the past year shows that they have had more than 700 accessions to the churches, not counting those who came by letter from other congregations of the Disciples. Is there another school that can produce such a record?

The president and regent and their wives gave a reception last Thursday evening to the students and friends of Christian University. The fraternal spirit which the faculty and students always manifest could make it none other than a most pleasant occasion. The building was handsomely decorated and delicious refreshments were served. At a reasonable hour all departed rejoicing that they had the honor of being friends to Christian University. Some of the visitors present were E. L. Coons, of Burlington, Iowa; Baxter Waters, of St. Louis, and Claude Witty, of Martinsburg, Ill., all former students of the school and active ministers of the gospel.

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark.

For tho' from out this bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, $1.50
See last paragraph below for explanation . . . . .

With all our gratifying increase in circulation we have not reached the limit of our capacity in that direction. We are able to issue many thousand more copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, if necessary. Please make it necessary.

Two weeks more to take advantage of our one-dollar-per-year offer in clubs of twenty-five. The opportunity of securing a two-dollar article for one dollar is not a common, every-day occurrence. Don't miss it.

Many clubs are in the process of formation. Please hurry them up, as we want to close this offer promptly at the time mentioned, March 31. Remember that old as well as new subscribers may be included in your club.

Good, substantial additions have been made to our list of readers during the week at a multitude of places. Among the more notable increases we may mention Des Moines, Ia. (Central Church), St. Joseph, Mo., Taylorville, Ill., Joplin, Mo., and Douglas, Neb.

The past week has been one of encouraging increase in the number of subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We shall do our very best to furnish such reading matter that this increase of readers shall result in a much larger increase in the effective working power of the church through a more active and a deeper spiritual life of the membership influence by our pages.

The fact that every one will soon be reading Bro. Sheldon's Christian daily calls our attention to his marvelous book, "In His Steps," which made it possible for the newspaper experiment to be tried. It is truly a grand book; not on account of its literary merit, but because of the simple and straightforward way in which it presents to its readers the author's conception of the Christian's duty. The manner in which the book contends for an earnest endeavor to make the spirit of the Master the rule of life impresses one with the conviction that he has struck the keynote of Christianity, real and genuine. Every one should possess and read "In His Steps." For a short time we will give a copy of this book, cloth bound, to every new subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at our regular subscription of one dollar and fifty cents. Old subscribers may also secure a copy free by paying up their subscription to date and one dollar and fifty cents for one year in advance. If your subscription is paid in advance you may send one dollar and fifty cents for an additional year's credit and a copy of "In His Steps." This offer is subject to withdrawal at any time, so it will pay you to act at once.

CURRENT EVENTS.

There has as yet been no break in the succession of British victories in the Orange Free State. Gen. Roberts had hoped to fight a decisive battle at Poplar Grove, but for some reason the Boers fled panic-stricken without fighting. Presidents Kruger and Steyn were at the front, but were unable to stay the tide of retreat. At Osfontein the British flanking movement was completely successful and another advance was made toward the Free State capital. At Dreifontein the fighting was harder and the losses on both sides were considerable, but the result was the same. Aasvogel Kop was occupied by the British and thence, abandoning the direct road to Bloemfontein and avoiding the strongly intrenched Boer positions, Gen. Roberts moved to Venterslei, which is only twelve miles from Bloemfontein. The advance has been effected on both sides of the Modder River. Generals Joubert and De Wet are attempting to stop Roberts by the same tactics which kept Buller out of Ladysmith so long, but the topography of the district is not suited to those tactics and the numerical preponderance of Roberts' army is too great. The flanking movement which Buller tried three times without success among the kopjes along the Tugela has been accomplished repeatedly in the more open country along the Modder. The present indications all point to the early capture of Bloemfontein.

If the war is fought to a finish, there must be several months more of hard fighting. There is a general feeling that wise diplomacy now can put a speedy end to the conflict and avoid further loss of life. In such a case, rumors always run ahead of official reports, for the work of diplomacy is not carried on through the press. It is known that the presidents of the two South African Republics have been in consultation with a view to opening negotiations for peace. It is credibly reported that, while they have not sued for peace, they have asked the British government to state the terms on which it would be willing to make peace, on the basis of the recognition of the independence of the republics. The answer which has been received to this proposition is not encouraging. It is viewed as a ruse to gain time for the strengthening of defenses. It is reported that the republics have appealed to the powers for intervention. There is more speculation afloat than actual information as to the part which the United States is playing in any peace negotiations which may be proceeding. One report has it that Consul Hay, of Pretoria, and our state department have been the medium through which communications have passed between the Boers and British. The role of mediator would be an honorable one for the United States to play in this matter, and we are perhaps better fitted to play it than any power of Europe.

The storm which was precipitated by the passage of the Porto Rico tariff bill has not yet shown signs of clearing. The administration has undoubtedly lost friends on account of its position on this issue, at a rate which must be appalling to the Republican leaders. The amendment which has been offered by Senator Davis appears to us to be a rational measure, well suited to allay the present fury of the tempest. He proposes to extend free trade to the island, according to the President's original suggestion, and to incorporate in the bill a definite provision extending the Constitution to Porto Rico. This would be a sufficient rebuttal of the charge of "exploiting" the island for our own selfish interests, and it would prevent free trade with Porto Rico from being made a precedent for the treatment of the Philippines. It would allow the constitutional question to go over until some more convenient season, when it can be settled more deliberately and with less party heat. The amendment is exactly in line with the position which the President took in his last message to Congress, in which he recommended the granting of free trade. The recommendation and the provision in the amendment both assume that it is within the power of Congress to do otherwise, i. e., to impose a tariff and to withhold the provisions of the Constitution from Porto Rico. If the Republican leaders are wise they will at all hazards prevent the Porto Rican tariff and the constitutional question involved in it from becoming a leading issue in the presidential campaign.

The Davis amendment to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty has aroused an unexpected amount of opposition in the Senate, but on the whole there is little doubt but that it has increased the popularity of the treaty. It will be remembered that the treaty was modeled after the treaty of Constantinople by which in 1888 the European powers agreed to the neutralization of the Suez Canal. The point at which the Hay-Pauncefote treaty departs from its model is that provision of the latter which permits the Sultan of Turkey and his (nominal) dependent, the Khedive of Egypt, to take such measures as they deem necessary for the protection of their territory along the canal in time of war. The Davis amendment gives to the United States the same undefined right to take measures for self-protection, which the treaty of Constantinople gives to Turkey and Egypt. Those who oppose the amendment, argue that the relation of the United States to the Nicaragua Canal is entirely different from that of Turkey to the Suez, since it does not pass through our territory. Senator Morgan, who is chief sponsor for the canal scheme, is the only member of the committee who opposes the amendment. There is much speculation as to whether or not Great Britain will agree to the treaty as amended, but so far there are no positive data upon which to base an opinion on that point. If Great Britain will accept it, it certainly cannot do us any harm. The worst that its opponents say of it is that it is meaningless and unnecessary and likely to endanger the ratification of the whole treaty.

Senator Frye has answered clearly some questions which were put to him by the editor of the Savannah News in regard to the shipping subsidy bill. The editor asks: (1) Why are contracts for warships given to American ship-builders by foreign nations if a special subsidy is needed to protect our ship-builders on the ground that they cannot build as cheaply as can be done abroad? (2) How is it that it costs more to build ships here than abroad (as claimed by advocates of the subsidy bill), when all the materials are cheaper here? The answers to these questions are as follows: (1) It is one thing to build a warship and another thing to build a merchantman. The prestige gained by the American navy in our late war and the speed with which our shipyards can turn out ships of war in emergencies accounts for the placing of foreign contracts here. It is a fact that no foreign steamship line has ever placed an order with an American ship-builder. Why not? It is not true that the materials for ship-building are normally cheaper here than abroad. More than a year ago the price of ship-building materials in England rose to a high figure on account of a long strike, and at that time we shipped a considerable quantity. We are not doing so now. Moreover, about half of the cost of building a vessel is for labor and the wages paid in American yards is much higher than anywhere abroad. Again, the building of many vessels from a single design, a method much practiced by our foreign competitors, but possible only where a large and continuous business is being done, reduces the cost of construction. American manufacturers are filling enormous foreign orders for bridges, steel rails and locomotives, but have not yet secured the contract for a single foreign merchant ship. The ship-builders want the contracts bad enough. Why do they not get them? Advocates of the subsidy bill claim that with temporary encouragement it would be possible in a few years to compete on even terms with the ship-builders of England and Germany.

The new Philippine Commission has now been completed and will shortly sail for the islands. The personnel of the commission is as follows: Judge William H. Taft, president; Professor Dean Worcester, of the University of Michigan; Luke Wright, of Tennessee; Henry C. Ide, former chief justice of Samoa; and Prof. Bernard C. Moses, of the University of California. These men are in every way fitted to command the confidence of all classes of people in this country and also of those among whom they are to go. It is nothing derogatory to the other members to say that Prof. Worcester is probably the most thorough expert of the number in all matters pertaining to the Philippines. He has visited the archipelago repeatedly and has studied it as a scientist. In 1887 he took part in an independent scientific expedition and again in 1890 he went on a second expedition with a commission from the Spanish Government which gave him all the privileges of travel and research which would be enjoyed by an officer in the Spanish army. He was also a member of the first Philippine Commission, and it is safe to say that there is no man living whose assistance in organizing civil government in the islands would be more valuable than his.

Admiral Sampson has recently refused an offer of the presidency of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The tender of this important and honorable station at the head of a technological institute, which has no superior in this or any other country, is a compliment to Admiral Sampson personally and to the service which he represents. Nevertheless, as we look at it, he did wisely in declining the honor. It would be a poor compliment to the navy if one who has reached a place so near the top of its ladder should be willing to abandon it for an entirely different field. There are, to be sure, some things about the naval service which are not pleasant to contemplate. For instance, it sometimes seems to be necessary to use the guns, and fatalities not infrequently result. Still, the navy can not be condemned as a profession of slaughter. The present condition of civilization seems to demand that navies shall be maintained and occasionally brought into activity, and so long as we have them they will be less objectionable if they are commanded and manned by the highest type of men. That is the reason why the nation cannot afford to lose Admiral Sampson from its service, however gratifying it would be to see him at the head of a great educational institution. The navy itself is an educational institution on a very large scale. The occasion is a suitable reminder of the change which has taken place since navies were commanded by swashbuckler fighters whose individual prowess in hand-to-hand conflicts was their chief qualification. Nowadays the man of war is a trained man of science.

There are always plenty of political uncertainties on the continent of Europe—undecided points about which international complications may arise at any moment. But the pressure of the Powers and the necessity for preserving the balance of power among them makes it comparatively difficult for actual hostilities to grow out of any quarrel which is localized in Europe. The history of international relations in recent years shows that it is much easier for the European powers to come to blows over quarrels which arise in Asia or Africa than over those which have their occasion nearer home. As illustrations of this may be cited the endless complications arising out of conflicting claims in China, the threats of Anglo-Russian hostilities on the border of Afghanistan, the possibility of intervention in England's South African conflict, the constant threat of war in Egypt between Great Britain and France. None of these have come to open hostilities, but they are big with possibilities. Among the extra-European questions which may sometime disturb the peace of Europe is the Morocco question. Morocco is one of the worst governed countries in the world. Its Sultan, who is supposed to be an independent prince, but is in reality more or less informally dependent upon Spain, squeezes the country for as much revenue as possible, and every minor official does that which is wrong, both in his own eyes and in the eyes of any one who may happen to see. To say that such a land is liable to interference from stronger nations whenever they can see that they have anything to gain by interfering, is only to particularize the statement that birds of prey swoop down upon carrion wherever they can find it.

But the real "Morocco question" owes its existence to the fact that this decrepit principality by its strategic situation holds half of the key to the Mediterranean. Great Britain possesses the other half in Gibraltar. If England would make certain her control of this gateway she must possess both wings of the gate; she must have a fortress on the African side of the strait corresponding to Gibraltar on the European side. On the other hand, any power which hopes successfully to dispute Great Britain's control of that door must likewise secure a good footing on the Morocco coast. Spain holds the port of Ceuta, which is the most available port for that purpose. But Spain is not in a position to quarrel with England to advantage. The possession of this port, however, makes her a valuable ally of any power which may anticipate hostilities. This may be one reason—of course, not the only one—why France is so anxious to keep on good terms with Spain. It is noteworthy, too, that Russia has lately established a legation at the court of the sultan of Morocco, although there are no Russian citizens and no Russian interests to protect there. It is shrewdly surmised that France and Russia are trying to get control of Ceuta, or to secure from the Sultan the cession of some other port on the coast which might be an offset to Great Britain's possession of Gibraltar if it should come to war.

Municipal elections will shortly be held in all of the 137 townships into which Cuba is divided. There used to be a good deal of talk about "local autonomy" in Cuba under the Spanish regime, but this is the first taste of the real article which the island has had. By this election the machinery will be completely organized and set in motion for the independent local self-government of the municipalities. The qualifications for the exercise of the franchise are three, any one of which is sufficient to establish the right to vote. The voter must either be on the rolls of the Cuban army, on which about 50,000 names are enrolled, or he must be able to read and write, or he must own $250 worth of property. It is estimated that by one means or another about 100,000 voters will qualify. There are about 1,500,000 inhabitants in the island, of whom probably 300,000 are men of legal voting age.

The public, even to the remotest corners of this and several other continents, has by this time been pretty well apprised of the fact that a play which has been upon the boards in New York has been adjudged indecent by the police court and has been suppressed. The name of the play and the name of the leading lady stand in need of no further advertising. The suggestion comes from several sources that a municipal office of Dramatic Censor ought to be established. The suggestion has been made earnestly, ironically, flippantly and despairingly, but there is no need for either irony, flippancy or despair in the case. There is a dramatic censor. There is a law which prohibits the exhibition of anything offensive to common decency and public morals, and the judge who tries cases under this law is of necessity a censor in the strictest sense. It is not after all a question as to whether a censorship shall exist, but how and by whom it shall be exercised. There are two objections to the present plan of allowing the judges to exercise the censorship in the police courts. The first is that it is more effective for advertising than for suppressing indecency; and the process is so slow that there is time for the advertisement to be amply profitable before the suppression is accomplished. The second is that the majority of the cases which require consideration are never brought before the censor. A New York illustrated weekly, which has a regular dramatic department and is not conspicuously Puritanical in its tastes, recently classified the plays which were at that time on the boards in that city under two heads, "nasty" and "not nasty." There were four in the former class and seven in the latter. The censor, operating through the clumsy machinery of a police court, has condemned one of the former. With what result? The other three still flourish with increased patronage. What New York, in common with several other cities, needs is another censor, who will do more work and do it quickly and quietly.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

VIII. COMPLETENESS IN CHRIST.

It is one thing to confess Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God, and accept Him as such, but it is quite another to understand all that is involved in this confession. Many make this confession in good faith who fail to see that in Christ all our spiritual needs are met and that in Him the Christian is complete. There is truth in the phrase, "the larger Christ," which Professor Herron has made the title of one of his books. We have a larger Christ now than the church of the middle ages or a century ago recognized. He has grown upon the thought of the world as the centuries have gone by, and He grows in the knowledge and experience of each individual Christian who "follows on to know the Lord."

In a previous article we called attention to the gift of the Holy Spirit as an essential condition of our Christian growth and usefulness. It is pertinent to add here that it is the special mission of the Holy Spirit in the church and in the individual Christian to glorify Christ, for He was not to speak of Himself when He came, but of Christ. He came to lead us into an ever-widening and ever-deepening knowledge of Christ. One of the Apostle Peter's exhortations to the Christians of his day was to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." These are so related that we cannot grow in one without growing in the other. The measure of our knowledge of Christ is the measure of our Christian life and power. "And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." Indeed, the only way to know God in his highest attributes is through Christ, whom He hath sent. What a field for infinite progress in knowledge and in virtue is here laid out before the Christian!

In his letter to the Colossians, who seem to have been drawn away from the simplicity which is in Christ to false philosophies, Paul said of Christ: "For in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodidly, and in Him ye are made full, who is the Head of all principalities and powers." That is to say, the fullness of God dwells in Christ, and each Christian is permitted to share in that fullness. It is not necessary to go away from Christ to find anything that is needed for the completion of our Christian faith and life. In Him we are complete.

We are complete as respects our justification. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." We need no penance, no self-inflicted punishment of any kind, no work of supererogation to complete our justification. Nor is it necessary to go through life oppressed with a feeling of uncertainty about our future security. We should rather rejoice continually that in Christ Jesus we are secure from the power of sin and death, and that He is able to "save to the uttermost all that come to God through Him."

We are complete in Christ as regards our Christian foundation. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." This is equally true of the individual and of the church as a divine organism. It has been hard for the church to learn this lesson. It has laid other foundations for itself and built up denominational organizations upon them. If it had only realized its fullness or completeness in Christ, it would have felt no need of any further foundation. All necessary truth is involved in faith in Him. Thousands of nominal Christians have practically turned away from Christ to build on the sands of some modern or ancient philosophy in some one of its numerous manifestations. Think of the infinite folly of turning away from Him who embodies the fullness of the Godhead to build our hopes on such delusions as "Christian Science," "Spiritualism," "Theosophy" or some other ancient superstition which has been revived in modern times and given a new name and garb!

In Christ we are complete in authority. He is "Head over all things to the church." Unto Him was given "all authority in heaven and on earth." He is "the seat of authority in religion," and all that the Bible or the Church or Reason can do is to convey to us—to our moral consciousness—the authority of the truth He expressed in His personality, His teaching, His deeds, His life. It is the glory of the Bible that it contains the record of Christ's life and teaching; it is the glory of the church that it has translated, preserved and handed down to us the Bible, embodying the revelation of Christ; and in some small degree has incarnated His teaching; it is the glory of reason that it bows before Him who is the light of the world and who lighteth every man that cometh into the world, recognizing in Him the supreme Reason and the supreme Truth. Even Christ's authority is not the authority of greater power to compel the acceptance of what He taught, but the authority of superior love, of superior knowledge of God and of truth, of superior character—the moral authority which ever attaches to supreme wisdom and supreme goodness. We do not need, therefore, to supplement Christ's authority by any authoritative creeds, by any ecclesiasticisms inflicting pains and penalties in His name, or by any court or council that claims the right to bind men where Christ has left them free.

In Christ we are complete also in liberty. "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free." "If ye abide in my Word, then are ye truly my disciples; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." And yet, in spite of these declarations, there are dissatisfied souls who forsake Christ in search of larger liberty, and who soon find themselves the slaves of sin and superstition. These do not understand that liberty itself is bounded by law, and that there is such a thing as "the perfect law of liberty." The man who feels his liberty restrained in Christ does not draw the line between liberty and license, and has moral aims and desires at war with righteousness and with his own highest interests. The true believer finds in Christ all the liberty he needs—the liberty to love and labor and sacrifice and to think God's thoughts after Him and to advance in the knowledge of Christ and of all truth to the full extent of his powers. In other words, there is in Christ the liberty to realize the purpose for which Christ called us, viz., to be conformed to His own image and to co operate with Him in the salvation of others. There is no liberty in Christ to violate the law of love, to be selfish and seek our own good at the expense of our neighbor's, to oppress or injure our fellowmen, or to live an unclean and impure life. Nor is there liberty anywhere else for such practi es. They are in violation of the laws of our own being as well as of the will of Christ. In Him there is fullness of liberty for the highest possible development of all the powers and capacities that God has given us.

It has been our purpose in this series of articles to touch only a few of the most fundamental truths, and to suggest many themes we have not treated, and many thoughts we have not expressed. The series might be carried on further, but in the fullness of Christ and our completeness in Him, we seem to have reached the ocean into which all streams flow, and from whose infinite resources all living streams are supplied. Within the range of these cardinal themes which we have only outlined, lie those vital and vitalizing truths which are for the healing of the nations. They all center in Him who is the light and life of men.

In closing these articles we cannot do better than to offer for our readers the prayer which Paul offered for the Colossians: "That ye may be filled with a knowledge of of His will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding, to walk worthily of the Lord unto all pleasing, bearing fruit in every good work and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all power according to the might of His glory, unto all patience and long-suffering with joy; giving thanks unto the Father, who made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; who delivered us out of the power of darkness and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of His love; in whom we have our redemption, the forgiveness of our sins; who is the image of the invisible God; the first born of all creation; for in Him were all things created, in the heavens and in the earth, things visible and things invisible, whether thrones or dominions or principalities or powers; all things have been created through Him and unto Him; and He is before all things, and in Him all things consist. And He is the Head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first-born of the dead; that in all things He might have the pre-eminence."

Hour of Prayer.

BRIDLING THE TONGUE.

(Jas. 1:26, 27; Jas. 3:2-12.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 21)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The religion of Christ is intended to control every member of the body and hold it to its legitimate use, and that man's religion is vain who is not able thereby to bridle his tongue and to keep his whole body in subjection.

James is perhaps the most practical of all the New Testament writers. His epistle, too, is more ethical than doctrinal. He is concerned with human conduct and human relationships. His ability to recognize what are the chief causes of human offense is evinced by the emphasis which he laid upon the right use of the tongue. He counts that man's religion as vain and himself deceived if, professing to be religious, he does not bridle his tongue, i. e., use it for praiseworthy and legitimate purposes only.

This statement is founded upon a true conception of the religion of Christ. Outward acts are the result of causes and conditions that lie within. A purified heart is bound to result in a purified tongue. Therefore, when the speech is impure or vindictive and full of the spirit of malice, it reveals a bad condition of the heart. But if the man's heart is not right, then his religion is not right, for what is religion for, if it does not purify the heart, out of which come the issues of life? This is the connection which James recognizes between an unbridled tongue and a vain religion.

There are people who make copious professions of Christianity on Sunday, or during revival services, who have no conscientious scruples about slandering their neighbors or circulating the most damaging rumors against the reputation of other members of the church. It would not take James long to classify these persons. In his blunt way he says their religion is vain, i. e., there is nothing in it; it is pretense. This is true of the man whose tongue utters falsehood or impure language of any kind. The tongue, therefore, is a great telltale of character.

James' observation, however, taught him that the control of the tongue was one of the most difficult achievements possible. He goes so far as to say that if a man does not offend with his tongue he is a perfect man. In his view a man who could control that "unruly member" would not be found wanting in respect to any other member of the body. He likens the tongue to the rudder of a ship which, being relatively small, is able, nevertheless, to change the course of a large vessel. So the tongue, though a small member, boasteth great things and accomplishes great things, both for good and for evil.

He likens the tongue also to a fire which, beginning in a small way, devours houses and whole cities. The tongue, he says, is set on fire of hell, i. e., gets its inspiration for evil speaking from beneath, from Satanic influence, and its words create a devastation which, spreading like fire, involves families, communities and whole sections of the country.

While nearly all species of wild animals have been tamed by men, the tongue, he declares, can no man tame: "it is a restless evil; it is full of deadly poison." This would seem to be a discouraging outlook, but James evidently means that it takes a stronger human power to manage the tongue, and that it must be done through the purification of the heart.

Some of the inconsistencies of the tongue are pointed out. "Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the likeness of God." We fear this is not uncommon. There are those who seem to recognize no connection between loving God and loving our fellowmen, and who imagine they can love one and hate the other. The apostle John declares this to be untrue. How can we bless God acceptably while we curse our fellowmen? It is impossible. "Doth the fountain send forth from the same opening sweet water and bitter? Can a fig tree yield olives, or a vine figs?" Equally impossible, then, is it for a renewed heart to send forth both blessing and cursing.

Few people, perhaps, estimate properly the importance of words. They may convey comfort and encouragement to a disconsolate and discouraged heart, they may administer strength to one that is tried and tempted, they may send a thrill of happiness to one who has been walking in a deep shadow, or they may convey evil suspicions, discouragement, impure thoughts or bitterness that will rankle in ths heart of another during life. What an instrument of blessing our tongues may be, if they are under the control of a heart full of love and sympathy to our fellowmen! What an instrument of evil it may become when it is under the control of envy, hatred or malice!

If we would not advertise to the world that our religion is vain, let us see to it that our tongues are employed in making others happier and better, rather than in kindling a conflagration of hatred and strife that may devastate many a heart and home. Many a man can trace the beginning of an upward career to a word fitly spoken—a word of encouragement, of hopefulness, of sympathy. Others can trace their ruin to the blighting effect of a poison word that had in it the seeds of death. In what way will you use your tongue?

If a smile you can renew
As your journey you pursue!
O the good we all may do,
As the days are going by!

PRAYER.

O Thou who art the Searcher of all hearts, we pray Thee to search us with Thy truth and see if there be any evil way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting! So purify our hearts and fill them with love for Thee and for one another that speaking out of the abundance of the heart our tongues will utter no word that will be displeasing to Thee or harmful to our fellowmen. Help us to consecrate every member of our bodies to Thy service and to be especially on our guard that we may sin not with our tongue. May our speech be seasoned with grace, that it may tend to edification and minister to the instruction and comfort of others. In Christ's name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Nothing tends to make one pity his grandfathers more than a trip through some of our great commonwealths in a Pullman Palace car. These lines are penciled on the Iowa Central as the train is carrying us through a panorama of Iowa farms and towns. The ground is about half covered with snow, the country is gently undulating, and with the exception of little patches of timber here and there, seems to be all in cultivation. The houses and barns, farms and stock, indicate not great wealth, but prosperity. It is a land of plenty. An Iowan said to us: "There are perhaps fewer discontented people in Iowa than in any state of the Union. There are not many very rich people, but most of the farmers have a little bank account, and there is nothing more satisfying than a little balance on hand for emergencies." Quite so. Such people have a stake in the country, and stand for order and stability in government.

The Southeast District of the Iowa Christian Missionary Co-operation held its convention at Albia last week. The editor of this paper had the pleasure of being present a part of the time and of addressing the convention Tuesday evening, Wednesday forenoon and briefly on Wednesday evening before the regular address of the evening. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions of the district met with the brethren and shared the time with them. The district embraces one hundred and twenty-five churches, all of them being housed except six. The state is divided into five districts, one in each of the four corners of the state and one central. The plan is to have an evangelist in each district and the districts have their conventions in succession, so that the corresponding secretary of the state can attend all of them. Bro. Denny, the present corresponding secretary, was present, representing the state work, and Sister Newcomer, state president of the C. W. B. M., representing the work of that organization. Both of these state officers made addresses, besides others of the district. It was a goodly fellowship of brethren and sisters, working harmoniously for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

Albia is a pleasant town of 3,500 population, the county seat of Monroe County. The church is in good condition under the pastoral care of R. H. Ingram. It has just purchased a new lot beside the old one, and is going to put up a handsome new building soon. With a pastor like Bro. Ingram and a new church building in prospect on one of the most eligible sites in the town, the church at Albia has a bright outlook. Our home in Albia was with Bro. and Sister John H. Drake. Bro. Drake is an older brother of General Drake, of Centerville, so widely known in connection with our educational and missionary interests. It was a most hospitable home, and one which affords all the comforts necessary to good living. The Drakes are descendants of Sir Francis Drake, the bold navigator and buccaneer. The hand of ex-Governor Drake is seen in all the work of the state. His recent gifts to Drake University have been mentioned in this paper.

We were pleased to meet many old friends at the Albia Convention as well as to greet several new ones. A. Jay Garrison, of Iowa City, with whom we claim kin without any evidence of blood-relationship, is one of Iowa's substantial workers. G. L. Brokaw, editor of the Christian Index, at Des Moines, whom we knew at college, and of whom we never heard anything bad, even there, is at home in a missionary convention, having served as corresponding secretary in Iowa for some time. There was N. G. Brown, of Ottumwa, who presided with dignity. M. L. Moffett who preaches at Centerville, J. P. McNight, who has just gone from Peoria, Ill., to Oskaloosa, Leander Lane, of Fairfield, A. F. Sanderson, of Keokuk and a host of others, mostly young men, and noble women not a few, who seem bent on bringing Iowa into the kingdom. They are a wide-awake and up-to-date set of workers in Iowa. They asked questions pointed and pertinent, on our lecture, but explanations generally indicated unity of sentiment. In the recent handsome growth to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST subscription list Iowa has led all the states and is still leading them, in proportion to her membership.

It was our privilege to spend last Lord's day with the church at Mason City, Ia. It is a privilege to spend a Lord's day with this church—one of the best churches of its age in the whole brotherhood. It is only eight years old, numbers about 900 members, has a $15,000 church property out of debt, has large audiences and constant additions, and manifests more unity, brotherly love, zeal for Bible study, piety and appreciation of the simple gospel than any church we have visited for some time. We preached twice on Lord's day to very large audiences, and attended and briefly addressed the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon, where J. A. Seaton, of Spencer, Ia., delivered the principal address. Bro. Seaton was an old-time friend whom it was a pleasure to meet and hear again. The Y. P. S. C. E. meeting in the evening was one of the most inspiring meetings of the kind we ever attended. The Sunday-school, which follows the forenoon service, is a very fine, live and valuable feature of this plant, with a home department which carries the war into Africa. Sumner T. Martin is just about closing a four years' pastorate with this church, to go to the First Church at Omaha. He is to be succeeded by R. C. Sargent, of Ohio, who begins his work the 25th inst. Not a member of the church has ever seen or heard Bro. S. They call him on his record and on the testimonials of well-known brethren, and their call was unanimous. No sampling of candidates. Here is a pointer as to the secret of the success of this congregation. Our special mission to Mason City was to visit a brother in the flesh and his family, and it was made doubly pleasant by the fellowship we enjoyed in the church.

Questions and Answers.

I have run across a man out here in Western Washington who says he has been baptized in the Holy Spirit, but he can work no miracles. He says there is but one baptism, that is baptism in the Holy Spirit. What does he need to set him right? John Duff.

Do not require miracles of him, but be content if he does those "greater things" which Christ promised his disciples they would do after he ascended to His Father. He is wrong about the one baptism of Eph. 4, and probably needs some one to teach him the New Testament. Whatever may be the truth as to the perpetuity of the promise of baptism in the Holy Spirit, it certainly does not supersede or displace the baptism in water, enjoined in the great commission and practiced by the apostles during their ministry. When the Holy Spirit descended upon Cornelius and his household the question raised by Peter was: "Can any man forbid the water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" (Acts 10: 47.) And he then "commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." So far from the baptism in the Holy Spirit in this instance displacing baptism in water, it was given as a reason why these Gentile converts should be so baptized. No man, having received a large measure of the Holy Spirit, will neglect or cause others to disregard any ordinance of Christ.

Referring to the matter of conducting a daily paper as Jesus Christ would do if he were here, permit me to ask, How can any man know just what Christ would do under the circumstances that surround us at the present time? W.

No man pretends to know, infallibly, just what Christ would do under all the conditions of our modern life. Mr. Sheldon does not pretend to know. He only promises to conduct the Topeka Capital this week as he believes Jesus Christ would do if he were conducting it. The paper will be the expression of the judgment of one Christian man as to what he thinks is the ideal newspaper. There will no doubt be room for differences of opinion on many of his decisions, and he is sure to be criticized severely by the daily newspapers of the country. The experiment, however, will serve a good purpose, we believe, in calling attention to a higher standard of journalism for the daily press.

Where shall we draw the line between what is a proper zeal for purity in the pulpit and what may be justly called persecution, or the following up of a brother minister with reports concerning any past wrong or indiscretions? Inquirer.

Draw the line at repentance, and make the evidence of repentance a blameless life. Preachers, like other people, may be drawn aside from the path of strict righteousness and purity, but if they are Christians they are sure to return to the right way and confess their fault. When this has been done, and the brother has resumed his work under the invitation of the church and his life is beyond reproach, it is as unchristian to follow him up with old reports as it would be to condone his sin while he is impenitent. There is danger of sinning on both sides, but the temptation, perhaps, to sin against charity is the greater with most people. If it is human to err, it is Godlike to forgive the erring when they cease to do evil.

Current Religious Thought.

We are coming to a pretty general agreement that religion does not consist of ecclesiastical observances or theological formularies, but that it should permeate all phases of human life and interest. And with that conception has come the temptation to the preacher to speak with authority about matters upon which he is not an authority. The warning is stated in this paragraph, quoted from Rev. R. E. Connor, in the Universalist Leader:

> The modern preacher, and his congregation as well, needs to be called back to the original and supreme function of the pulpit. There are days of specialties. No one lawyer professes to be an authority on all legal subjects; no single doctor claims to be an expert in all branches of physiology, anatomy and pathology. All are specialists—but ministers. They alone say: "Come to us, if you have any problems of capital and labor to be solved; come to us if you have any vexed questions of the nation's currency to be answered; we will settle all such disputed matters, for behold we are authorities."

There is probably a good deal of ground for the popular belief that people are getting out of the habit of going to church. New reasons are being constantly invented for staying away from the public services of the church. But people who stay away for any reason cannot be scolded into coming back. They must be dealt with in a spirit of sweet reasonableness. The Outlook states some of the reasons for going to church, as follows:

> The two things necessary for real and efficient life are body and spirit. The body without spirit is dead; but the disembodied spirit is relatively powerless. The Church of Christ may be not inaptly described as an organization to embody the spirit of religion—that is, the spirit of faith in and reverence toward God. It does this in two ways: By directly expressing that spirit in acts of worship; and by carrying that spirit into the world, both in organized activity and in the activities of its individual members. The most devoted churchmen will concede that the church is a very imperfect instrumemt for the accomplishment of this purpose. The Outlook certainly does not think it above criticism. Its creeds too often express, not a living faith, but a traditional one; its worship is too often either sensuous emotion or sensuous æstheticism: its sermons are too often perfunctory pulpit performances, stirring no life in others because pulsing with no life themselves; its work is too often work for the church, not work by the church for humanity. Let all this be granted. It nevertheless remains true that there is no other organization which even attempts to do what the church attempts. Neither society, the school nor the press makes any conscious endeavor to body forth and so promote the life of God in the soul of man. If this is worth expressing, then the church is worthy of support until and unless some organization can be framed or found which will make the same attempt and with better success. For the intelligent and the conscientious to abandon the church because it imperfectly fulfills its mission, and so leave it to the control of the unspiritual, who do not comprehend its mission, is to destroy the only real hope of reforming by revivifying the church. For the unspiritual to abandon it because it perfectly fulfills its mission is to come perilously near abandoning the only hope of revivifying their own spiritual nature.

THE MINISTER AND POPULAR AMUSEMENTS.

EDWARD BRAISLIN.

I have been obliged to think a good deal about amusements, as all of us have, partly in order to answer questions, chiefly ethical, addressed to me by bright and conscientious parishioners. Such questions as "Is it right to go to the theater? to play cards? to play billiards? to dance? even to read novels?" Always instantly the demand for discrimination arises in my mind, and I ask in return, "What theater? what cards? what dances? what novels?" How shall I draw for myself and others a line that upon examination will not put me to confusion? No man can give, as I think, a categorical answer to to these questions.

It would make life much simpler if we could in these matters and in all casuistry draw straight lines. If all possible human actions had been as sorted, classified and collated for us, so that morals had consisted in learning a list of things lawful to do, what monumental success we might have made of the questioning and stumbling years! But God seems to have postulated questioning and stumbling as conditions of such progress as to him must be preferable to that of a merely mathematical righteousness. Casuists are continually drawing the lines and Providence is continually erasing them. In literature shall we draw the line between fiction and fact? The parable of the Prodigal Son and the Pilgrim's Progress are fiction. In games will you draw the line between games of chance and games of skill? Where will you put lawn tennis, croquet and golf, in which chance and skill are inextricablly intermingled? In society will you draw the line between dancing parties and conversational parties? Will you be able, if so, to put all scandal and all flirtation on the one side of the line? Will you draw it between the lecture and the drama? What will you do with parlor charades and Sunday-school entertainments, and what with men who, like John B. Gough, are whole dramatic companies in themselves?

Finding, then, that artificial lines are not and cannot be sufficient guides to intelligent and thoughtful people, shall we conclude that there is nothing definite or positive to be said on the subject, and stand silent and impotent while so many of our young men and women plunge into the vortex of worldly pleasures and sink from all that is earnest and serious and safe? God forbid!

There are general principles far clearer and safer than superficial lines can ever be. For example:

1. Suspect the crowd. What everybody does may be right, but it is quite as likely to be wrong. Even the leaders of God's visible church may start the cry, "Crucify him! crucify him!" and the crowd may follow them. Do not do as the Jews did, or as the Romans do.

2. What is one man's meat is another man's poison. You are not a law unto your neighbor, nor is your neigbor a law unto you. "Some men eat cheese, some men it poisons. I will not poison myself because some men enjoy Welsh rarebit, nor shall I insist that he forego his delicacy because it gives me indigestion." Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. The thing that injures you is the thing for you to let alone.

3. Give conscience the benefit of the doubt, or as some one puts it, "keep on the safe side of certainty." He that doubteth is condemned if he eat. Whatever is doubtful is dangerous, and whatever is dangerous it is safe to let alone. Make a list of the pleasures that you are in doubt about, and let the interrogation point decide the whole list. There are enough amusements that are not doubtful. Strong ice or no skating.

4. Better the pleasure of work than the work of pleasure. Whatever pleases you more than your work is to be taken sparingly. It may be right in itself. Your conscience may approve it, but its fascination may be out of proportion to that of your work. If so it must enervate your soul, and that is the province of sin. Consecration to one's work is a great safeguard. Pleasure can hardly be harmful that lends zest to the serious occupations of life. We were made for work, not toil, which is work plus the curse, but work, which was the joy of the first Eden. Amusement is to work what whetting the sythe is to harvesting. He who never stops to create an edge cuts little and toils hard, while he who whets his sythe all day cuts none and eats forbidden apples. True pleasure is recreation. If the mother enjoys the parties more than she enjoys her children the party is dangerous; if the student enjoys cards more than his books the cards are dangerous. If the minister enjoys golf more than sermon preparation golf is dangerous.

5. The question is not, "What harm will it do?" but, "What good will it do?" Is there harm in cards, dancing, billiards, theater? Never ask that pernicious question. Is there good in them? Life is too short to waste any of it in things simply harmless. The whole of it, every hour and minute of it, is to be devoted to what will do you or some one else good. Whatever bears no fruit, why cumbereth it the ground? Cut it down. Your field isn't big enough for shade trees. Does the evening game of chance quicken your faculties for the next day's work? Does the evening dance give you a better appetite for next morning's breakfast? Does the game of billiards send you back to your desk with a new zest for your labors? Does the theater purify your imagination, or broaden your sympathies, or quicken your sensibilities? Different persons give different answers. To their own master they do or do not any or all of these things. What is recreation to one man is enervation or worse to another.

Intelligent adoption of these principles would soon elevate the whole plane of popular amusements, and notably the theater. If men and women would, even generally, allow conscience and their best judgment to play some part in determining what plays to patronize the moralist's battle concerning the drama would be won. Few men fail to respect the woman who is never seen in some of the places they frequent and fewer women fail to perceive with clearness the kinds of amusements against which the higher nature revolts. The best prospect of healthful influence for the pulpit in the matter is, in my judgment, in educating the conscience and higher sensibilities of men which may be counted on to respond to the better standards. The least influential attempts will be those that condemn indiscriminately all popular amusements.

Once more, touching the whole subject. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. No man may play with fire if it endangers his neighbor's house. No man will even light a fire to warm himself if thereby he sets the woods on fire. What effect will my gratification of even healthful desire have upon the community? We must make every man put that question to every recreation that offers itself to him and to his family. If we aim to secure for ourselves only those pleasures that do really recreate, and if we circumscribe even these by the law of our neighbor's good to his edification, we shall make for ourselves and others a very simple solution of most of the perplexing questions of social life, even though we do not then act to the entire satisfaction of all mankind.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA—III.

Authority in Matters of Religion.

A. B. JONES.

When Luther maintained the right of the people to read and interpret the Scriptures for themselves, and when the Campbells contended for the same principle, did they concede the ability of the masses to successfully exercise this right? Are the masses competent to sit in judgment on the august claims of the Bible to be an inspired record, to contain a revelation from heaven, and to be clothed with the delegated authority of the Eternal God? Are they competent to interpret the Living Oracles, to understand the life-giving Word? These great men knew, as we all know, that the masses are uneducated, unlearned. To enter the great field of evidences for and against the claims of the Bible, to ply the arts of textual and contextual criticism, to follow the stately steppings of conservative and destructive critics, to be exegetes and interpreters of difficult and doubtful passages of Scripture —for all such feats and exploits the common people, the great masses, are wholly unprepared and disabled. But is it necessary that this whole field of investigation should all be learned, these tasks mastered, before the heart can repose its confidence in the Word of Life; before the soul that is hungering and thirsting after righteousness can be filled? If so, then indeed "there are few that shall be saved."

Humanity is painfully coascious of its weaknesses and its burdens, of its own limitations and inadequacy. The Infinite One has established a throne of authority in this human consciousness, and a throne of authority in the Word of eternal truth and promise. And these thrones are not rivals, but allies. "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." The light greets the eye and the eye greets the light. The ear revels in sound and sound revels in the ear. The stricken, aching heart cries aloud for help; and the Word of God says: "My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth. Let not your heart be troubled." We bury our dead, and fall down upon the grave in despair. And the Word says: "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live again; and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die."

The path of life becomes obstructed, and the way of duty is not clear. We call for light. And the Word says: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." The great moral and spiritual lessons of the Bible, the essential and fundamental principles of righteous and holy living, lie plainly written upon the surface of Divine Truth. The necessary facts and precepts for moral intelligence and godly discernment, the wisdom needed to produce and to sustain "faith, hope and charity," are not hidden away in the obscure, doubtful and difficult portions of the Divine Record; but they stand out in bold relief, and always of easy access and understanding to ordinary intelligence. The authority of human consciousness, in its universal application, is adequate, fully adequate, to receive, appropriate and enjoy these essentials of divine revelation.

Some fifteen or twenty years ago there was published in one of our American magazines a symposium by several of the leading minds of England and America. The question discussed was substantially this: "Which is the safer guide, in all political issues involving moral principles, the leaders or the people?" The names of the contributors to that article have all faded from my memory save that of the great commoner, Gladstone. He argued that the people were the safer, for the reason that they simply followed their instincts of right, while the leaders were liable to be swayed by the influences of self-interest, ambition, rivalry, etc. His noble thought and eloquent words were such as to leave an imperishable impression on the mind, and to carry conviction to the heart.

A few years ago Judge Miller, of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered an address before the Bar Association of New York, on the jury feature of our national system of jurisprudence. He said, when a young lawyer he considered the jury system unwise and unsafe. The court being educated and versed in the law, he thought the ends of justice more likely to obtain in its hands than in the hands of an unlearned jury. But now, he further said, after years of experience and much observation he would rather risk the equities of any case with twelve plain, honest, uneducated jurors, than with the most learned court of the country.

So much for the question of morals in the view of the immortal Gladstone. So much for the question of justice in the view of the distinguished jurist, Judge Miller. The most prominent feature of the Bible is its recognition of the people, the great masses of humanity. The poor, the ignorant and the outcast are the special objects of attention. "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the mighty." The highest eulogy ever pronounced upon the Son of God is this: "And the common people heard him gladly." So much for religion in the view of the Bible.

Human consciousness, then, is adequate in its authority, to wrestle with the important and essential questions of justice, morals and religion. And in the light of this fact, the declaration "that the poor have the gospel preached unto them" becomes luminous. It implies their capacity to deal with the great facts and truths of the gospel.

But this religious consciousness may grow and extend its capacity and thereby enlarge its authority. Its very exercise is a process of education and development. And with the enlargement of capacity comes the enlargement of responsibility. "If you know these things," says the Savior, "happy are you if you do them." The practical incorporation into life of the truth discerned in the Word of God brings in a revenue of happiness, of self-appreciation, of conscious moral worth and aggrandizement. Again, the Savior says: "If you do these things you shall know of the doctrine." Knowing is an inspiration to doing, and doing increases the capacity for knowing. And thus the life, the growing life, becomes, like "the path of the just, a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Nor is this battle to be fought single-handed and alone. "Heart within, God o'erhead," is the divine assurance. Human effort shall be reinforced by the divine agency. "We will come unto him and make our abode with him" (John 14:23).

Our definition of authority in the beginning was, "The right to command and to enforce obedience. The right to command has been considered. The "right to enforce" has no place in religion. Man can enforce nothing against God except to refuse God the privilege of enriching man's life. God can enforce nothing against man except the consequences of disobedience. An enforced religion destroys the essential elements in it—freedom and choice. Religion to be genuine must be voluntary. "Whosoever is of a willing heart let him bring an offering of the Lord" (Ex. 35:5). "Let him that is athirst come. And whosover will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22:17).

We have thus striven in this investigation to bring ourselves with open hearts and with a profound consciousness of our personal rights, capabilities and responsibilities, face to face with the open Bible, as the depository of divine truth, that we may hear the voice of God calling all men into fellowship with himself and with one another, on the essential and fundamental principles of our holy religion. This was the fondest dream of Alexander Campbell's life. In 1839, in a very fraternal letter to Andrew Broaddus, a prominent minister of the Baptist Church, of Virginia, written in reply to a similar letter from Mr. B., Mr. Campbell said:

"Could the friends of truth and union agree to meet on the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, acknowledge one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one body of Christ and one Spirit—could they leave the conscience free where God has left it free, and not bind their private opinions upon one another, and could they open their pulpits, their ears and their hearts to a free intercommunion of preachers and people, and occasionally celebrate the Christian festival together, and devote themselves more to the study of the Bible and to the Christian holiness of life—what a blissful time we should soon have!"

THE ORDINARY PREACHER.

C. A. FREER.

His name is legion. If you go to the city, he is there. If you attend church at the county-seat, he is in the pulpit. If you stop in the country town, he is at home. If you travel in the country, you meet him on the public highway. He is the omnipresent, ever-ready, always-useful man. Other men may get glory and fame, but he does the work. He may not be a very great student. His sermons may be a little long and at times dry. He may not wear kid gloves and a white tie. He may not part his hair in the middle. He may not always have on spotless linen. But this ordinary preacher is a very excellent and useful man. When we want $100,000 for Home Missions, the secretaries appeal to him. They besiege him. They send him two letters per week. They pat him on the back. They make him feel good. Why? He holds the key to the situation. That $100,000 depends on him. If he doesn't play, the game is up. We want $200,000 for Foreign Missions. What is done? This ordinary preacher is sought by post and paper. Stir up the people! He is the Simon. If he says "thumbs up," up they go. If he doesn't, Rains and McLean are helpless. But after he says "thumbs up" and "wiggle-waggle," a few of the big guns go up to Cincinnati or Kansas City and say: "We killed the bear." Have they? Yes, and no. That ordinary preacher at Jones' Corners can't go to the convention for pecuniary reasons, but he and his ilk have made the jubilation possible. The college president gets eloquent on an educated ministry (and he ought) and says: "Young men, you will be no good if not up to date in education." But by and by he wants endowment. Then he scratches his head and walks the floor. "Yes, sir," he says, "we must appeal to the people. We must send a letter to every preacher in the state. That is the only way to do it." They go to the ordinary preacher. He responds. He opens his pulpit to the college representative; he talks it up; he leads in the giving when he already needs a new suit very badly, but as he is only an ordinary man the old will do for a while. Thus it goes. Missions are supported, churches built, colleges endowed and the world saved mostly by the ordinary preacher. He is the most faithful, trustful, helpful, consecrated, pious minister in the world. He lives close to the people. He is a true servant. He is not to be laughed at. He is not to be counted as a back number. He may not know the a b c of Higher Criticism, but he knows that men need a Savior and that there is only one to save. He may not even know Greek, but he loves Christ and destroys nobody's faith. He comforts the sick and dying. He puts his hand gently on the heads of the children. He marries our sons and daughters and baptizes them. He is a marvelously useful man. All honor to him. May his tribe increase. May the standard of his attainments be raised for the sake of those whom he serves. God pity us when we imagine we are above the ordinary preacher. If we really are, we will not know it. If we only think we are, we deceive ourselves.

O, yes: one more thing about this man. He makes the canvass for the religious paper with or without commission as you please. He looks after the delinquents. He talks it up in the pulpit. In fact, what is it he does not do? May God bless him and his family. May his brethren stand by him nobly.

THE GREATEST THOUGHT IN THE WORLD.

JOSEPH F. NEWTON.

The conception of the infinite love and eternal goodness of God is the highest height to which human thought has ascended—the greatest thought in the world. Nor was it attained until after long ages of reflection and experience. And in the ages yet to come we shall not be able to fathom the depths of its meaning. We know not what Fatherhood means when enveloped in all the majesty of the infinite, and stretched abroad in all its fullness, richness and tenderness; when over it is the grandeur of the eternal spheres. We worship him as the Father of our spirits, the source of all life and light and love, the author of all truth and beauty; but our minds cannot grasp the glory of his nature and the greatness of his love. Earth's most gifted minds have seen glimpses of this truth from age to age; artists have sought to fix in color and in form their dreams of eternal beauty; thinkers have striven to express in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn" their thoughts of God; poets and prophets of all nations have had visions of the invisible, but the clearest and most satisfying revelation of God was that reflected in the great white soul of Jesus. This superb spiritual genius reached a plane of experience so exalted as to enable him to come into communion with the infinite and to imbibe truth from its eternal source; and the work of later ages has been largely of expansion rather than of discovery. His simple and real religion charmed the centuries and inspired the greatest spiritual awakening in the history of humanity; but the growth of the race has given a deeper and wider meaning to his sayings—they shine with a broader, bolder, brighter light.

The eternal goodness of God—this truth transfigures the universe! It fills with meaning the infinite vastness around our lives; "unfathomed, untrod, save by even and morn and the angels of God." If science reveals the bewildering and far-shining immensity of the universe, its limitless splendor, it is but the magnificence and extent of love's eternal empire. We know we "cannot drift beyond his love and care," for through all those awful distances, those sublime and solemn silences, his goodness reigns. The sky is no longer a vast void, but a many-mansioned home where right is might and love is law. It is a dome of love arching over us alive with silent and beautiful thoughts from whose infinite music stray notes steal over the soul and lift it into higher harmonies. We feel a sense of peace in the presence of a "divine love, awful, profound, immeasurable, underlying and transcending all things, incomprehensibly satisfying the soul and justifying and explaining the universe. The infinite fret and fume of life seems like the petulance of an infant in the presence of this restful tenderness diffused through the great spaces." The mighty energies of nature are no longer loveless and lawless forces which must be violated or suspended in order to bless man, but laws that are wise and just and right; reproving us when we do wrong and rewarding us when we do right; folding us about, like great, strong arms, guiding us onward to God. "Law is goodness acting by rule."

Eternal goodness—it explains human history! Without this truth the history of man is only a bleak and terrible tragedy. With this thought as a lens we look back upon the story of man's life upon the earth, his struggles and defeats, his crude and cruel creeds, his acts of ignorance, dark and dreadful, his miseries and mistakes; and over all is the hand of a wise and patient Teacher, leading man onward and upward with painful steps and slow, teaching him the lessons of fear and law and love, guiding him from savagery into civilization, from bondage into brotherhood and from barbarism into benevolence. Then we understand that history is "God's education of man." We see that man is "dull and stupid, often wayward and willful, sometimes even a fractious and rebellious pupil, whom the great Teacher is trying to train for usefulness and honor." Nor are we staggered at the price, in pain and blood, paid for the present progress of the world; for in no other way could God secure these supreme results. The price is not too much when we see man rising, age by age, from cruder to clearer thoughts, from lower to higher ideas of God, from baser to finer ideals of life and duty and destiny; searching the earth and sweeping the heavens for light on life's problems; giving himself in noble service and sacrifice for truth and right.

Step by step since time began,
We see the steady gain of man.

Eternal goodness—the truth gives a deeper meaning and a wider mission to human life. A nobler conception of God adds to the sacredness and significance of man's life. If God is a force, man is a body to be moved; if God is a tyrant, man is a victim to be scourged; if God is a king, man is a slave to be sold; if God is a Father, man is a child to be loved. When we accept the truth of the eternal Fatherhood of God, we link the life of man in dignity and sublimity with that which is highest and divinest in the universe. Duty makes man a moral being; love makes him a spiritual being. Religion becomes natural rather than artificial; vital rather than formal. It is a sweet and free life of father and son, including all the resources, obligations and consolations flowing naturally out of that relation. Prayer is the plea of a child; providence is a father's care of his children; revelation is a father instructing his son, and salvation is a father gathering his loved ones home. This truth invests human life with grandeur and glory, and endows it with divinity and immortality. That black mystery which men call death is overcast with a bow of hope and illumined by the light of love. We do not fear the future, for love rules over all.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

This conception of the greatness and goodness of God is the key to the vexing problems of thought and the note that will set our lives to music. It will become brighter and more beautiful as the years roll on, dispelling the darkness, bringing order out of chaos and deepening into the peace that is eternal. Men will search for God, not simply in the pages of ancient books, but in all the ages and in all the books. They will see him beaming in all beauty; hear him speaking in all science and poetry and music; feel him throbbing in the heart-beats of every great and good life; and know that the universe is his home and that mankind is his son.

Cling to eternal love and goodness. Without it, thinking is agony; prayer, an appeal to heartless fate; love, a frozen angel; life, a riddle, and death, a black and trackless chasm. If this be not true the universe has lost its soul of loveliness, and the beauty and poetry of life are gone.

Cling to this truth. Make it your pillow by night and your waking thought in the morning. This faith fixes the soul firmly in the system of things. It gives the mind poise and peace. It adds to the luster of human life and the rapture of human love. With it, thinking is an ecsatsy and living is a sacrament. It gives help to the living and hope for the dead. It beams through all nature and pulsates through all human struggle. It is inspiration when life is dark and we are weary; it is consolation when cheeks are wan and lips are white in death. It is a bright and glad religion—the greatest thought in the world.

Nonsectarian Church, St. Louis, Mo.

Our Budget.

—Sheldon's religious daily this week.

—Mr. Sheldon may be the first man to conduct a religions daily, but he will not be the last.

—Whatever may be the fate of this experiment, an idea has been planted in the mind of the public that is sure to take root in a permanent enterprise of this kind.

—Mr. Sheldon will not reach his ideal in a week. If he should run his paper a year he would modify his opinion, no doubt, in many respects.

—No editor ever realizes his ideal in religious journalism. This would imply ideal editors, ideal contributors and ideal compositors, press-men and proof-readers, and then, perhaps, it would take ideal readers to appreciate it.

—This last remark leads us to say that there is as much need of improvement of taste in the readers of daily and religious journals as in the journals themselves. An ideal weekly or daily journal would prove to be very dull reading to a large number of people, with their present ideas and tastes. But the work of education must go on.

—All that we have ever claimed for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is that it is as near an ideal religious journal as its present editor, and his corps of writers and contributors with their present facilities, are able to make. There is, however no good reason why, with increasing experience and facilities, this paper and every other paper should not improve. This is what their readers have a right to expect, provided they pay a price for their paper that will justify the publishers in making this improvement.

—If the testimony of our readers is to be accepted, the present volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST exceeds all preceding volumes. If this be true, it is nothing more than what ought to be. We are sure of one thing, however, and that is that we have not attained our ideal, but like Paul, we are pressing on toward the mark as rapidly as we know how, under existing conditions. We are not unmindful of shortcomings and mistakes, but with perseverance on our part and charity on the part of our readers we hope to overcome them.

—Our readers will be gratified to know that there is even talk of peace negotiations between the Boers and Britons in South Africa. It would seem a propitious time for the contending armies to pause awhile, while the civil rulers talk over their differences and ascertain if there be not some honorable basis of settlement. If our government can assist in bringing about an honorable peace by acting as an intermediary, it will no doubt be glad to do so, and the people will approve its action.

—We are going to press before the first issue of Mr. Sheldon's paper reaches us. The daily press, however, brings us some intimations of what the first issue will be, and from these we judge that he has introduced some revolutionary changes in the style of daily journalism. It is entirely too much to expect that Mr. Sheldon will make no mistakes. All that we can feel sure of is that he will do the best he knows with the limited experience he has had in that sort of business. He will, no doubt, know more about journalism at the end of the week than he does now. As previously predicted in these columns, he will be much criticized, and while some of this may be just we have no doubt that much of it will be unjust, because coming from men with impracticable ideas. From any point of view, however, the Sheldon daily is a striking and most interesting episode in modern journalism, and the degree of interest it is exciting is evidence to us that the world is getting ready and is even now ripe for a higher type of daily journalism than has yet been produced.

—Foreign Mission harvest now on.

—Let there be a bountiful yield from every quarter.

—No church should let the month pass without an offering.

—We cannot reach the $200,000 mark this year without more gifts and larger giving.

Unless the missionary spirit characterizes the new century there is not much hope for the churches.

—The Christian Publishing Company is furnishing supplies to about one hundred more schools than at this time last year. Orders for the second quarter are now piling in on the publishers. Be sure that the order for your school is sent in time.

—The reports from the churches show that there is a determination to reach the full apportionment for Foreign Missions. More churches are anxious to be on the roll of honor than ever before. Very many are anxious to go beyond the apportionment. They feel better when they have given two are three times as much as was requested.

—Several churches report that they raised enough for Foreign Missions on the first Sunday in March to support a missionary on the field. The standard of giving is raising all the time. It is only a question of a few years when churches that are now giving a hundred dollars will be giving a thousand, and when churches that are now giving five hundred will be giving three or four times that amount.

—Sister L. C. Clarkson, of this city, departed this life on Tuesday night of last week, after a long and painful illness. There was a large attendance at the funeral services on Thursday afternoon, at the Central Christian Church, where she had been a faithful worshiper and worker for eighteen years. A tribute was paid to her life and character, by the editor of this paper, and Charles Humphrey, the fine tenor soloist, sang, "I Shall be Satisfied," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." She leaves three daughters, two sons and a husband to mourn her loss. We tender our sincere sympathy to the family, and our congratulations, too,on their goodly heritage of the memory and influence of a consecrated life.

—The American Home Missionary for March is devoted to a history of our mission work among the negroes. The article extending through this number of the magazine was written by one of its editors, C. C. Smith, who has had personal knowledge of this branch of our home work for several years. If any ever doubted the wisdom of this work or the wise use of the money raised to sustain it, a reading of this article will remove all doubts. The wonder is that so much has been accomplished in the time and that so firm a foundation has been laid for permanent and larger things for this people. Send to C. C. Smith, Cincinnati, O., for a copy.

—"Hell as a Center of Gravity" is the startling head of an article in the Christian Century, March 8th, by A. M. Haggard. When we come to think about it, and to think how many people seem to be headed in that direction, we concluded that there was something in the subject of importance to humanity and that the writer was under no obligations to apologize for his theme. To counteract this tendency to gravitate toward that very hot climate we need to accelerate the world's velocity upon the moral and spiritual plane of the universe.

In W. F. Richardson's article on the S. S. lesson for March 18th, as it appears in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week,the omission of a few words from a sentence near its close makes him say the opposite of what he intended. The following is the sentence with the omitted words: "The bloody rite of circumcision, the burdensome law of the Sabbath and the intricate ritual of the levitical service have been abolished, and in their place we are given the expressive symbols of baptism and the Lord's Supper, the spontaneous worship of the Lord's day and the practical, joyous service of daily, holy and helpful living."

—Edward O. Sharpe, pastor at Girard, Ill., and Mrs. Mattie A. Pool, of LeRoy, were married at LeRoy, Ill., March 1, 1900. A cruel snow storm separated the couple a few hours, but love overcometh all things and the marriage was duly consummated after a little delay. Our congratulations to the contracting parties.

—A special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from Toledo, Ohio, March 12th, announces fifteen additions in the Wilson and Haston meetings in that city on last Sunday; seventy-nine to date. C. W. Huffer is the pastor of the church in which the meeting is being held.

—The comparative statement of offerings for Foreign Missions for the first nine days,given elsewhere in this paper, shows a total gain of over $6,000 over that of last year for the same time. The gain in the regular receipts for this period is $783.07. It is to be hoped that this is an indication of a constantly increasing gain that shall bring us to the $200,000 mark by the time of our next convention.

—The call of the Methodist bishops to a week of prayer over the condition of the church is awakening no little discussion in Methodist circles. The basis of this call to prayer is a supposed decline of spirituality and prestige based upon a decline of spiritual and numerical strength in some of the larger cities; and in some instances an actual falling away and other alarming symptoms. This decadence is attributed to various causes, but chiefly to an abandonment of primitive Methodist customs. Those who hold to this view believe, of course, that a return to the ways of their fathers will remedy the evils complained of. But this class of reasoners seem to overlook the cause or causes that brought about a departure from their primitive ways, and when the effort is made to return, if at all, it will prove a failure. There is so much in primitive Methodism that resembles phenomena now explained by mental science that it will be found an exceedingly difficult task to maintain the position that they are the evidence of the presence of the Holy Spirit, and hence the loss of power of which they are now complaining. The remedy for this is to be found in a better conception of the work, influence and fruits of the Holy Spirit and a readjustment of their creed to the more enlightened and biblical view rather than a return to primitive Methodist customs, especially of the revival sort.

—The Orphan School, Fulton, Mo., has enrolled 1,129 pupils in ten years. This is evidence enough in support of the claims of this school to liberal sustenance. With an income from all sources last year of $15,000 this school sustained 25 full beneficiaries and 32 partial beneficiaries, and sustained 69 full-pay pupils. The president of this school says that $250,000 endowment would make it possible to select one hundred young ladies and to furnish to each educational advantages for one year suitable to their respective natural abilities, giving board, light, fuel, laundry, regular literary course, with no cost other than the interest accruing from the endowment. It looks like such an opportunity for doing permanent good should not be lost or such an appeal go unheeded.

—If our letter on English topics this week breathes a spirit more strongly in sympathy with Great Britain in the South African war than some of our readers can appreciate, let it be remembered that the writer is an Englishman and a patriot who loves his country and its flag and who believes as strongly in the righteousness of Great Britain's course in this war as the average American believed in the righteousness of our war with Spain for the liberation of Cuba. If we could have the ears of President Kruger and Colonial Secretary Joseph Chamberlain for a few minutes we would like to suggest to them that just now, at this breathing spell, they pause long enough to state to each other in clear, definite terms what their minimum demands are, that they may see how far apart they are at the present and just what they are fighting for. Perhaps at this time each side has learned enough of the other to respect each other more than they did and the casus belli, whatever it is, may be removed.

—Peter Ainslie, editor Christian Tribune, and pastor Christian Church, Calhoun Street, Baltimore, Md., is permitted to speak at considerable length in the columns of the Baltimore American on the present condition of the church and of the religious world in general. He thinks that the church is not only delinquent of her duties, but unconscious of the fact. That forms of godliness have blinded the eyes of the world and the church to true Christianity. That there is room for such charges must be admitted, but we do not believe that all believers in Christ are asleep. But we are living in peculiar times. Christianity is encountering a new form of opposition, but it will be triumphant as when it met the furious hosts of the Roman Empire. It is time, then, that the church be awakened to its dangers and duties, and what Bro. Ainslie says on that subject is to the point and timely.

—The Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Institute will convene in Palmyra on next Monday evening, lasting four days. A good program has been prepared and a profitable session is anticipated.

—About all persons engaged in the liquor traffic, a great many of the politicians and a large per cent of the church members utterly refuse to be appalled at the awful fruits of this accursed thing in our land. No matter what the amount of poverty, murder, insanity and distress produced annually by this traffic, they go on in the even tenor of their ways as if they thought it was a most godly business. Why intelligent men persist in ignoring the facts and figures produced in condemnation of the traffic is not a mystery, not an incomprehensible matter. But the solution of the trouble only adds to their dishonor and shame. It is the love of money and of political power.

—The Herald and Presbyter ventures some friendly advice to the Methodist Church in a recent number on the question of its declining spirituality and strength. The Herald and Presbyter believes that that great religious body is sheltering and nursing rationalistic and Unitarian influences that have no more right within its fold than a pack of wolves in a sheep pasture, and that unless attention is paid to this matter the Methodist Church will find that its whole body is being slowly poisoned to death. Such interest in another's welfare in these days of sectarian rivalry is so unusual that one is almost led to ask for the prompting of such a saying. It can hardly be that the Presbyterian Church is becoming tired of standing alone in the matter of heresy trials and would like to provoke the company of a respectable religious body that inspired the utterances; so we must regard it as a piece of friendly advice.

—If you are reading the series of articles on "Pioneer Disciples in the East," by F. D. Power, you will have your minds sweetly refreshed on the beginnings of the Restoration Movement of the Disciples of Christ. The fourth article of this series, in this paper, deals with the separation from the Baptists and the primary cause of that separation. No reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should fail to read this article or to possess a complete set of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses for the year 1900.

—The Colorado Letter this week, on taking our cities for Christ, is to the point and ought to take away boasting wherever it exists. As a matter of fact we have not yet appreciated the work of city evangelization. We have been too prone to be puffed up with big meetings or congregational success and satisfied therewith. We hope this letter will widen and deepen our thought of the cities and the unsaved.

—L. D. Goodwin, of Canton, Mo., has been called to his reward. At the time of his death he was employed as a lecturer on Sociology in Christian University. His death is attributed to diabetis, from which he had been a sufferer for several years. Brother Goodwin had previously been the pastor of the church in Macomb, Ill. We extend our sympathy to the widow and three daughters, upon whom this sorrow most heavily rests.

—The Christian Church, of Stronghurst, Ill., is without a pastor and is desirous of a man for one-half time. Address W. B. Towler.

—T. F. Odenweller, of Marcus, Iowa, announces that the Northwestern (Iowa) Christian Convention will meet in Rockwell City, March 19th.

—Dr. Hillis thinks there are five great obstacles that the present-day preacher must meet. 1. The competition of poets, essayists and novelists; 2. The successes of yesterday are diminishing the necessity for preaching; 3. Overwork for six days in the week; 4. The changing theological views; 5. Devotional and other good literature in the homes.—Christian Century.

The greatest obstacle that the preacher of the gospel has to meet seems to have been overlooked by Dr. Hillis in the above communication, and that is, either firstly or sixthly, the works of the devil. But pardon us. We have just noticed that Dr. Hillis did not say preacher of the gospel, so we may be too previous with our criticism.

—The Texas Christian Advocate bears the following good testimony to "Queen Esther" and its author, M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Texas:

Dr. Davis is a versatile and scholarly minister, gifted with artistic taste, and the book is just what one would expect from a man of his taste and habits of thought. The subject is arranged under a series of nine suggestive topics, such as "Vashti Dethroned," "Esther Enthroned," "The Decree of Death," "The Plot Discovered," "Esther Pleading for Her People," "A Sleepless Night," "Haman Hanged," "The New Decree" and "Victory and Its Memorial." These features of this highly dramatic story are beautifully and clearly treated by the author, and under his masterly touch they were wrought into a picture of rare merit and skill. The book will prove highly interesting to all classes or readers, but especially so to young people.

Indianapolis Congress.

All those expecting to attend the Congress at Indianapolis, March 27-29, are asked to notify A. B. Philputt by postal card at once, so that entertainment may be provided.

Meetings will be held in the Central Christian Church, Cor. Delaware and Walnut Sts., reached by Central Ave or Alabama St. cars, getting off at Walnut St. and going one block west. First session begins at two o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, March 27th. All ministers who do not hold Central Passenger Association Annuals must write to F. C. Donald, Monadnoc Bl'd'g, Chicago, in advance, for a trip permit. A. B. PHILPUTT.

"A Stitch in Time Saves Nine."

A broken stitch, like the "little rift within the late," is the beginning of trouble. "I am tired, not ill." "It will soon pass away." "I don't believe in medicine." These are the broken stitches that lead to serious illness. Nature is wise and in Hood's Sarsaparilla she has furnished the means to take up broken stitches. Why? Because it starts at the root and cleanses the blood.

Bad Blood — "For years I was troubled with my blood, my face was pale, I never felt well. Three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla made me feel better and gave me a healthy color." Mae Cross, 24 Cedar Av., South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Your course of management of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is highly commendable.—SAMUEL TRAUM, New Antioch, O.

Success to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! To my way of thinking it is the best paper gotten up by our brethren.—O. P. SHROUT, Kansas City, Mo.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is getting better and better every year. I enjoy reading it and find it profitable.—P. A. CAVE, Hagerstown, Md.

I am highly pleased with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Long may it live and number its readers by the thousands.—I. W. ROGERS, Trenton, N. C.

I am again a subscriber of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and think the Editor's Easy Chair well worth the price.—JOHN S. MARTIN, Virginia, Ill.

Keep up the excellent spiritual, literary and mechanical tone of the paper which you have begun with the year.—W. H. MONROE, Bethany, Neb.

I rejoice with many others at the success of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I esteem it above all others as a religious journal.—JOHN CRANDALL, Bolivar, N. Y.

There are appearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some magnificent articles. Especially Bro. Aylsworth's "Uses of the Religious Paper," and B. A. Hinsdale's "Mr. Campbell in the College of Professional Teachers." Good! Grand!—J. C. REYNOLDS, Macomb, Ill.

I congratulate you on the continued improvement of the paper and its increasing subscription list, with best wishes for your temporal and spiritual prosperity.—JOHN C. SPENCER, Ashtabula, O.

I suppose all want value for money. I get it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—"good measure, shaken together and running over"—and so enclose my subscription with much satisfaction.—T. R. HODKINSON, Winterset, Ia.

For some time I have been intending to express my appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has helped me so much in my Christian work, and I feel that I can never be without it. Its deep spiritual tone, its excellent literary features, its broad liberality, all commend it to me.—MRS. A. C. CAMPBELL, Escondido, Cal.

I wish to express my hearty approval of the spirit in which the editorial department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is conducted. The lovable spirit of the gentle Longan is still manifest upon its pages. I enjoy the "Editor's Easy Chair" as my dear mother enjoyed "Alone With God." Next to her Bible she enjoyed that book, and it was her constant companion, even when traveling.—CLAYTON KIETH, M. D., Louisiana, Mo.

Of all the papers published by our people I regard the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as the prince for preachers. I cannot get along without it.—J. E. PAYNE, Hodgenville, Ky.

I am persuaded that we have no better paper in the brotherhood than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is pure and always has the gospel ring. I consider the Christian Publishing Company's literature the best and safest.—ELDER H. H. RAMA, Siloam Springs, Ark.

I beg to express my high appreciation of the spirit, dignified Christian course and ability of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. In the Feb. 22nd number the foreign missionary matter was most admirable. I feel assured that much good will result to the cause of missions and apostolic religion from such a number. May God bless and give you wisdom.—W. S. DICKINSON, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Personal Mention.

W. H. Boles in now in a great meeting in Anthony, Kansas.

D. W. Hastings is now working for the church in Drakeville, Iowa.

V. E. Ridenour will assist Edmond Wilkes in a meeting beginning the 14th of the present month.

T. M. McLain has resigned his work in Anthony, Kan, and accepted a call to Medicine Lodge, Kan.

Baxter Waters, W. F. Hamann and O. A. Bartholomew of this city have each been on the sick list, but were at their posts on last Sunday.

Brother Blalock, having resigned at Slater, Mo., that church is now in search of a pastor, but will not resort to trial sermons to find a preacher.

J. M. Blalock has resigned at Slater and located in Marshall, Mo. Having purchased a home he will make that his permanent home. He would like to engage all of his time with churches in reach of Marshall.

Elder J. B. Briney preached at the First Christian Church, this city, on last Sunday morning, at Compton Heights Church in the evening and was present at the preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday morning.

F. M. Green is at the home of J. A. Dosher, Sr., Valdosta, Ga., enjoying the balmy air of that salubrious climate. He says that the preacher there, Frank Adams, is a young man greatly beloved by the church.

Sumner T. Martin closes his work with the church in Mason City, Ia., this month, and goes at once to the First Church in Omaha, Neb. The church in Mason City has called Ralph C. Sargent, of Salem, O., to succeed a pastor whom they will greatly miss.

T. H. Kuhn, state evangelist for Indiana, wishes it understood that he is only giving his vacant Sundays during the spring and summer to the church in Windfall in that state. He preaches for them only when not engaged in protracted meetings.

R. W. Crossfield, Owensboro, Ky., Z. T. Williams, Montpelier, Ky., J. W. McGarvey, Jr., Lexington, Ky., and P. H. Duncan, of Ludlow, Ky., are now enroute for the Holy Land and other places in Asia and Europe. They expect to be from home for four months.

D. Collins, of Secor, Ill., has published a 32-page tract, envelope size, on "The Foundation of Mormonism Removed." It is an argument against the "Book of Mormon;" an exposure of its fallacies, contradictions, etc. Single tract ten cents; by the dozen, one dollar. Address above.

The Times-Union, Jacksonville, Florida, for March 5th, containes the outline of a sermon preached in that city March 4th by T. H. Blenus on "The Infinite Chasm." The point in the sermon was to show that the great chasm between the human and the divine natures had been spanned by Christ and by him only.

David C. Walker, of Sapulpa, Indian Ty., says: "Ellis Henderson, a merchant from Springfield, Mo., a man I have known for years, visited our town a few days ago and preached two discourses to a few Disciples here. He is a masterly man in the Scriptures, and what a pity that such a man can't be in the ministry all the time in place of behind the counter."

L. H. McCoy, pastor of the Christian Church at Flora, Ill, has resigned his position, giving up the work for a time on account of his health and death of his sister. Elder McCoy leaves Flora well liked by all, after a successful career of sixteen months' work. His present address is Burnt Prairie, Ill.

On the 21st of the present month Elder C. Kingsby Marshall, Jr., Burksville, Ky., and Miss Berteyce Alexander, of Bowling Green, Ky., will be married in the Tenth Street Christian Church, of Bowling Green. The prospective groom is the pastor of the church in Burksville, Ky. Elder William Baker, of Glasgow, Ky., is to solemnize the marriage.

In his meeting at Jamestown, Indiana, H. C. Patterson baptized a man whose weight was 370 pounds. The baptism was performed with ease and grace. The candidate's name was Frank Davidson. He is 32 years old and is five feet, eight inches in height. Brother Patterson weighs but 150 pounds. The house was crowded to witness the baptism and seemed surprised at the ease with which it was done.

From the Anaconda News we learn that the church in that city, Montana, has been greatly revived and strengthened by a meeting held by R. E. Dunlap, now the Montana state evangelist. The new pastor, Frank Minnick, from Middletown, Ind., has been installed and the church is now hopeful of a brighter future. Brother Dunlap is now in a meeting in Bozeman, Montana.

The members of the church in Galva, Kan., recently stole a march upon their pastor, but left no occasion for displeasure at the uninvited call. The first intimation of the invasion was the sound of "America" by a large chorus at the kitchen door. The occasion was the eleventh anniversary of Bro. and Sister Jones' marriage. After an enjoyable evening and the gift of a handsome purse of money the visitors departed.

Morgan Morgans, assisted by his daughter, is conducting a meeting with their home church, Brownwood, Texas, with good interest and nine accessions up to date of his letter. Bro. Major, he says, will move there soon and put in his entire time for the church instead of one-half as heretofore. He speaks highly of Bro. Major's work there. Bro. Morgans reports more calls for meetings in his new fieid than he can fill. His next meeting will be at Stephensville in that state.

F. A. Lindenmeyer, pastor of the church in Lexington, Neb., was made the subject of a severe pounding by his brethren. We are not informed of any broken bones or other physical injuries sustained, neither was the pounding traceable to any evil purpose but to brotherly kindness and Christian love, as the larder afterward testified. A token of appreciated labor in the shape of a new and handsome quilt came the next day from the sisters of the church in Eddyville, Neb. Brother Lindenmeyer is now in a protracted meeting, with P. S. Wickham, of Overton, Neb., preaching and R. A. Givens, of Denver, Col., leading the chorus singers. The interest in the meeting is increasing. Through the efforts of J. F. Bridges, of Eddyville, Neb., Bro. Lindenmeyer was secured to hold two short meetings there, which resulted in a new organized congregation of 27 members. Bro. Bridges led the song services in both meetings.

Dr. Lowber at Add-Ran.

Dr. J. W. Lowber is with us again at Add-Ran, giving his annual course of lectures. For eleven years he has thus been connected with this institution, and for five years was chancellor. He has given addresses in most of the leading institutions in the state. Before coming to Texas he lectured extensively in the East and North.

Dr. Lowber has always been interested in education. Although his work as a minister has been very heavy, he has succeeded in keeping up his studies along special lines. A fitting recognition of this is his election as a Fellow of the Royal Educational Institute of Scotland.

Bro. Lowber has established lecturships both at Add-Ran University and at the University of Texas. He hopes at some future time to make a tour through Kentucky and Indiana, where he spent the early part of his ministry, and endow lectureships at Lexington and Indianapolis similar to the Hibbert Lectureship. He believes that the Hibbert Lectures at Oxford have done more to disseminate religious knowledge than any professorship in that great University.

Correspondence.

Jamaica Letter.

In sending to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, after a long silence, a few items of Jamaica information, I must begin with the most recent item of information connected with our mission work. On the third of the month a new church building was opened at Oberlin. This has long been needed, for the old building was mean and dilapidated. When Bro. Purdy took charge of the station, about two years ago, there was nothing very bright or encouraging connected with it. A continuation of unfavorable circumstances had brought things to a low ebb. Our brother took hold vigorously. First, the C. W. B. M. provided for the erection of a mission house, which is all that need be desired, and beautifully situated. Before that was altogether completed, work was started on a new chapel, the foundation of which had already been built by Bro. Rumsey. In the short period of about six months the building was completed. This is quite a feat when the conditions are considered. All the material, except sand and stone, had to be conveyed in carts a distance of fifteen miles and up some steep hills. It is substantially built of cement concrete. It has a strong roof, handsomely finished within, and a commodious vestry in the rear. It is well finished and furnished, and the interior appearance is very pleasing. It will accommodate about 250 people. The day of opening was a high day. Many persons were unable to find a place in the church. Two services were held, and the following day was devoted to services connected with the Christian Endeavor Society, which has contributed nobly to the funds. The platform furniture, costing $50, was supplied by the younger people. The friends at Oberlin are highly delighted with their church, and an interest has been awakened in the district which has resulted in a considerable number of additions.

Our work as a whole continues to move somewhat slowly. This may arise in a measure from the financial condition of the island, and the temporal circumstances of the people. Our people, who are almost enti ely of the poor, are experiencing a struggle to procure the necessaries of life. Some of our Kingston members have had to leave the city and island in search of work. This makes a drain upon us.

Jamaica is emerging slowly from a political as well as financial crisis. Our present governor arrived a little more than a year ago. Soon after his arrival it was made clear that the island was in a state of insolvency, arising from failing income and increasing expenditure—chiefly the latter. Various commissions of inquiry were appointed, both by the governor and by the Imperial Government. These resulted in some not very pleasing revelations. Mr. Chamberlain made a call to halt, and said some wise things and some otherwise. The latter aroused the ire of our Jamaica legislators and there was a wordy warfare. Retrenchment, however, was insisted on, and the various departments were thoroughly overhauled. There was strenuous opposition on the part of all officials to the cutting down of official salaries, some of which appear to be quite out of proportion to our means and the ability of those receiving them. But this is just human nature. Some of the underlings were reduced and some dismissed. The Government Medical Service was cut down and hospitals reduced. Of course, this would be felt only by the poor. The Public Works department was cut down. Well, that would only throw laborers out of work. And then there was a great onslaught made on Elementary Education. We had nearly one thousand Primary Schools. A commission was appointed consisting of gentlemen concerning whom it may reasonably be doubted if they had ever been in an elementary school in their lives. They belonged, too, to a class who are no advocates for the education of black people. When they reported it was to recommend the closing of two hundred and fifty schools! The friends of the people, ministers chiefly, at once took the field and have fought determinedly against the perpetration of such an outrage. And they have succeeded. Modification will be made, and some unnecessary schools will be closed, but the number will be below one hundred. The result will be that some economy will be effected, but as some amalgamated schools will be larger than were some of those closed, the saving will not be great, and really better schools will be secured. The government will spend $300,000 on Elementary Education this year.

However, retrenchment has been effected in various directions, and an increased tariff has brought additional revenue, and the result is that the government is now about $350,000 better off than it was a year ago, with improvement still indicated.

Our Legislative Council will meet next month, under conditions considerably changed to those which have existed for some years. The power of legislation has been largely reduced. It will be found that Jamaica has almost reverted to a Crown Colony. Mr. Chamberlain has insisted on the addition to the council of four nominated members in addition to the present ex-officio members. This will give a working majority to the government which will enable them to carry all their measures. If this is persisted in it is possible that most of the members elected by the people here will resign. A new colonial secretary, who is practically prime minister, has just been sent out, who, it is expected, will hold the reins with a tight hand.

There is some compensation for being partially deprived of what some call "our constitutional rights and privileges" in the fact that the British Government is disposed to help us to our feet again. The first practical sign of this is that a contract with a large shipping firm has just been signed in England to provide fast steamers to establish a direct line to run fortnightly between England and this island. The object is to provide facilities for us to send fruit to the mother country. The fruit trade is regarded is being likely to prove our financial salvation. This scheme will cost $200,000 per annum, of which England will pay a half. In view of this many are throwing up their hats (metaphorically) and singing, "There's a good time coming." So may it be!

I write of these things because they have an important bearing on the religious life of the community. A people rarely prosper in religious things while they are kept on the lowest rungs of the social ladder, and no opportunity given them to rise.

H. C. Cord.

I feel that I must pay a tribute of respect to the memory of my old friend and brother, H. C. Cord, of Warrensburg, Mo., a notice of whose death has already appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

I became intimately acquainted with H. C. Cord in 1859. He was a man of sound, common sense, a warm-hearted friend, a patriotic citizen, an earnest Christian.

Farewell, for a little while, my beloved brother! I confidently expect to meet you in that land to the eye of flesh invisible, but to the eye of faith a glorious and eternal reality.

J. C. REYNOLDS.

RISKS

Are run by every woman who has household cares. It is so easy just to run out of the warm house into the fresh air, to pin a piece of lace to the clothes line. It is also easy to take cold in doing so. Then perhaps comes suppression and kindred evils. Whenever there is any disturbance of the normal womanly function Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription may be relied upon to re-establish perfect health. It is strictly a temperance medicine, containing no alcohol or whisky, neither opium, cocaine nor other narcotic.

"Several years ago I suffered severely from female weakness, prolapsus and menorrhagia, and used 'Favorite Prescription' with splendid effect," writes Fannie Shelton, of Washington, Iowa. "Glad I have not needed it for a few years past but if I should have a return of the old trouble would surely try 'Favorite Prescription.' I have recommended it to a number of my lady friends. I always tell them to try a bottle and if they are not benefited by it I will pay for the medicine. In every case they have spoken in praise of it."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well.

BRITANNIA SOLA!

Is England to stand alone? Must she dwell alone among the nations? Such a condition is not impossible. Britain is not the first nation threatened with absolute isolation. Sometimes, indeed, in the mysterious order of Divine Providence it is ordained for a people that it must take a position of utter insulation. For instance, God said of his ancient elect people that they should "dwell alone." There was a time when England had to meet the world in arms. That happened at one period of the awful Napoleonic era. Our fathers did not quail. We lost America through the folly of King George, but out of the terrifiic storm and stress and strain we emerged far stronger than we went into the struggle against the Continent during the height of Napoleon's ascendancy. The issue of the present conflict in South Africa will be that this nation will in a few months be victorious over the infatuated Boer oligarchy, and will be in possession of an army of a quarter of a million trained veterans, who have gone through war on the new and hitherto unknown conditions which it was predicted would make war impossible. It is intensely interesting to us in England to observe the raving delirium of the Continental press. Foreign interference has been the main hope of Kruger and Reitz. But there will be no interposition. There is little doubt that America would have been very violently interfered with by a vast Continental coalition during the war with Spain but for the firm friendship of England. Some of us who live in London know much more of what was going on than you in America can learn. With your small though excellent fleet you could not have ventured to resist the combined threats of Russia, Germany and France. But England spoiled one of the most infamous international conspiracies ever hatched. And will you, my American friends, mark the fact that England has incurred the virulent hatred of immense numbers of Continentals because of her action on behalf of America at this juncture? This is why some of us feel hurt at the attitude of many Americans now that we should be grateful for sympathy, though we neither ask or expect any material help. We shall not need that. As our Italian friends say, and Italy is our faithful European sister, "Britanni fara da se!" Yes! Britain will help herself. In a few weeks we have transported an army of nearly 200,000 men for a distance of 7,000 miles, and we can send a million if there should be necessity. These are no idle boasts, for the whole empire is up in the fiercest determination to see this iniquitous Boer conspiracy crushed. The colonies are all aflame. The young lions are roaring. The spirit which has been kindled is one which is prepared to defy the world.

THE HYSTERICAL CONTINENTALS.

May I observe that foreign interference has never been more than a figment of the imaginative brain of the hysterical Continental journalists? The necessity, however, of a European combination against Great Britain at so opportune a moment as the present has been preached to such an extent and with such a show of semi-official inspiration by the Continental press, that what was at first nothing more than a mere phantom of journalistic cupidity began to assume almost a concrete shape amongst the more ignorant of the European classes. It was the gutter press of Paris that first started the cry. It had the effect of inflaming the jealous and revengeful imagination of immense classes throughout the Continent. Even journals of standing have been drawn into the vortex of the mælstrom of prejudice, and they have vied with the most vicious prints in pandering to the clamor of the unwashed mob. Thus it has come to pass that in St. Petersburg, Vienna, Berlin and Amsterdam, a more or less universal pæan goes up for the clipping of John Bull's claws, the drawing of his teeth and the twisting of his tail.

WHO ARE BRITAIN'S FRIENDS?

But there is another side to all this, and it happens that this is the more important side. Britain is not only going to come forth from this fray with her escutcheon brighter than it has ever shone in all history, but she is at this moment in such a position of international impregnability that not a single nation will dare even to suggest interference. Nor would any nation attempt to do so even if it dared. Let me point out why. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times newspaper has just been dealing in a very pointed despatch with European opinion on the South African difficulty. He wrote: "Not only is the prospect of a Continental coalition for the purpose of coercing Britain more remote than ever, but the confusion among the Great Powers themselves, resulting from the British reverses in South Africa, is undeniable." Things have come about curiously. For instance, here is a remarkable development. In Germany the Emperor William stands almost alone as the friend and sympathizer of this country. But in this matter it is the Kaiser and not the misled German people who speaks for the German nation. The world has had no greater proof of the power and influence of the German Emperor than that now grandly furnished as he stands in the breach of to-day, reproving and smoothing the passions of his countrymen in the mistaken attitude they have taken up. But as the Kaiser is supported in his opinion by the official and better informed classes, so in France and Russia those who are in a position to grasp the real meaning of the war, its potentialities and possibilities, have cast in their lot with Great Britain.

WHAT THE BEST MINDS IN EUROPE FEEL.

I have thus tried to put before my American readers what I am anxious that they should understand. I have tried to show what is the true and authoritative opinion on the Continent, for surely, this authoritative feeling is rather to be taken than the wild vaporings of the bulk of the European press. In the highest and most powerful circles on the Continent the necessity has never been more generally felt than at the present moment for England to occupy a prominent position in Europe. To humiliate her, therefore, in South Africa, or even an attempt to do so, would frustrate all hope of that end being achieved. The better informed of our Continental neighbors know perfectly well that our struggle with the Boer oligarchy is in the cause of that freedom and equality of race which have ever been the guiding stars of British colonization. Englishmen were not the only Outlanders in the Transvaal, neither were British industry and British enterprise alone crippled and endangered by the unjust exactions of the Transvaal Government. It is entirely a mistaken notion that the bulk of the mining property in the Transvaal is vested in the hands of British capitalists. We have it on the authority of Mr. Hays Hammond, an eminent American who has lived long in the Transvaal, that, according to his recent interesting article in the Engineering Magazine, British interests are in a minority, the majority of the shares being held in Germany, France and other countries of the Continent. Let my American readers grasp this fact, that English rule in the Transvaal means the sweeping away of the flagrant abuses that have hitherto existed, and thus the amelioration of the conditions of working consequent upon good government must, of necessity, enhance the value of the mining property. Therefore, the interests of Europe are in unison with our own. The freedom of the Transvaal from its corrupt little ring of rulers means the enrichment of those nations, the prejudiced and ignorant of whose inhabitants now abuse and vilify us. Hence it is that those who have any authority to intervene are less than ever disposed to arrest our hand in the work we are doing.

THE DRAGON'S TAIL.

I am reading a very interesting new theological book, by an author hitherto unknown, who has written this work at a very advanced age, and has spent many years in studying his subject. He is Mr. Edmund Micklewood, of Plymouth. His book is entitled "The False Prophet of These Last Days Preceding the Second Appearing of Christ." When I say that the author announces that he has discovered the "Key to the Revelation," I fear that some of my readers will smile incredulously, as I did at first. But on reading a few chapters I found that I had met with a writer who is as genuine a student as Mr. Russell, who wrote that wonderfully interesting volume, "The Parousia." Only a few men seem to be gifted with combined sense and industry to write on the subject of the Apocalypse. More nonsense of the sanctified sort has been written in this direction than in any other, and nothing is so provoking as sanctified nonsense. Mr. Micklewood seeks to prove that the End of the Age is not so near by many a year as many people, such as Guinness & Baxter, have imagined. Yet, he thinks we are in the period of the Ages when there are preliminary preparations in Providence for the "Time of the End." And in a truly masterly way he argues his thesis. There is not a fanatical line in the book. All is sober, reasonable and lucid. He identifies the Dragon with pagan Rome, and the Beast with papal Rome. The Tail of the great Dragon which swept a third part of the stars from the firmament is the subject of one of the most interesting and scholarly chapters I ever read in any book. I am aware that many of us who call ourselves Disciples of Christ eschew eschatology as a study. I am not ashamed always to say that I consider the "Science of Last Things" to be as important a branch of Christian study as any other department. I have been struck with the want of interest amongst us as a people in this direction, and I do not hesitate to say that herein we lose much. We abandon our people too much to fanatics.

QUIT DRUG COFFEE AND USES POSTUM FOOD COFFEE.

"While on a visit to a relative in New Hampshire, who runs a fruit farm, I found on the supper table what appeared to be a strong cup of coffee. I usually drank tea at night and they knew it, but asked me to try the coffee, saying it was Postum Food Coffee, and the reason they served it was that they found when they got up early in the summer mornings and drank a cup of coffee to brace up on, they generally had a headache or sick stomach along about noon, and that their grocer persuaded them sometime before my visit to try Postum Food Coffee. After a week's trial they adopted it for the family, and had never returned to the ordinary coffee, saying that it had worked a wonderful change in all of them—no more sick headaches, no more sick stomachs.

"For two weeks I used Postum, and when I returned to Boston I banished tea and coffee from the table forever. My complexion has made a decided change for the better, and it goes without saying that I feel greatly benefited. My nights are not sleepless now, as they were when I was a coffee drinker." Mrs. M. E. Curtis, Canterbury St., Boston, Mass.

New York Letter.

The third annual dinner of the Disciples' Club, of New York, was held at the 56th Street Church on Tuesday eve, the 27th of February. A goodly number of people were present, and according to reports fully enjoyed the evening. President Hunt presided in his usual easy and genial style; the women of the 56th Street congregation supplied the gastronomic delights of the occasion; and after dinner a number of distinguished gentlemen—Brethren E. J. Teagarden, of Danbury, Conn.; Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore; M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, and B. Q. Denham, of New York—made addresses respectively upon the following themes: Christian Union, Christian Journalism, Christian Progress and City Evangelization. There is some talk of making a number of important changes in the character of and the efforts to be put forth by the club.

We had the pleasure of a visit from Bro. Teagarden and wife while in the city. He reports the work of the church at Danbury as ever upward in all departments. Bro. Teagarden recently began the eleventh year of his pastoral service in that beautiful little city, at which time the church and many citizens of Danbury gave expression to their grateful feelings for the ten years of splendid work he had done. Some of these expressions were in a more substantial form than words. More than 600 people have been brought into the fellowship of the church during his ministry at Danbury, and a beautiful church house has been built and dedicated to the Lord. The Danbury congregation is the strongest church of the Disciples of Christ in New England. Bro. B. B. Tyler is to begin a series of evangelistic meetings with this church, April 15. Last year's financial report showed all obligations met and a balance of something like $150 in the treasury, and not once was an appeal made from the pulpit for current expenses. Bro. Teagarden's work is another illustration of the wisdom of long pastorates. May the example of his work inspire other preachers and churches.

Bro. John L. Keevil and the Second Church Brooklyn, are in the midst of a series of evangelistic meetings, having begun February 25. A number of persons in that city recently became obedient to the faith, and others are almost persuaded. The Second Church (formerly known as the Green Point Church) is making commendable progress both in material and spiritual things. We have heard nothing as to the definite results of the evangelistic meetings now in progress at the 119th Street Church, except that the attendance and interest were growing. A thirteen nights' engagement has been announced at the 56th Street Church beginning on March 4, with B. Q. Denham speaker, and a number of soloists and a male quartette as singers, and Mrs. Elizabeth Flower Willis, reader. A "conversational period" will be a feature of each service, so says the announcement. It is to be hoped that all these special meetings will result in the salvation of souls. On Lord's day, Feb. 25th, M. E. Harlan, of the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, being absent, his wife, Mrs. Jennie E. Harlan, occupied the pulpit both at the morning and the evening services, delivering on each occasion a sermon, which were reported in part in a number of the New York Monday papers.

If agreeable to all concerned the Atlantic States Conference will be held this year, May 15-17, with the church at Hagerstown, Md. To put the conference one week earlier would bring it in conflict with the Western Pennsylvania Association, and this complication we wish to avoid. If we meet two weeks earlier the Ecumenical Missionary Conference will be in session in New York, and certainly many of those on whom we must depend in the confereece would desire to attend the missionary meetings in this city. So that it seems we could not have it earlier in the season. Will the ministers of the Eastern states drop me a line saying whether this date is suitable to them; and if it is, will not all plan to attend this conference? We must decide on some aggressive measures of Eastern evangelization at the Hagerstown Conference. Will not the preachers and other representatives attending the conference before coming to Hagerstown ascertain in a general way just what their respective congregations will do in the matter of supporting general or city evangelistic work in the Eastern states? If you will do this it will in all probability simplify matters at the Hagerstown meeting.

The Rev. Madison C. Peters, formerly pastor of the Blooming Dale Reformed Church, this city, was immersed by Dr. Robert C. MacArthur at Calvary Baptist Church, New York, on Friday night, March 2nd. He did not make a statement setting forth his reasons for his change of mind on the question of Christian baptism, as was generally supposed he would do; but rather he preached a plain, old-fashioned discourse on "Justification by Faith." He preached on March 4th in Dr. A. J. Gordon's old church, Boston, and will about Easter preach a discourse in Calvary Baptist Church, New York, in which he will set forth in detail the causes of his change from the Reform to the Baptist system of teaching and practice. He has promised me an interview for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which I hope will not be without interest or spiritual profit.

Indiana Letter—A Reminiscence.

In August, 1870, I was called to Logansport, Indiana. I was then quite a young man. Logansport was a city of ten thousand souls and was situated at the junction of the Wabash and Eel Rivers. It is still situated there, although spread out and grown much larger. The old courthouse stood on the point near the junction of the rivers. In this house the little church met for worship on the Lord's day. About thirty persons comprised the membership. All of these lived in the country save five or six families. Of the families living in town and affiliating with the church at that time three were prominent in bearing the burdens. These were Dr. J. M. Justice, Jackson Dobbins and J. W. Springer. These were the elders of the church. Three better men and better elders I have never known. Official boards were then unknown amongst us, and the elders took their scriptural place in the church. These told me that if I would devote myself to building up the cause they would be responsible for my salary, $1,200 a year, and it was all paid promptly each week.

For the first month forty-two congress chairs, occupied by the lawyers during court, held my audience, seated within the railing. Soon the audience grew and a Sunday-school of over two hundred scholars were in attendance, and so far as I know the school has never fallen below this number. These elders were each a teacher of a Bible class, as elders ought to be. For a long time, John Emmons, my son in the faith, led the singing without an organ. He afterwards became one of the sweetest and most useful singing evangelists in the state.

At the end of sixteen months we occupied our new stone chapel, a property worth $12,000. Isaac Errett dedicated it and Prof. A. C. Hopkins led the singing on that happy day. The debts were all provided for and paid before these men came. Bro. Errett devoted the time to preaching two great sermons on that day.

We never had a weekly prayer-meeting nor a protracted meeting while I was there, yet we had accessions constantly and the church soon grew to 200 members.

The Wabash was famous for chills and fevers in those days. We kept an ounce quinine bottle on the breakfast table and took the drug with our meals, and still we shook with the ague and burned with fever. Dr. Justice was our family physician, and a more kind hearted, faithful, thoughtful, attentive physician I never knew. When I was out of the city a few days preaching elsewhere he would drive to my home first every morning and inquire of my wife if she and the baby were well; if she would not come up and spend the day with Mrs. Justice so as not to be lonesome. He would say: "Have you plenty of money? You better take this bill." He was wise and strong in his will, but gentle and tender as a woman. At a ripe old age God took this grand and noble man to himself. I have seldom known a better or wiser man. His memory is very dear to us. He was a host in that church as long as he lived. Jackson Dobbins has long since gone home. He, too, was a splendid man. A dearer family than Bro. Springer's I have never known. I believe he still lives. Most of the old people have died and gone to God. I cannot mention their names here, but I loved them all and never had any trouble with any of them. At the end of three years Dr. Justice told me that my wife would soon die if we remained there. To save her life, and for no other reason, we moved away.

That has been a good church all these years. It has greatly grown in numbers and power for good. The house became too small, and it has been much enlarged, I understand. This is a brief account of the rising of this church into a place of power and influence in that city. I speak not now of the good record it is now making and the excellent work it is doing. In twenty-nine years this church has never taken a backward step. May it continue to abound in the work of the Lord.

Colorado Letter.

Your question as to how to capture the cities for the Christ is an inquiry that cannot be answered in a brief time, nor in a limited space. It is an exceedingly difficult question, and as important as it is difficult. Our country cannot be saved without the salvation of our cities. The world cannot be successfully evangelized without the Christianization of our own beloved land. These truths must be to you, and to all who will read this letter, self-evident.

I may as well confess that I have never known a city that had been captured for Christ. Do you know of such a case? How was the capture effected?

In all the cities of our land, both large and small, there are, of course, men and women in considerable numbers who belong to the Christ. There are households which may, in truth, be called Christian families; but this does not signify that the city in which they live has been captured for Christ. The major part of the people in our cities have not, in any true sense, surrendered to the Son of God. It is true that the greater part of the population, even in our great cities, treat the man, Jesus, with a formal respect. This statement is true of many who do not even claim to be Christians. Their recognition of the Lordship of Mary's Son consists of this; but of nothing more. It is useless to inquire: Have they been captured for Christ? Certainly not! Their daily lives do not even suggest a vital connection with him who is "The Way, The Truth, and The Life."

In one of our conventions, a few years ago, an enthusiastic brother gave an address on "How to Capture the Cities for the Christ." The address was interesting. The speaker gave concrete illustrations of the manner in which the cities of our land can be captured for Christ. Two cities were named. One has a population of a little more than 55,000, the other has a population of a little more than 30,000. In each place successful evangelistic meetings had recently been conducted—successful, as success is commonly reckoned among us, i. e., a number of persons confessed the Christ and were immersed. These efforts were made in the interest, especially, of the Christian Church; but in neither of the two cities named is there now, nor has there ever been, a self-supporting congregation of the Christian Church. Even if successful congregations of Disciples of Christ had been founded it would not be proper to say that the city had been captured, for what is a congregation of 500 Christians in a population of from thirty to fifty thousand?

When, however, we consider the question in a large and, therefore, in a rational way, account must be taken of the work done by all in the municipality under consideration who bear the name of the Lord. Many persons, it must be borne in mind, truly surrender to the Christ, are taken captive by him, and zealously serve him, who are not as intelligent in matters pertaining to the Christian religion as some of us think we are! They may have a zeal which is commendable, united with an ignorance which is nothing less than deplorable; but such persons as are here thought of are bond-servants of the Lord Jesus. They believe in him, they love him, they serve him as they understand him, just as we do, and there is no reasonable doubt that, if necessity required, they would die for him. Such men and women, by their enthusiasm, by the purity of their lives and by their perseverance win others to the service of our common Lord. But with all the efforts that have been and are put forth it would be difficult to name an American city that has been captured for Christ.

Thus you see that the question is not the same as: HOW CAN THE PEOPLE WHO ARE CURRENTLY KNOWN AS DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, OR CHRISTIANS, ESTABLISH A FLOURISHING CHURCH IN A GIVEN CITY? This is not the question. We may have a half dozen or even twenty strong congregations in a city; but the place has not for that reason been captured for Christ. The work is much larger and far more difficult.

This work—the capture of the cities for the Christ—can not be done by protracted meetings. Let this be regarded as a fact. This method has been tried by Disciples and others, tried again and again; but the cities remain the seats of the synagogues of Satan. What then? Are such efforts in the cities destitute of value? God forbid! They are of great value. Some of the most useful persons in the service of the Christ have been enlisted in such meetings. Let it be understood that the Church of Christ cannot do its work as the work ought to be done without special evangelistic meetings. But no city has been won to the Master in this way. Boston, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, in our own land, and London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Dublin and Edinburg, beyond the sea, have gone on sinning, notwithstanding the great meetings of Moody and Sankey. The numbers of men and women who began to live pure lives as a result of these meetings cannot be known in time. Eternity alone can reveal this.

It is equally certain, I believe, that the cities will not be captured by the regular, formal, stately, usual services of the church. More than these are needed.

How to reach the masses is with many of us a serious problem. The way to reach the masses is simple enough—go to them! This is all there is of it. The masses are not difficult to reach when we really desire to reach them. The masses do not flee from us; nor do they come to us. They are about us, and we can go to them whenever we wish to do so.

But more of this next week. May the Lord guide us in this and in all similar matters.

Texas Letter.

For one I am glad that that old and fundamental question, the divinity of Christ, is again receiving attention. In New York City, one of the best possible places for the discussion, it is a lively issue just now, and I hope the fight may become general all along the line. The question contains the heart-blood of our holy religion, and there must be no foolishness in connection with it. The issue is clear and there must be no compromise, neither must there be armistice nor surrender. Either Christ is divine or he is an impostor. There is no half-way ground. Multitudes would like to meet us half way and call him a great and good man, the greatest and best the world ever saw, but only a man after all. The pastor of the Unitarian Church, of this city, recently expressed surprise to me when talking of the concert readings used in our congregational worship, that they were all taken from the Bible. Many of theirs also, he said, came from the Bible, but many of them were from Emerson and other eminent but uninspired men. Thus Paul and Peter and all the other writers of the Old Book are on the same plane of this modern Bostonian. How can we avoid a conflict under such circumstances? If we believe as we profess we can't do it without acting the coward and deserting the field.

To the woman of Samaria, who spoke of the coming Messiah, he said: "I that speak unto thee am he." To Philip, who said: "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us," his answer was: "Have I been so long with you, and yet thou hast not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And he allowed doubting Thomas, without a word of protest, to cry, "My Lord and my God!" All of which means that he is either God or an impostor, and we must either accept him or reject him.

The second day of March is a great day in Texas. This greatness rests on three great facts: it is independence day, it is the birthday of Sam Houston, it is the day on which the United States recognized her as an independent republic, and it is the day on which the corner stone of her magnificent capitol building was laid. The day brings joy to every patriotic heart in the Lone Star State. It is the largest of the almost fifty states in the republic, and we people down here believe it destined to be the greatest. From southeast to northwest it is more than 800 miles; it is about 750 miles broad, and has an area of 265,780 square miles, or 170,099,200 acres. Looking at this land of to-day one wonders and smiles that there was ever any opposition to its admission into the union. But the facts are that the Senate at one time did reject it by a vote of 35 to 16. But later, when they came to themselves, this foolish vote was reversed and Texas was enrolled among the sisterhood of states.

Miss Bertha Mason, having decided to return to the Mexican mission field, Mrs. Clara Waldron, of Ft. Forth, has been chosen to fill her place as corresponding secretary of our C. W. B. M. work.

The work at El Paso, our western gateway, under the care of R. D. Shultz, is prospering. This is one of our state mission points which bids fair to be self-sustaining soon.

The Central Church, of this city, has organized another mission Sunday school in the thickly settled residence portion known as "East Dallas," which we hope will prove to be the nucleus of another church.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

Soon after my installation as chaplain of the House of Representatives I found that some of my opinions concerning that august body needed revision. Cartoons in the daily papers and colored journals, stories of the great lobbies maintained at the Capitol, and insinuations in the religious press had produced the impression that the average member of Congress was apt to be a selfish, corrupt and lobby-ridden official. The House cloak room suggested a place where men "loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." I wondered if they would allow the chaplain to go where they would be drinking, hatching political plots, etc.

As an officer of the House I had access to all parts of the chamber and to the committee rooms, and soon discovered that I was associated with clean, honorable, courteous gentlemen, who were in the main an honor to the people who had sent them to Congress. I am confident that the common representation of our highest legislative assembly as a corrupt body is a vile slander.

A congressman said to me that if any one had ever approached him with a view of influencing his vote in an improper way he had never known it. An employee of the House, whose term of office extended over a period of twenty years, said that occasionally a man came to Congress whose vote could be bought, but this fact was soon known and the member found himself without standing or influence.

I am glad, also, to bear witness to the general sobriety of the congressmen. Although upon the floor of the House nearly every day during the entire session, I did not once see a member in a drunken condition. The improvement in the habits of our public men in this respect is one of the noteworthy features in the official life of the capital city. I was told by an old employee at the Capitol that a quarter of a century ago it was not uncommon to see several members on the floor of the House "beastly drunk." They would come in in such a state of intoxication that a page would have to lead them to their seats, and at times, essaying to pilot themselves, would sit upon the floor with a jar that would be heard through the entire chamber.

I was told by several well-informed persons that there was not a single member of the Fifty-third Congress who could be called a drunkard, while the number of teetotalers was large. This improvement in the morals of our legislators is due in part to the higher standard of public sentiment. Offences once condoned are now certain to cause a member to be left at home by his constituents. An election to Congress as a cure for the drink habit may seem a novel remedy, but I am satisfied that in some cases it has proven efficacious.

If I had previously entertained the notion that the average congressman might be somewhat lax in his morals, I thought, too, he was likely to be a giant in intellect. I expected to find a considerable number who were orators and statesmen. My ideal of the better type of congressman was a composite of Clay, Webster and Calhoun. The collapse of my ideal was not as sudden or complete as was Charlotte Bronte's estimate of Thackeray, but the story will illustrate the case in point.

It is said that Miss B. had never met Thackeray, but she idealized him with a passion of idealization. "Behold, a lion cometh out of the north!" she quoted, under her breath, as Thackeray entered the drawing room. When some one repeated the remark to him he heaved a great sigh and said: "And I am nothing but a poor excuse of an Englishman, ravenous for my dinner." At dinner Miss Bronte was placed opposite Thackeray by her own request. "And I had," said he, "the miserable humiliation of seeing her ideal of me disappearing down my throat, as everything went into my mouth and nothing came out of it, until at last, as I took my fifth potato, she leaned across with clasped hands and tears in her eyes and breathed imploringly: 'O, Mr. Thackeray—don't!'"

There were orators in the Fifty-third Congress, men who could fill the galleries and command the attention of both sides of the chamber, but the number was not large.

One Monday morning, in the early days of my ministry, I met a colored uncle driving an ox team along an East Virginia road. He stopped his team and said: "Are you de young man dat preached down at Olive Branch Church las' night?" "Yes, sir," I replied with a gracious smile in anticipation of the forthcoming compliment. "Well, sah, I was dyar an' I sutney did enjoy your text." The preacher can congratulate himself on the fact that he at least had a good text.

"The worst speaks something good, if all lack sense;
God taketh a text and preacheth patience."

But the speech of the average congressman does not even possess the virtue of a good text, and his fellow members go about their own ways and miss the benefit that might be derived from the discipline of patience.

Under some such title as "Capitol Chat," "Under the Dome," etc., the newspapers of the country devote considerable space to gossip concerning our lawmakers and the doings of Congress. One wonders, at times, how much of this gossip is true and how much is evolved from the fertile brain of the reporter. The following incident may throw some light upon this question:

One day, as I took my place at the desk a few minutes before the speaker called the House to order, the journal clerk said to me: "We haven't quite finished the j urnal yet. Make your prayer a little longer than usual, please." I think I added a sentence or two. When through the clerk said, "It is all right; much obliged." I was surprised to receive, some weeks later, a clipping from the Minneapolis Journal containing the following story, which I am told appeared in newspapers in all parts of the country:

"The Rev. Mr. Bagby, the chaplain of the last House, with but a single exception, always cut his invocations short at the opening of the House each morning, and the reason for this one long prayer has just leaked out. One morning during the last session the clerks at the Speaker's desk were unable to find the House journal, without the reading of which the business of the House could not be begun. The chaplain had begun his prayer and was drifting along, when the reading clerk touched him on the arm and in an excited whisper said: 'Keep on with the prayer until we find the journal; we have lost it.' The chaplain continued, and a few seconds later, the reading clerk again nudged him, requesting that he continue longer, as they were still unable to find the missing volume. 'Don't stop until I tell you,' he said. 'Keep this thing up, so that we don't get into a scrape. We will find it in a minute.' The preacher continued his prayer and the surprise of the members grew to wonder as they listened to the long-continued invocation of the Rev. Mr. Bagby. Finally, the missing book was found and the clerk nudged the chaplain, who brought his lengthy prayer to a somewhat abrupt end."

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation. yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

On the Wing in Midwinter.

George Eliot said: "You must love your work, not always looking over the edge of it, wanting your play to begin." And it is true. A certain amount of concentration and a certain degree of application is necessary to success. However, every man's work has its boundary line, though some women claim that their work is never done. Surcease from toil is quite as necessary as work. The writer, who left St Louis on the evening of February 8th, on a businesss trip, which will include a few of the leading cities of the East, as a means of recreation and diversion takes up his pen to write in a familiar way of scenes and impressions along the route.

A sudden change in the temperature in St. Louis, with an occasional flake of snow patting a pedestrian on the cheek, would seem to promise blizzard weather, but not so. Friday in Cincinnati was as fair and beautiful as any winter day could be, and Saturday was a model winter day.

The B. & O. Southwestern runs along the north bank of the Ohio for some distance coming into Cincinnati, and to one familiar with daily lore there come the words, "On the banks of the Ohio," and lifting the eye to the hills and valleys beyond, he welcomes the passing through his mind of the words of "Old Kentucky Home." All would not enjoy this same experience, for the ancestors of all did not come from Kentucky. The writer, however, can enjoy this to the full, for his mother's childhood home was on the Kentucky River at the mouth of Savurn Creek. In the spring of 1893 he visited with her the scenes of her childhood; scenes which had been shut out from her view by distance for fifty years and more, and which, with all things transient, will not again come within the range of her vision.

Two hours of leisure time in Cincinnati offered but limited opportunity for seeing the brethren. Bro. B. L. Smith was at his desk in the office of the American Christian Missionary Society. He had time for words of greeting. At the office of the Christian Standard Bro. Errett turned from his work and was very cordial. Sister Mattie Boteler, office editor of the Outlook, might have been receiving inspiration for a charming story, such as she so frequently writes. Be that as it may, a knock at her door brought forth a cordial "come in!" In the editorial sanctum Bro. Lord and Bro. B. L. Smith were in conference, evidently devising plans for the advancement of the kingdom's interest as represented in the American Christian Missionary Society. The greeting received here was, however, no less cordial. After evening dinner Bro. and Sister W. A. Foster were found in their pleasant quarters at Westminster Hotel, Lane Seminary grounds, at Walnut Hills, surrounded by their interesting children, Misses Bertha and Edith, and Master Alvin. The days of '94 and '95, when Bro. Foster was pastor of the First Church in St. Louis, were the subject of much of the conversation. Many questions were asked about the St. Louis brethren and the writer charged to carry kind regards and fraternal wishes to all St. Louis friends. Parents and children vied with each other in questions asked. Bro. Foster does good work wherever he goes, and no man is better seconded in his life work than is he by wife, and children, too. The writer speaks from personal knowledge.

There is a group of reasons for selecting the Chesapeake & Ohio as the "best route" to Washington, but weighty as all of them are they needn't be mentioned to one whose great-grandparents were from Virginia. Such an one wants to feel the thrill incident to setting foot on Virginia soil and drawing a deep breath of Virginia air, as well as calling up bits of American history; for American history had its birth on Virginia soil, and many of the wars of the revolution and the rebellion were fought under its skies.

The scenery along much of the way from the banks of the Ohio to the banks of the Potomac is such as to hold the eye. The train service is superb. There are other trains as good, but none better than the "F. F. V., Limited," accommodation and time and all else considered.

The traveler who failed to set forward his timepiece sixty minutes at Clifton Forge is greatly surprised when the Washington monument comes into view an hour ahead of time!

Washington was found rather quiet for midwinter, though, of course, the stranger sojourning in it could see but little of that which engaged the time and attention of "officialdom." The pleasure of meeting Bro. A. W. Starratt, formerly of Mount Sterling, Ky., and later of St. Louis, where he was a member at Mt. Cabanne, awaited the writer. Bro. Starratt, upon his removal to the Capital City, in September last, found a church home at the Garfield Memorial Church on Vermont Avenue, and proceeded at once to take an active interest in the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor. He is a member of a large class of young people taught by Sister Seeger. Meeting with this class of splendid young people was one of the many privileges enjoyed on the Lord's day. Bro. W. W. Van Arsdall is superintendent of the Sunday-school. According to the courtesy he usually extends to visiting brethren, he had "the brother from Missouri" to say a few words. This led to an acquaintance with Bro. R. A. Balderson, formerly of Kansas City, now greatly devoted to his part in the Master's vineyard here, which consists in assisting, not only in the Sunday school at the Vermont Avenue Church, but in superintending a mission school, and also with Sister Dr. Harris, formerly of Springfield, Mo., whose interest in Christian Endeavor is telling for good. Bro. F. D. Power was in the pulpit both morning and evening. Good congregations listened to both his sermons. Readers generally are aware that he has been with this church now for twenty-five years. A week previous he had asked for $1,000, needed to make improvements and repairs, and he announced that all but $275 was in hand. He is greatly beloved and shepherds his flock in a manner worthy of emulation. His hand and his heart appears, not simply within the limits of the field of the Vermont Avenue Church, but throughout the city, and it may be said, throughout the brotherhood. In the morning he set forth the difference between the Christian and the non-Christian, based upon Deut. 32:31, and in the evening he presented some of the certainties which man must meet, based on the words of Paul: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation," etc. Both sermons were characteristic.

WOULD you rather buy lamp-chimneys, one a week the year round, or one that lasts till some accident breaks it?

Tough glass, Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," almost never break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Where can you get it? and what does it cost?

Your dealer knows where and how much. It costs more than common glass; and may be, he thinks tough glass isn't good for his business.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

The Sin of Liquor Selling—How End It.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I see in your issue of Feb. 8th, in the department of Christian Endeavor, Burris A. Jenkins, President of the University of Indianapolis, has contributed an article in which he criticises Pres. Hadley, of Yale University, on his plan of how to put an end to trusts. Pres. Jenkins says: "The whole matter"—according to Pres. Hadley's plan—"resolves itself into the education of the people on public questions, and the screwing of the people's courage up to act on their knowledge." Then Pres. Jenkins ridicules this educating process by saying: "In other words, Pres. Hadley's suggestion, which has been hailed as something great and new, is nothing more than the putting of salt on the bird's tail. It is but a superficial prescription which implies a long process of preparation," etc. Then Pres. Jenkins proceeds to ridicule the effort to put down the saloon by educating the people, in the same way. He says: "Now is it not the same with this matter of the saloon? How will you do away with it? Why, easily enough, says one; let's just prevent it. But who will prevent it? The people. But when will the people do it? When they are educated and obtain the moral backbone. And there you are at the same old stand, demanding a process of education." Then he runs against a metaphorical stone wall on a question of his own asking, through an imaginary objector. He says: "Do you mean to say, then, says the objector, that you would do nothing at all; fold your hands for a little more sleep?" Mark the answer: "By no means," says Pres. Jenkins, "but go at the good old process of studying the question of educating the people, and stiffening their spines to act on their knowledge. It's an old-time prescription, but a precious good one, and sanctioned by the Lord Christ."

Is this what you call, in military parlance, a "right about face?" Scores of young men in the colleges and the young people of the Christian Endeavor Society, to say nothing of the advanced thinkers in our brotherhood, will be delighted to learn that Pres. Jenkins is converted to the study of methods and conditions, and that he is now seeking to know that which is sanctioned by Jesus the Christ.

But let us accompany Pres. Jenkins in his investigation of methods. He says: "There are some good men who do not find in the saloon an unmixed evil." Then in this connection he propounds a question: "Why was it that there was a movement some time since in New York to sell liquor in certain of the churches, so as to provide more wholesome surroundings for its consumption?" Then he imagines an exclamation of horror from the reader. But, says Pres. Jenkins: "The men who engaged in that movement are not horrible. I know some of them, and they are God-fearing men."

The writer would venture to suggest that they are not God-fearing men all the time, or at least they have a very low conception of the teaching of God's Word. These are they against whom the Master pronounces a great woe. Jesus says: "Whoso shall cause one of these little ones which believe on me to stumole, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea" (Matt. 18:6, 7). So we see this is one method not sanctioned by the Lord Christ.

Next Method. "Then," says Pres. Jenkins, "there are the utterances of Dr. Rainsford of St. George's Church, New York, who insists that the saloon is a good thing for the rank and file of the poor. It is an assembling-place. It supplies amusements. In short, it is the poor man's club house. . . . Only the few are led to excess by it. The multitude are benefited." Smallpox, we might say, is not an unmixed evil. It is a good thing for the poor. It will give rest to the overburdened in the slums. The pest-house will afford an assembling-place. Amusements can be supplied, good books furnished. Why not this answer for a poor man's club house? Only the few will die. The multitude will have all the benefits. True, they will be scarred for life, but the scars are only skin deep, while those who frequent the saloon will have deeper scars. The character is warped and distorted, the body moral is wrecked by the association.

"The above is Dr. Rainsford's argument," says Pres. Jenkins. "No, he is no fiend; I know him, and I know he is a very fine type of English gentleman. One who loves the poor and studies their needs." We have an account given in Jewish history of a fellow who was much interested in the poor. He visited one who was so poor that "he had not where to lay his head," who had not taken food for forty days. In his sympathy, he directed the hungry man to command that the stones become bread. We are not informed as to whether this fellow was an English or a French gentleman, but no doubt he was one of much influence. Jesus gave him his title—he called him Satan—and directed him to the Word of God. Could it be that this fellow was the progenitor of the English gentleman of New York?

Pres. Jenkins says: "I am far from endorsing these views." Certainly. But to mention them is to more than half recommend them, and especially when their authors are lauded as "God-fearing men," and as a "very fine type of gentleman," etc. Some of the unsophisticated young men who may have read his article will be more than a decade in ridding themselves of these worse than useless methods. But, now since we are studying methods, how would a quarantine do for the saloon as well as for the smallpox? Pres. Jenkins says: "I am only seeking to show that there are many things to think of, and that we cannot deal with a great question like this in a jiffy." No, but we can place ourselves on God's side of this question in a jiffy. He further says: "You may rail at the saloonkeeper, and manufacture smoking rhetoric against him. But it would be more to the purpose for you to get to work and root out the business from the corner grocery, or the drugstore in your ward . . . For smoking words let's have some smokeless study of conditions, and some rapid-firing acts. One man who will do his duty in his own ward is worth two or three talkers on the stump."

Looks practical, don't it? Now let's investigate conditions at once. First, reconnoisance reveals the enemy entrenched behind a government license. There is your bird. Here ie your salt—"work and root out the business by study of conditions, and rapid-firing acts." Simple, isn't it? Let's see Pres. Jenkins make the application. Move on the enemy's works and you will have the pleasure of looking into the muzzle of one or more of Uncle Sam's thirteen-inch guns.

Remember that Uncle Sam is a partner in this business, and that he does not issue a license he will not defend. What next? Now Pres. Jenkins recommends that "we make a study of the Norwegian system." He says "there is some good in it." Well, suppose we should spend two or three more decades in introducing the Norwegian or Gothenburg system. We would still have the legalized saloon, and the government would still have the great fight to make. The Gothenburg system is only a modified license system.

All of the methods, so called, mentioned by him in his article, are worthless so far as we are concerned and are long since obsolete. They created a mere ripple of surprise when they were first suggested. Those who have carefully studied the liquor problem have long since swept past them. So that the man who would seriously suggest them to-day is necessarily looked upon as a back number. Pres. Jenkins has overlooked or at least failed to suggest God's method. It is expressed in just three words—Thou shalt not.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

GENESIS IN HARMONY WITH ITSELF AND SCIENCE. Published at $1.25. This work deals with the common difficulties of Genesis by a new exegesis arrived at through a careful study of the Hebrew original I maintain that the verses prior to Gen. 2:4 record events long anterior to the verses which follow. I show this to be in harmony with the whole Book. Among many things I deal with; local and universal floods, various races and languages prior to Babel, the locality of Eden, Nod and the Land of Cush. In short I harmonize Genesis with itself and Science. Send me a $1 note and I will mail you the book free. Pastor G. Rapkin, Christian Church, Margate, England.

Notes and News.

Southwest Missouri.

Beginning with Sedalia the undersigned recently made a trip to Southwest Missouri. The Central Church in Sedalia has just spent $7,500 on its house of worship. This building has now cost over $40,000. It is the largest and most beautiful house of worship owned among the churches of Christ in the state. Bro. Melvin Putnam, the minister, and the congregation deserve great credit in enlarging and beautifying this building. The East Side Church is prospering and gaining strength rapidly. F. F. Cook, who has ministered to them from the beginning, has constant additions and is held in the highest esteem among the members.

In our trip southward we domiciled one night with G. L. Bush at Windsor. Although Windsor has only about 2,500 people, he has made this one of the strongest churches in the state. He has even done better than this. Since he began his labors here he has sent seven young men from this community to our Bible colleges to educate themselves for the Christian ministry. This is a very high compliment to the efficiency and work of our brother.

We found that J. J. Lockhart had just held a meeting, with over fifty additions, at Clinton, Mo. The church has called him to minister to them. He has not yet accepted, but the prospects were good and it was hoped that he would do so.

B. F. Hill has now been six months at Nevada. During this time the Sunday-school has doubled and every department of church life and activity is on the increase. He is doing them great good. The best work that he has inaugurated is that $7,500 of the church debt must be paid this year. There is a good prospect that this, or even more, will be done. The writer preached morning and night to appreciative audiences, and highly enjoyed his visit.

Joplin is now the surprise of Missouri. At our last visit, in 1892, they had about 10,000 people. Now they claim 35,000. It matters not where you look you are surprised. The superintendent of the high school said to me: "Last fall our school board added ten teachers, and they have been compelled to add twelve more since. We have 1,100 more children in school this year than last." W. F. Turner, the pastor of the church, is working hard and with good prospects of success for a new church building. It is greatly needed, and it is believed that every member of the church will do their utmost to build a house that will be adequate for present and future demands. The members in South Joplin are also moving in the direction of building. This is a great need, and with proper efforts will succeed.

At Carthage we found W. A. Oldham both busy and hopeful. He is an active, busy pastor and moves among his people with the greatest ease. Just think of it: he even rides a wheel! Of their indebtedness, now $1,900, on the church, he says it must and will be paid this year. This will be a great blessing to the church which has borne this burden of debt for sixteen years. Carthage is a little city with 12,000 people. It is growing rapidly and is one of the most beautiful towns in America. The church is gaining constantly and has a bright future. M. S. Johnson also lives here and ministers at Jasper and Golden City.

In Springfield we have three churches. The College St. Church we learn has R. G. Sears supplying the pulpit for the present. As he was teaching at the Normal College we did not get to see him. The Washington Ave. Church has Bro. Haltom ministering to its people. His work is bringing splendid results. There have been near fifty additions during the few months he has labored for them. Bro. D. W. Moore, of the South St. Church, seemed to be in work up to his eyes. There have been near sixty additions since January 1st, and their house of worship has become too small to seat the regular congregations who attend. We were glad to see evidences of rapid and permanent growth in the cause in this city.

We also stopped for a few hours at Lamar. Bro. Blalock was moving his family and he did not put in his appearance at prayer-meeting. At the earnest request of the brethren we spoke to them on Foreign Missions. They have repaired and reseated their house of worship and everything seems to be moving along in good shape. Taking matters altogether, our cause in Southwest Missouri is moving along in a prosperous condition.

G. A. HOFFMANN.

Preachers of Missouri, Attention!

Read with care that programme of the Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Association, which you have just received. Yes, you did get a programme, because J. B. Jones has just mailed 600 to preachers. If you do not get one it is because you are no preacher. You will observe that we are to meet in Palmyra, Mo. This is one of the best convention towns in the state. I know it is because I have attended conventions there many times in my younger days. The people there are hospitable and know how to take care of the guests. Remember that the meeting is March 19-23, 1900. Be sure and start in time to get there in time to hear T. P. Haley on "Permanency of the Ministry." Some of us need that. Stay as long as you can get your salary regularly! Do not forget the time and place. If you are anything of a preacher you will be there some of the time—long enough to pay your dues. It is only one dollar.

S. D. DUTCHER,
For the Committee.

The Ministerial Institute of Central Illinois will be held at Mason City, April 11-13. A splendid program is prepared, and a very valuable and practical meeting is expected.

A Widow Tells How She Regained Her Health and Supports Herself.

I was a sick woman three months ago. Everybody told me I was too weak even to do my housework. Since then I know that all I needed was plenty of fresh air. A friend of mine told me that W. H. Baird & Co., 176 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo., wanted agents in every community to sell their Flavoring Powders and advised me to try it. This firm is one of the largest in the country and they fitted me out handsomely. I started in and the first week made $17.50. The second week I cleared $21.75, and since then I have been averaging from $22.50 to $30.00 a week. I never thought it was so easy to be an agent. May be it isn't with other things, but with the Flavoring Powders I know it is. I can sell from one to eight Flavors in each house, and when those are used up they always come for more. The powders are cheaper, better and go farther than the old liquid extracts, and the Powders have no alcohol in them. They please everybody. I have an established business now and it's getting bigger and bigger all the time. I've got a woman now to do my housework by the hour while I'm away and the children are at school; and I have my health back. It isn't every day that a poor widow gets a chance to support herself like this, and I advise every woman and man who wants to earn a comfortable living to write these people. They are generous, and will do as well by you as they have done by me.

"Bells of Easter-Tide."

A Beautiful, New Concert Service for Easter Sunday.

It is now only a short time until Easter Sunday. It is time to prepare for any special service which your Sunday-school will have upon that occasion. Do not wait until the last moment, but begin in time. Easter Day should be made beautiful with music and flowers.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" is a concert service, including music, recitations and appropriate selections from the Scriptures. The songs are by W. J. King and W. E. M. Hackleman. The poems and recitations are the work of Birdie Bell, E. E. Hewitt and Jennie Wilson. Both the authors and composers have done their work excellently.

"Bells of Easter-Tide" makes a pamphlet of sixteen pages, with a handsomely designed Easter cover. The price for single copy is five cents; per dozen; fifty cents, postpaid. Send the publishers five cents at once for a sample copy.

Once again, let us warn all our Sunday-school friends that the time is short. Easter Sunday comes on April 15, or in about six weeks from the present time. Not a day should be lost. "Bells of Easter-Tide" is not a difficult exercise, but time and careful preparation are required to satisfactorily present the simplest service.

SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS; PER DOZEN, 50 CENTS.

March Offerings.

The earliest reports relating to the March offering for Foreign Missions are as follows:

Elyria, Ohio.—Exceeded apportionment. God bless our missionaries and hasten the world's redemption.—J. C. B. STIVERS.

Newport, Ky.—First Church raised its apportionment.—CHAS. DARSIE.

Frankfort, Ky.—Offering runs over $400; was made with more heartiness and cheerfulness than ever before.—CHAS. DARSIE.

Birmingham, Ala.—Almost doubled our apportionment yesterday for Foreign Missions.—O. P. SPIEGLE.

Jacksonville, Fla.—First Church apportioned $25; raised $28.55.—J. T. BOONE.

Angola, Ind.—Angola's $500 started to-day for Cincinnati.—C. S. MEDBURY.

Joplin, Mo.—Last year raised $22. Apportionment this year, $25; offering $154, and can't stop. Sixty additions.—W. F. TURNER.

Observatory Hill, Allegheny, Pa.—Increased our apportionment 50 per cent.—JOHN A. JAYNE.

Huntington, W. Va.—We are in the swim; apportionment raised.—F. J. SAUNDERS.

Richmond, Va.—Seventh Street Church gave $200 for Foreign Missions.—CAREY E. MORGAN.

Niles, Ohio.—Niles all right; exceeded apportionment.—D. R. MOSS.

New Union, Faywood, Ky.—Contribution exceeded apportionment handsomely.—J. A. HOLTON.

Elwood, Ind.—Raised our full apportionment. Three additions yesterday, large audiences.—L. C. HOWE.

Hazel Green, Ky.—Church here gives $50 for Foreign Missions.—W. H. CORD.

Lexington, Ky.—South Side Church more than raised its apportionment this morning.—CECIL J. ARMSTRONG.

Cleveland, Ohio (Franklin Circle Church).—Seven hundred dollars raised for a Living Link.—W. W. SNIFF.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Walnut Hills Church raised its apportionment of $200.

Syracuse, N. Y.—It looks as though we will exceed our apportionment.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS.

Pittsburg, Pa.—East End Church offering for Foreign Missions yesterday, $185.74. We will reach $200.—T. E. CRAMBLET.

Prescott, Ia.—Our collections for missions amounted to over $38.—E. F. LEAKE.

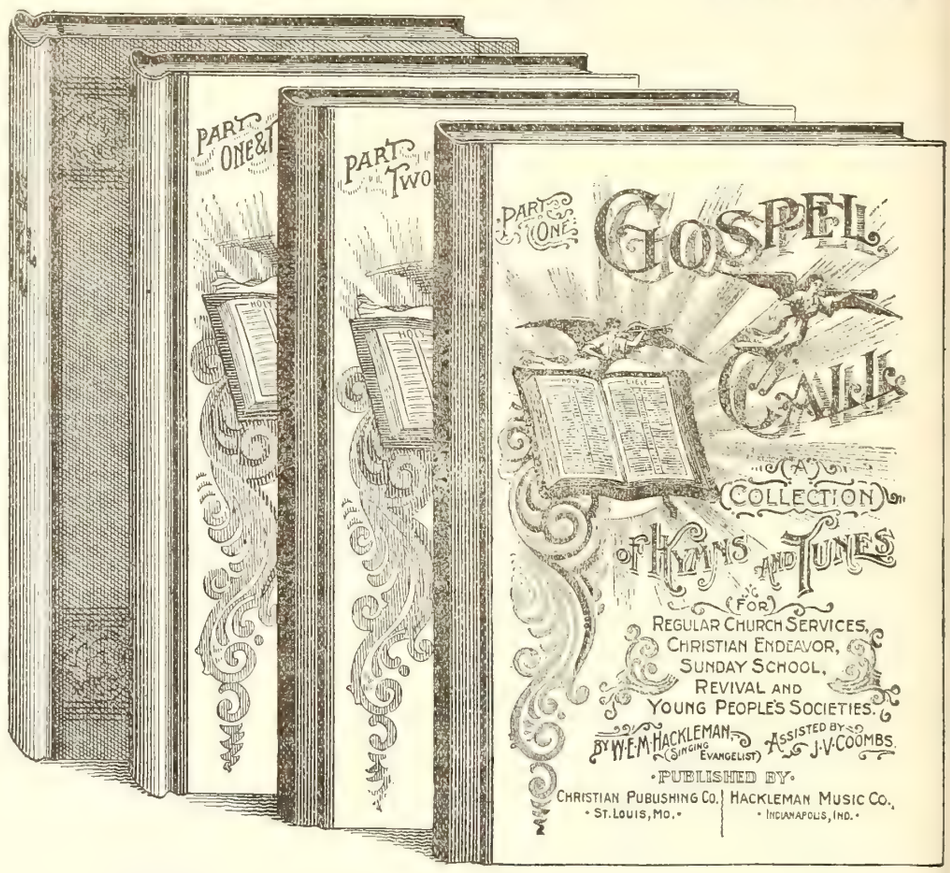
Westboro, Kan.—Our apportionment was $15, and our offering was $25. We are truly thankful for the marked increase in the missionary spirit of our people.—D. E. WILLIAMS.

Minerva, Ohio.—Our offering on yesterday, which exceeded apportionment, was the largest ever given by this church to Foreign Missions.—GUY HOOVER.

Connersville, Ind.—Have raised $110 for Foreign Missions to-day; think the offering will reach $125 or $130 when all in. An unusually large number gave this year. I never saw the giving so general and so cheerful. It has been a precious day for our church in every way.—GEO. DARSIE, JR.

Faywood, Ky.—New Union Church Woodford county gives $110 to Foreign Missions, about $2 per member. This is one of the few country churches that employs a pastor all of his time and that is educated to give as much for the missionary and charitable work as for the preacher's salary. I am now in my seventh year with this church.—J. A. HOLTON.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND!



Over One Hundred and Fifty Thousand copies of THE GOSPEL CALL have been printed and sold during the last five years. It is one of the most popular books in existence for Sunday-school, Endeavor and Evangelistic work. It is used in every state and territory of the United States, in Canada, and in many foreign lands.

THE GOSPEL CALL contains over four hundred standard hymns and popular gospel songs. It includes forty-eight pages of responsive Bible readings. The music is carefully selected from the work of the best modern authors. It is published in two parts, and also in a combined edition.

We want to again emphasize the fact that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is keeping its pledge to the brotherhood to maintain a journal of constantly improving quality.

More expense and labor are going into its pages this year than at any previous time in its history. At no time in the past has it as well deserved the commendation which it is constantly receiving from appreciative readers.

As our circle of readers grows we feel more and more our responsibility of giving to the brotherhood the truest and best obtainable.

Somerset, March 5.—E. P. Wise closed a three weeks' meeting with the church here, resulting in 27 additions; 25 new converts. His pastorate is very acceptable.—PETER VOGEL.

CALIFORNIA.

Gridley, March 3.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at College City last Lord's day, with nine accessions; five by confession. Bro. J. E. Donovan, lately from Missouri, is pastor and is a true workman.—L. B. COGGINS.

INDIANA.

Andersonville, March 6.—Six additions last night and the interest is growing.—C. C. CLINE.

Peru, March 7.—We closed our meeting at Jamestown last week. There were 32 additions; 30 by baptism, 24 men and eight ladies. We raised $30.72 for missions, more than the church ever gave before, and all are happy over the results. I am now in a meeting in Peru with Bro. W. L. Neal, just begun. We had the largest baptism at Jamestown, ever known to the state.—H. C. PATTERSON.

NEW YORK.

Syracuse, March 5.—Four baptisms at close of regular services Sunday evening.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS, pastor.

Syracuse, March 2.—There have been 14 confessions during the month of February at the regular Lord's day services Our C. W. B. M. auxiliary has increased from 30 to 63 members. Our Bible-school and C. E. Society are prospering. We have been developing the missionary spirit more earnestly and believe that it is responsible for the recent advance and prosperity of the local church here.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS, pastor.

MINNESOTA.

Rochester.—Our meeting closed on the night of Feb. 25th, with 28 additions and the entire church revived. J. K. Shellenberger, the efficient and faithful secretary and state evangelist, did the preaching. A pastor was located and pledges raised for his support. We are looking forward to a larger and increased prosperity under the impetus which we have received and trust that before long there will be other places on the Minnesota map that will indicate a forward movement of the church all along the line. A wonderful field is this Southern Minnesota land. Towns innumerable and people ready and waiting to move out when they hear the Bible taught in its simplicity and truth.—CHAS. A. BURRIDGE, pastor.

IOWA.

Corning, March 7.—Have just closed a meeting at Van Wert; 48 additions.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Scranton.—Twelve additions in two weeks at this place.—J. M. HOFFMANN.

Mason City.—Two excellent young men baptized here recently.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Hampton, March 6.—I returned the 4th inst. from Plattsmouth, Neb., where I assisted R. M. Dungan for three weeks. The meeting was in every way helpful and hopeful. Bro. and Sister Dungan are efficient workmen. Their work will abide; it is of a very high order. All goes well at Hampton. Two baptisms at our last service. Miss Newcomer and Chancellor Craig were with the church a Lord's day each during my absence. They gave us a great uplift. They will ever find a royal welcome at Hampton.—SHERMAN HILL.

OHIO.

Geneva, March 5.—There were two accessions to the church here last Lord's day; one by letter and one by statement.—H. N. ALLEN.

Lisbon, March 7.—Just closed a four weeks' meeting with 35 additions; 30 by baptism. Garry L. Cook, assistant pastor of First Christian Church, St. Louis, assisted the pastor by taking full charge of singing. Bro. Cook is a sweet gospel singer and a splendid leader. Our membership is now about 450.—GEO. FOWLER, pastor.

Massillon, March 5.—Since beginning my fourth year here, four months ago, there have been 52 additions; nearly all by confession and baptism. Every department of the church doing nicely.—F. H. SIMPSON.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, March 5.—Last night we closed a meeting of two weeks' duration. It was held with home forces and resulted in nine additions. Of these seven were by baptism, one by letter and one who had been immersed from another church. Four of the nine were from other communions. All were people of mature minds, three being heads of families. But two were from families previously connected with this congregation. One was the wife of one of our deacons, Bro. A. T. McCann. Each was a valuable addition to our working force. The meetings throughout were characterized by deep spiritual feeling, and the church received from them an uplift that will be felt for many days.—W. H. BAGBY.

KANSAS.

Westboro, March 7.—Meeting here three weeks old. Seven added to date; with one exception these are all heads of families. Interest fine and meeting continued indefinitely. Westboro is stirred as never before; Brother G. Halleck Rowe is doing the preaching.—D. E. WILLIAMS.

Belleville, March 8.—Our meeting conducted by M. Ingels, closed March 5, with two confessions the last night. There were nine added by baptism and three by statement. Bro. Ingels has made a deep and lasting impression upon the community by his bold and faithful presentation of the Word. The lessons will not soon be forgotten.—W. E. PITCHER.

Arkansas City, March 5.—Friday evening, Mar. 2, we closed the greatest meeting this city has experienced for a long while. Bro. W. W. Burks, of Parsons, was with us for 18 days by and his untiring zeal and earnest preaching 51 were added to the church. Bro. Burks is unexcelled as an evangelist. The next night after Bro. B. left us we had a fellowship meeting and two more made the confession and yesterday, Sunday, one more, making 82 additions since I took up the work here in September '99. I had five baptisms last night and have five more for next Sunday night. During the meeting we had 27 confessions.—M. LEE SOREY.

ILLINOIS.

Springfield, March 5.—At my regular appointment at Scottville, Sunday, March 4, we had one confession; two added to the church.—O.D.MAPLE.

Princeton.—Five added at our regular services Sunday. The church finishes 60 years of its history this week. The career has not been all of peace and joy, yet much of these. The future looks brighter.—J. G. WAGGONER.

Galesburg, March 5.—Two added here yesterday.—C. H. WHITE.

Payson, March 4.—One confession at our regular morning service.—C. EDWARDS.

Sandoval, March 7.—J. H. Smart, of Centralia, assisted us in a short meeting, with four conversions and much help to the church.—JAS. F. ROSBOROUGH.

Astoria, March 5.—One addition yesterday at our regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

St. Joseph, March 5.—Yesterday was a great day here. Our apportionment for the Silver Jubilee Year was raised, and eight confessions. Meeting six days old with nine confessions; 13 additions since taking the work here January 21. Mrs. Hostetler organized a Junior C. E. February 18 with 13 members and which now has a membership of 40. The Sunday-school is in better condition than it has been for five years.—H. J. HOSTETLER.

Windsor, March 9.—I preached one sermon in the M. E. Church at Hammond this week. There were two confessions. The anti members seized our church and locked me out, but the M. E.s gave us their house. Our church building is deeded to the Christian Church. Bro. Black, of Chicago, dedicated the church, and we propose to see who has the right to the key.—A. H. HARRELL.

Mingled Mercies.

BY D. F. SEYSTER.

"All sunshine makes the desert bare,"
All clouds would breed misama there;
They, mingled, make the verdant vales,
And fill the seas with merchant sails.

All joy unfits one for the earth,
All pain repents a soul of birth;
They weave the sympathetic cord
That binds our hearts to Christ our Lord.

All rest will weary, never ease,
All toil effects a slow disease;
Yet alternate like night and day,
They each the other will repay.

All riches render discontent,
All poverty ne'er compliment;
Yet when they wed they never dread
The toil it takes for daily bread.

"All things together work for good"
To them that love as children should;
All others live this life in vain,
Who live for self and selfish gain.

Lost Emigrants.

CHAPTER XX.

The events of the colony went on without any disturbing element for several weeks.

The Blackbirds were unusually quiet.

One evening, however, a messenger, the first we had received from the cavern, came saying that Tony was very sick and must see the Doctor. The general advice was that Dr. Andral should not go; that it was a dastardly plot to get him into their power. But the Doctor calmly said: "I am asked to go on a mission of mercy and I'll go."

"But it may cause your death," said Prof. Fergus.

"It may," answered the Doctor. "But I'll die in the line of duty."

"If you're bound to go, I'll take a party," Captain Wolcott interposed, "and make the cruise along with you."

"No," was the response, "that would be likely to bring on a conflict. There must be no appearance of an armed force."

"I'm afraid, then, to prevent a tragedy we'll have to shut you under the hatches."

"No, Captain, I must certainly go."

"On one condition: that I can go along."

This was generally opposed on the ground that Col. Bird's hostility was toward both the men, and their going together might prove a double calamity.

"There is but one way out of this that I can see," said Mrs. Gray, after a moment's consultation with her husband. "We will go with the Doctor. We will go in, and if Tony is really sick, we will bring in the doctor. Should we find deception there, thee must promise not to enter."

"In that case," said Dr. Andral, "I promise as you request."

Accordingly, the Doctor and this excellent pair proceeded to the mountain, and the latter remaining concealed without, the others entered the cavern and found Tony really sick. He was very glad to see Mrs. Gray, but earnestly asked for Dr. Andral. When the latter entered the cave he found Tony with a high fever and evidently greatly excited. The Doctor sought to quite him, but the effort only seemed to intensify his agitation. "Oh Doctor," he cried, "I must tell you; I wanted you to come for that."

"All right, Tony, if it's a relief to you, tell what you know," replied the Doctor.

"I wanted to tell you when they had you shut up here, but I couldn't for the watch. I done it, Doctor. They said if you or the Captain went down, to cut the rope," said he, snatching at the bed clothes, "and I said I'd rather die than kill anybody. And they said it wouldn't hurt anybody, but would only make a little fun, and I was fool enough to believe it."

"Well, it's all right, Tony. Nobody was killed. The others that used you, are far more guilty than you. I freely forgive you, Tony. Now be quiet and get a good night's rest, and to-morrow we will bring you to the village where you will have many friends, and they will help to make you well and happy."

The unburdening of Tony's mind was a relief, and with a soothing draught he was soon asleep.

It was learned that Bird and several of his men were away at the north end of the island and would not return until the next night, and it was thought wise to get Tony away before the return of the party to avoid trouble.

On the morrow, the sea being quiet, a boat was sent round to South Bay, and Tony was borne away on a litter from the cavern without opposition, and thence brought by boat around to the harbor and carried up to the village.

Here, under a kind and gentle ministry, Tony, humbly and deeply penitent speedily, recovered, and gave promise of a better life; the most assuring evidence of which was that he made a profession of his faith in the Savior and became a devout Christian.

A day or two after Tony's return Pat came into the village. He reported that he was never taken into the confidence of the Blackbirds after the incident of the broken leg. And that after the fire in the entrance of the cave and the escape of Dr. Andral, they had been doubly suspicious of him, and had made direful threats against him if they should ever establish the fact that he was instrumental in the Doctor's escape.

Our next meeting for Bible study found a large company with Bibles in their hands, and with an interest in searching the Scriptures that was truly refreshing. After a short season of preparatory worship Prof. Fergus resumed the subject of the last meeting, as follows:

"Having found not the slightest connection with baptism in all the sprinklings of the Bible, let us see if we can find any possible warrant for sprinkling in the Greek word for baptism.

"What is, then, the meaning of baptizo? I answer: all the lexicons give the primary meaning, to dip, to plunge, to immerse. Prof. Stuart, an eminent Pedobaptist authority, says: 'All lexicographers and critics of any note are agreed in this."

"More recently, at the cost of years of labor and the exploration of the great libraries of Europe and America, Dr. Conant has been enabled to collect and authenticate two hundred and thirty-six examples of the use of the word baptizo among ancient authors, and of these there is not one example that is not in harmony with the idea of immersion. I may, therefore, safely say, there is not such an example in existence. No translator of the Bible into English has ever, in a solitary instance, translated the word baptizo to sprinkle or pour.

"If, therefore, the meaning of baptizo is not fixed it is impossible to determine the meaning of any word whatever.

"Suppose, however, we are to learn the meaning of the word from New Testament usage: We open the Bible and find John baptizing the people in Jordan (Matt. 3:5-6; Mark 1:5-6). People in our day do not resort to the rivers for sprinkling, they do, however, for immersion. So it was in that day, we conclude.

"We find a locality in Enon near Salem selected, and the reason given, 'because there was much water there' (John 3:23). People now resort to such places for immersion, but not for sprinkling. So did they then.

"Of Philip and the eunuch we read: 'They came unto a certain water and the eunuch said: See, here is water: what doth hinder me to be baptized? And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water,' etc. (Acts 8:38-39). The whole account is in exact accord with the idea of immersion, but discordant with that of sprinkling.

"In Romans 6:3-4 Paul says: 'Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.'

"Again, in Col. 2:12 we have, 'Buried with him in baptism, wherein are ye also risen with him.' In these passages baptism is compared to a burial in which the person 'dead to sin' is buried, and from this emblematic grave is raised to a new life. The aptness of the figure is apparent to every one if the baptism here spoken of is immersion. If, however, we make it 'buried with him in sprinkling,' it becomes too absurd to be entertained for a moment.

"I think from the examples cited we are now all ready to agree with John Calvin: 'The very word baptize signifies to immerse, and it is certain that immersion was the practice of the ancient church.' Luther says: 'First, the name baptism is Greek; in Latin it can be rendered immersion. And although that custom has now gone out of use with most persons, yet they ought to be entirely immersed and immediately drawn out. For this the etymology of the name seems to demand.'

"Maldonatus (Catholic), in his Commentary on the Gospels, says: 'In Greek, to be baptized is the same as to be submerged.'

"Arnoldi (Catholic), in his Commentary on Matthew, says: 'Baptizein, to immerse, to submerge—it was as being an entire submersion under water.'

"I once asked a learned Catholic priest what was the ancient mode of baptism. He without a moment's hesitation answered: 'Immersion.' 'Why, then,' said I, 'do you practice sprinkling?' 'Because,' said he, 'the church changed it, and,' he added, 'you Protestants are inconsistent; you deny the authority of the church, and yet you practice sprinkling which rests, not on scriptural authority, but solely on that of the church.'*

"'When did the church change it?' I hear you ask. Listen to this from Brenner, an able Roman Catholic, in his History of Baptism from Christ to our Times, p. 306: 'Thirteen hundred years was baptism generally and regulary an immersion of the person under water, and only in extraordinary cases a sprinkling or pouring with water; the latter was, moreover, disputed as baptism; nay, even forbidden.'

"And now, brethren, I leave the matter with you. I have only superficially treated the subject. I have not brought a tithe of the evidence that might be brought from Pedobaptist authorities, but I have brought enough to prove that all the world accepts immersion as valid baptism. Should we adopt sprinkling or pouring, a few might be satisfied; others could not reconcile their conscientious convictions to that course. The result would be inevitable discord. Adopt immersion, which all agree is valid baptism, and no one's conscience is violated, and we have unity and harmony.

"We have agreed to stand together on catholic ground. Immersion is catholic, or common to us all. We have agreed to follow the explicit teaching of the Bible. Whatever our views of sprinkling and pouring, we are all agreed that according to the teaching of the Bible immersion is valid baptism."

When Prof. Fergus concluded there was considerable discussion of the subject. Some had never been satisfied with their baptism by affusion. Some had been satisfied, but were now doubtful about it. Some thought sprinkling might do, but it was better to take that method about which no doubts could be raised. And finally, all agreed it was not a question as to what might do, but what did Jesus command? He had said: "He that loveth me will keep my words." They were sure they loved Jesus, and wanted to follow in his steps.

"To this agreement," Mr. White said, "I wish to add, I have always been satisfied with sprinkling. I cannot now say I am dissatisfied with it. But a certainty is better than that about which there is the slightest doubt. I now see as never before what a barrier to union sprinkling and pouring are. Paul said: 'If meat make make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth.' That is the spirit of love and self-denial. I would be a poor Christian indeed if I could not give up sprinkling. Brethren, I demand immersion, that there be no barrier between us, and in so doing I know I have the approval of my Savior, to whose great heart our unity and peace lay so near."

The Credit Man's Costly Error.

Sometimes a credit man goes all wrong, but not often, says the Chicago Evening Post. A country merchant came up from Indiana with a written list of things he wanted. He said he was new in the business, but he meant to have a partner who was wise.

After he had picked out goods amounting to eight thousand dollars he was introduced to the credit man, and he looked so uncouth and inefficient that the credit man wondered how good clerks had been wasting their time on him.

"What terms do you want, Mr. ——?" He stopped, and the visitor supplied the name.

"Well, down in our country we always pay after harvest."

"But harvest is past. You don't mean next harvest—in 1900—do you?"

"Well, that's when my people will pay me."

"O, we couldn't do that. Ninety days is the very best I could give you." And even at that he wanted to know a great many things about his visitor's prospects.

"How much if I pay in sixty days?"

The credit man quoted the terms.

"How much in thirty?"

A discount was mentioned.

"How much for cash?"

"Spot cash? Money down?"

"Yes—currency."

It was a wild question. The credit man knew he had no chance to get eight thousand dollars out of that man, and he quoted a beautiful discount.

"Well, receipt the bill," was the countryman's rejoinder. And out of the folds of a three-dollar suit of clothes he dragged money enough to buy a yacht and run it all summer.

He didn't put on much style, but he "figures" he saved the expenses of his Chicago trip.—Union Gospel News.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Two Lives.

You take the crowded city streets,
With life and shops galore;
I'll take the little woodland paths
Down by the river shore.
You take the public gardens, where
All is arranged by plan;
I'll take the scenes laid out by God,
And undisturbed by man.

You take the fountain on the lawn,
And listen to its tale;
I'll listen to the little brook
That murmurs through the vale.
You live the artificial life,
And I will live the real;
And joy will come to me and mine
That yours can ne'er reveal.

My Gourd Vine.

W. H. B.

Last spring, from seed that had fallen the autumn before, a large number of wild gourd vines sprang up about my front porch. Procuring a ball of hemp twine, I wove a trellis for them to climb upon. Thinking the soil might be too thin, I scraped the rich soil from the surface of the street and spread it about their roots. All summer long I watered and trained those vines. The care of them became a pleasure, the loss of which would have been sensibly felt by me. The care given to those vines was not bestowed in vain; for in addition to the pleasure it afforded, I learned many beautiful lessons and got many illustrations of great practical value to me in the preparation of sermons. For several consecutive Sundays those vines spoke through me to the hearts of the people.

The story that was in the seed that I so carefully covered in the early spring was fully unfolded to my mind with the unfolding of the last leaf of the full-grown vine at the close of the summer. I could see the beginning only from the end. Now I can see the end from the beginning. The full-grown vine is the vine in the seed shaken out by the hand of nature. Every leaf, every tendril, every flower, every fruit found on the full-grown vine was on it while it was yet in the seed. The vine can never be more than is contained in the promise of the seed. In the child is all the promise of the full-grown man. There may be underdevelopment, but there can never be overdevelopment. Moses on Mount Pisga was Moses in the rushes unfolded. Some of the vines seemed to be content with slow and partial growth, but there was a bright particular vine that seemed to be endowed with almost intelligence, and filled with a definite and determined purpose, and that purpose to attain to full growth. And it succeeded. I shall never forget the thrilling interest with which I watched and aided its efforts and the satisfaction I felt when I knew it had reached the goal of its ambition. It clothed its death in beauty and soothed the pain of its loss. Its work was fully done and it died in triumph. Can we have any higher ambition in life than to fulfill the promise of our infancy by fully unfolding our powers? What a stunted growth humanity presents. But one of perhaps fifty vines reached full growth. Here and there a man reaches beyond his fellows in the development of his powers.

As the vines sprang up they put forth their tendril-hands and took secure hold of everything that offered support. But they did not hold on at arm's length. Each tendril, when it had secured a firm hold, twisted itself into a spiral spring, thus securing an elastic and flexible attachment to the support and being better prepared to resist sudden shocks of wind and rain. The hand of faith should take hold of truth with a secure but elastic and flexible grip. The grip of him who holds on to truth at arm's length is liable to be broken by a very slight shock. The securest hold is the one that draws the heart closest to Christ. Rigidity is a characteristic of death; flexibility, of life. The rock is rigid; the oak bends before the breeze. Faith without works is rigid, because dead. A living faith is flexible. It may bend but it never breaks.

In growing, each vine took hold of others and allowed them to take hold of it. They used and were used. In helping others no vine was turned aside from helping itself. It helped itself by helping others. If one vine that had a tendril attached to the trellis took hold of another vine, that other vine had an additional attachment to the trellis. The highest good of the whole never conflicts with the highest good of the individual. On the contrary, it helps it. "Be ye perfect" and "help one another," are the complements of each other They are inseparable even in thought.

The vine that reached full growth was fruitful to the very last. It terminated in leaves, tendrils and fruit. The first and the last fruit put forth was not as perfect as that between. So the efforts of youth and age are not up to those in middle life, but each period should bring forth the best it can. Youth should be encouraged in view of the promise of middle life, and age should be honored in view of the performances of past years of strength.

A Remarkable Institution.

(From New York Herald.)

One of the most remarkable institutions in New York City is the Cranitonic Institute at 526 West Broadway (near Washington Square). Connected with it is a clinic devoted exclusively to the treatment of the diseases of the hair and scalp. None but the most eminent specialists are in charge, physicians who have devoted years of study to these peculiar maladies. Although the clinic has been in operation less than a year, twenty-four different diseases of the scalp and hair have been discovered among the patients successfully treated. The most extraordinary feature of the institute is that no fee is accepted for consultation or microscopical examination. Any person is at liberty to send to the institute a lock of their hair, when an examination will be made and a report of its condition sent by return mail. People need worry no longer because they are losing their hair. All one has to do is to send a few hairs and state if their hair is falling, or troubled with dandruff, to the CRANITONIC INSTITUTE, 526 West Broadway, New York City, and learn how to save it, and grow more.

CHAPTER XIX.

One evening in the latter part of August a carriage was driven toward Creekville from the direction of a neighboring city. The driver was a negro, dressed as the coachmen of large cities are so often dressed, to the disparagement of those who are not so fortunate as to be coachmen. He was very proud of his attire, as well as of those who sat on the back seat. And, indeed, he had a right to be proud. On the seat sat a gentleman and lady who were not as old as they appeared; for while her hair was white, and his an iron gray, their faces did not show those inevitable paths that lead beyond the fifties. The lady's face was delicate in its beauty, and spiritualized by long sorrow which had never turned to bitterness. Her eyes were large and brown, and they were luminous and full of varying lights that seemed to mock the white hair above them. The manner in which she held herself, the softness of her tones when she addressed her companion, and the effect of serenity, ease and languor which every motion and look produced, indicated that she was a daughter of the South; and the moment the gentleman spoke it was evident that he came from Kentucky. Presently the carriage approached a small stream. "I bettah give dese hosses some watah," said the driver, dismounting and slackening the lines. "We done come a long way and we's got a long way to go back."

"My dear," said the gentleman to his wife, "let's walk across the bridge. I feel cramped to death; the carriage can come after."

She complied willingly and they descended to the ground. The way lay through the woods that stretched from the back of the Clarmont pasture. They walked up the stream to the footbridge and crossed with leisurely feet. For the past week the weather had been very hot and dry, with the glaring sun, the whirling dust and the army of grasshoppers that make up good August weather in Missouri. But last night a change had come; one could not tell why, for not a cloud had been seen. And to-day there was the smell of autumn in the woods, though the leaves were still green. Nature was giving a hint of what was to come. The impression was unmistakable. The trees had no right to look so fresh and festive, when the air was mellow with September softness, and the shaded hollows, the haze in the distant horizon, the hushed murmur of the stream, spoke of school time and fall apples. The horses were thirsty, and they enjoyed their refreshment by taking slow sips and then letting the water drip under their mouths because there was plenty of it, and no need to economize. In the meantime the gentleman had procured a long stick and was poking it in the water with the pleasure such an amusement gives any righted-minded person who has lived a long time in a large city. He could not resist the temptation to leap over the gate and explore along the brook that ran through the Clarmont pasture. His wife seated herself on a high log that seemed to have been put there for the purpose. The horses finished drinking and the coachman drove them through the ford and halted at the log; the lady got in. "Come on!" she called to her husband.

"In a minute," he shouted back. "I have found such a funny little dam, built across the brook; the work of some children, I guess. It makes me feel like a boy again. You ought to hear the water fussing among the rocks! Wait a minute; I'm going to get a rock to carry away as a souvenir." He stooped among the rocks that formed the dam and the silence was presently broken by a loud, excited cry, that caused the lady to turn very white.

"Lawd's sake!" exclaimed the negro, trembling. "He's been bit by a snake, an' die sho!"

But the gentleman ran toward the carriage, holding up something in one hand. He got over the gate as if carried by the wind. "Look! look!" he shouted, putting what he had found into his wife's hands; "do you know it?" For a moment she would not take her eyes from him, because his manner filled her with alarm. But as soon as she looked at the object she screamed and caught her husband's arm for support.

"What's dat t'ing?" demanded the coachman, leaping from his seat. "Please, mistah, don't bring it heah, I's skeerd to deff uv snakes. Oh! w'y 'tain't nuffin but a box!" he added to himself in a low voice; "jess a little red, round box; an' it's empty; nuffin in it; sech goin's on I never see!" For the lady was kissin that box again and again, while her husband supported her trembling form. And all this excitement was over that little red box Nance had given Frank, telling her it was "a charm." It was evidently more than a box to these two!

"Richard," said the lady, when she could speak coherently, "God has brought us here. Let us go up to the house, this may be the place; it must be the place!"

"Yes, yes," he assented eagerly. "Can you walk, my dear?" She sprang to the ground and they hurried through the gate after telling the coachman to wait. They followed the brook till they came to the dam, and he showed her the very spot where the box had been caught in the rocks after Frank had thrown it away. They went on till they came to a summer house, and here sat a girl. The lady looked at her long and eagerly, and Vega was so startled by their sudden approach that she could only look back. "Who are you?" asked the lady, breathlessly.

Vega said, "Write on my slate; for I am deaf, and while I can talk, I cannot hear a sound." The lady took the slate, but her hands shook so she could not write. "We are strangers; kindly tell us who lives here."

"My father, Mr. Clarmont," answered Vega, who was not at all the same Vega she had been before Frank taught her how to become a Christian; for now her voice was kind and her eyes gentle, and a look of sweet refinement dwelt upon her face; for in her heart this refinement had found a home.

"My name is Douglas," the man wrote. "We came to Creekville to find some one named Frank Douglas. Can you tell us if you have ever heard of him? Perhaps he is related to us; perhaps he can tell us something we would give the world to know. Did you ever see this red box before?"

START right. In painting, the first or priming coat is important. It is the foundation. It is a mistake to think anything is good enough for it. If a mixture of Zinc, Barytes, etc., is used the paint will surely crack and peel.

The only safe paint for priming is Pure White Lead. It combines with the oil, forming a tough, elastic coat that penetrates and will adhere to the surface. The brands in the margin are genuine.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

We have reached the end of the first three months' study of the life of Jesus, but the lessons we have gone over cover far the larger portion of the earthly history of our Lord. It will be difficult to even suggest, in a single brief article, the most important facts and truths embodied in the wonderful narrative.

1. The Birth of Jesus. Luke 2:1-16. I think it is Walter Scott, in his work on "The Messiahship," who says that the greatest truth in the Old Testament is that man was made in the image of God, and the greatest truth in the New Testament is that God was made in the image of man. If this is true, the first lesson is the chief of them all. The Babe of Bethlehem becomes to us the proof of God's interest in and the measure of his love for the human race. He "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." This means more than the death of Jesus. It means the whole gift of his life —its sweet infancy, its gentle youth, its strong manhood, its loving ministry, its sacrificial offering on the cross, its glorious victory over the grave. The birth of Jesus is the pledge of his life and his redeeming work.

2. The Child Jesus Visits Jerusalem. Luke 2:40-52. The single beautiful glimpse of the earthly life of the Son of Man given us by the evangelist is worthy of the beginning and the maturity of his wonderful career. It exhibits to us his joy in his Father's house, his eagerness to be "about his Father's business," his remarkable wisdom in the Scriptures of his people, his humble acceptance of duty as the noblest manifestation of the divine life. Although the Son of God and the Savior of men, he yet consents to hide his glory for thirty years within the narrow walls of his home in Nazareth, and in subjection to those who bear to him the relation of human parent to teach the children of men the beauty of obedience.

3. The Preaching of John the Baptist. Luke 3:1-17. The public ministry of the Savior is ushered in by one of the most remarkable figures of history. Out from the wilderness comes a voice calling Israel to repentance. A gaunt, roughly-clad man, whose appearance suggests the return to earth of the old Prophet Elijah, draws multitudes to the river Jordan, to hear his message and to receive the baptism in which they declare their purpose of a new life. He is intensely practical, making men see their sins and showing them the way to a reformation which will transform their character and prepare them for a place in the coming kingdom of the Messiah, whose advent is now at hand.

4. The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus. Matt. 3:13; 4:11. In the midst of John's ministry to Israel, there approached him One whose countenance and bearing seemed to reflect so much of the divine that the bold prophet, who had not quailed before the dignitaries of his nation, humbled himself before him and declared his unworthiness to administer the ordinance which he had enjoined upon all others. When at the urgent request of the Savior he buried him beneath the waters, the sign which he had awaited followed; the Holy Spirit came upon the Christ, and the voice of the Father owned him as his Son. From this scene of public consecration of his life to the doing of the Father's will, Jesus passed into the dread season of temptation by which his soul was to learn the power of Satan, when exerted to its utmost. Here he conquered at every point of attack, and gave hope to the tried sons of men that he would be "able to succor them that are tempted."

5. The First Disciples of Jesus. John 1:35-46. From this season of sore trial and complete victory Jesus returns to the place where the Baptist was continuing his ministry. There, by a few hours' conversation, so much of his true nature shines out that at least four, and perhaps six, of John's followers become convinced that he is the Christ indeed, and accept him as "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Each of them becomes in turn a voice in the ears of his friends, echoing the glad refrain: "We have found the Messiah."

6. Jesus and Nicodemus. John 3:1-18. After a brief visit to Galilee Jesus attends the Passover at Jerusalem, where his words and works draw to him the attention of all men. A ruler of the Jews, strangely drawn to the Savior by the truth he teaches and the miracles he has wrought, comes under cover of night to receive further instruction. He is told that no earthly descent, even though from the noblest of families, avails for the soul's salvation. "Ye must be born again." To receive the Messiah into the heart by a living faith, and to submit to him in the laver of regeneration, which is Christian baptism, is the divine way to royal honors in the kingdom of God. The uplifted serpent in the wilderness was but a type of the uplifted Savior, through whose atoning death the world should be brought back to God.

7. Jesus at Jacob's Well. John 4:5-26. Returning to Galilee through Samaria, Jesus and his disciples approach the villege of Sychar, whose history was redolent with sacred memories to all the sons of Jacob. Too exhausted to complete the journey, Jesus sinks down beside the old well of Jacob, while his disciples go ahead into the village for food. Here he holds his remarkable conversation with the Samaritan woman, whereby he shows to her the sinfulness of her own heart and life as she had never before realized it, the richness of the grace of God which could satisfy the thirst of her higher nature, and the utter futility of any form of worship which was not the expression of a sincere faith and an humble spirit. He crowns his marvelous favor to this poor woman by revealing himself as the Christ, and abides with the people of her village until they, too, see in him "the Savior of the world."

8. Jesus Rejected at Nazareth. Luke 4:16-30. It is difficult to see in familiar objects an unusual value or power. Reports of the sayings and doings of Jesus in other places have come to the ears of the citizens of Nazareth; but they were loth to believe that for thirty years they have been blind to such a presence in their midst. Hence, despite the gracious words in which the Savior opens up the Scriptures in their synagogue, they conclude that he cannot be the Messiah, and rudely and violently reject him, attempting even to take his life, as the only possible answer to his rebukes upon their unbelief. They are thwarted in this awful purpose, but the heart of Jesus is cruelly wounded by this turning from him of those who ought to have been first to accept him.

9. Jesus Healing in Capernaum. Mark 1:21-34. Men might reject him, but Jesus would not retaliate by leaving them to their fate. At his newly chosen home in Capernaum Jesus becomes the center of the people's interest and joy. The crowd follows his steps and hangs upon his words. He heals the demoniac in the synagogue, raises from a deadly fever the mother of Simon Peter's wife and restores to health a multitude of sick, who are brought to his door from every quarter of the city and its environs. His activity in these acts of mercy reminds his apostles of the words of Isaiah concerning the Messiah: "Surely he hath taken our sicknesses and borne our infirmaties."

10. The Paralytic Healed. Mark 2:1-12. After a tour through Galilee, during which the Master visited many of the cities and villages of that province, bringing joy and gladneas everywhere, he returned to Capernaum. His return soon brought about his door so great a crowd that the sick were kept beyond the reach of his eye and voice. One poor palsied man was so determined to see him that his friends carried him onto the roof and let him down by ropes into Jesus' presence. Reading his heart, the Savior first assured him of the forgiveness of his sins, and then added the lesser gift of healing, making the visible miracle a proof to his enemies of his power to work the greater miracle of spiritual blessing.

11. Jesus at Matthew's House. Mark 2:13:22. Already Jeusus had chosen four of his apostles, Peter, Andrew and the sons of Zebedee. He now selects a fifth, and that one from the ranks of the despised publicans, or Roman tax collectors. By calling Matthew to become one of his ambassadors to the world, Jesus emphasized his mission as one of grace to sinners. No man need despair of being accepted and used by the Lord, since he transformed this hated publican into the honored apostle and the first biographer of the Son of Man.

No better sentences could have been selected to express the predominating thought of these eleven lessons than the golden text for the quarter: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

TOPIC FOR MARCH 25.

THE GLORY OF OBEDIENCE.

(Matt. 21:28-32.)

"These are the laws of the Jungle,
And many and mighty are they;
But the head and the hoof of the law
And the haunch and the hump is—obey."

So sings Kipling, and he might have extended the realm of the reign of law far beyond jungle and forest into plain and sea and city and the dimmest recesses of men's souls. Everywhere is law, and everywhere it must be obeyed. Transgress it and the retribution is sure and swift and fiery and lasting. Withered is the soul that disobeys. Withered, shriveled, dwarfed and atrophied. The wages of sin is death.

But, on the other hand, crowned with glory is the soul that obeys, crowned with a crown of righteousness "A glorious thing it is to know how to command," says one. Yes, but a rarer and far more glorious thing it is to know how to obey. None is fit to command who has not first learned to obey—the harder lesson of the two. Few there are, even in military ranks, who have deeply learned the lesson, who, without question, carry their message to Garcia.

"Their's is not to make reply,
Their's not to reason why,
Their's but to do—and die."

Few are the soldiers so schooled in obedience as not to know how to conduct the campaign better than their superiors.

There is some danger that in the extreme indulgence of the "new education" children in our country should fail to learn the old lesson that our Puritan fathers knew so well how to teach—implicit obedience. In that elder day father's word was law, without questioning or debate. "They heard the voice without reply." Is it not possible that we have fallen on softer days? No less of the milk of human kindness! But let it not be turned into the gall by the sunshine of overindulgence!

There is an obedience of the letter and an obedience of the spirit. There is the obedience of the son who said, "I go," and went not, which is pharisaical, and the obedience of the son who said, "I go not," but went; which is the better part. Both of these are incomplete, but of the two we far prefer the obedience of the spirit to that of the letter; we far prefer the erring one who refuses to call out a hypocritical "Lord, Lord," but leads an upright life, to the hypocritical tither of mint, annise and cummin,

"He who bears
False witness—he who takes the orphan's bread
And robs the widow—he who spreads abroad
Polluted hands in mockery of prayer."

It is better to obey in letter and in spirit, too; to follow the clearly marked steps of faith, repentance, baptism, but not to pause with that.

One should obey the laws of man. In our free country we are less heedful of the restraints of law than God commands us to be of the powers that be. When across any way we tread there looms a sign, "Keep off the grass," we obey it—if convenient. There is, perhaps, less reverence for law, authority, in America than anywhere else in the world. Hence other nations call us half-civilized, barbarous; and what right have we to quickly to resent the accusation? Let Kentucky raise her stained hands and swear, "I am law-abiding!" Let Montana lift her face and dare too say, "I obey the law!" Let any of our great municipalities repel the charge of semi-civilization by asking, "In what have I offended?"

One should obey the laws of nature. Instead of defying the lightning that leaps from the wrath of offended nature, instead of treading the murky paths of forbidden unsanitation, instead of going the pace that kills, instead of breaking all the decalogue of hygienic or sanitary commandments written in our frame and in the frame of nature, we ought to learn the law of the jungle of this life—"Obey!"

One should obey his own conscience. There, after all, is the voice of God—not in the whirlwind, the earthquake or the tempest—the still small voice. The weight of the world's woe is due to disobedience to that voice. We most of us know the right, but with Paul, the good that we would, that we do not, and evil is present with us. It is not often we are puzzled as to the right—sometimes. For the most part we know the way to tread; but wayward feet so often refuse to follow when the still small voice calls. Obey! Never for a moment admit that you can do ought else; for in that moment you sin. Obey conscience, thine own conscience! "To thine own self be true, and it shall follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

PIONEER DISCIPLES IN THE EAST.

By F. D. Power, Director.

(Fourth article in the series on Pioneer Disciples.)

The formal beginnings of our movement for restoration took place in Virginia in 1832. The Dover Baptist Association that year passed the famous "Dover Decrees," of which Rev. John Kerr, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Richmond, was the author. This caused the division. The followers of Mr. Campbell did not desire to exalt the differences of opinion into tests of fellowship, but by the action of the Baptist Churches they were formally invited to withdraw from their fellowship. It falls to the lot of our Baptist brethren, therefore, to show what these differences are, and to them exclusively to show that these differences should be made tests of fellowship.

Thomas Campbell preached in Richmond in January, 1833. On Feb. 14 the First Baptist Church passed resolutions earnestly recommending "to those who have embraced these new doctrines and opinions to withdraw from us and become a separate people, worshiping God according to their own views of propriety." Sixty-eight members withdrew, disclaiming "any opinion not founded upon the New Testament." It has been noted as a curious coincidence that the very month these brethren organized, the water was turned on from the new city waterworks!

The following compact or declaration was signed by those forming the new organization:

1. That we receive and hold the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as containing a true and perfect revelation of the divine will, able through faith to make us wise unto salvation, thoroughly furnished to all good works and the New Testament as the only and all-sufficient rule for the worship and government of the Christian Church.

2. That thus receiving and holding the sacred volume, we stand pledged, through the grace of God promised to us in Christ, to study to conform to all its holy precepts and examples.

3. That conscientiously recognizing the constitutional unity of the body of Christ, we extend our fellowship to all who have been immersed, upon a scriptural profession of faith in Christ, and are working orderly according to the law enjoined by his holy apostles upon the believers.

This organization was effected the first Lord's day in March, 1832. The following October the "Dover Decrees" were passed by the Baptist Association at Four Mile Creek Baptist Church, twenty miles from Richmond, in which the doctrines of the Disciples are denounced as "subversive of the true spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ, disorganizing and demoralizing in their tendency;" declaring "their views of sin, faith, repentance, regeneration, baptism, the agency of the Holy Spirit, church government, the Christian ministry, and the whole scheme of Christian benevolence to be contrary to the plain letter and spirit of the New Testament of our Lord and Savior;" stating that "while they boast of superior light and knowledge we cannot but lament in their life and conversation the absence of that wisdom which is from above;" anathematizing them as "a dogmatic sect, who live only in the fire of strife and controversy and seek to remain in connection with existing churches that they may with the greater facility obtain material for feeding the disastrous flame," and finally claiming that "the cause of truth and righteousness requires a separation from them." This was the drift of the famous or rather infamous "Dover Decrees." It is safe to say there is not a Baptist in the land who to-day would defend them!

One year after the organization of the church in Richmond it met in its own meeting house, located on Eleventh Street and called "Sycamore,' from a sycamore tree which threw its refreshing shade over the entrance. Its pastors in the early time were Peter Ainslie, David S. Burnet, James Henshall, R. L. Coleman and W. J. Pettigrew.

Simultaneously with the work in Richmond a number of churches were organized in Virginia, principally in the Tidewater region, and among the great names of that pioneer period we have in addition to those already named: T. M. Henley, John Bagby, John Dangerfield, John DeVall, Albert Anderson, Dudley W. Atkinson, Silas Shelburne, Chester Bullard, John T. Walsh, G. W. Abell and James W. Goss.

Many of the strongest churches were formed in the rural districts. Indeed, the work in the early period of our movement was done chiefly in the country. The wisdom or unwisdom of this method of evangelizing has not been decided. To-day we are making herculean efforts to reach the cities, and there is the peril that the country sections will be neglected. The governor of New Hampshire, in his recent proclamation calling for observance of the annual fast day, declares: "The decline of the Christian religion, particularly in our rural communities, is a marked feature of the times, and steps should be taken to remedy it." "There are towns," he affirms, "where no church bell sends forth its solemn call from January to January; there are communities where the dead are laid away without the benison of the Christ and where marriages are solemnized only by the justice of the peace." This statement of Gov. Rollins is denied by some, and by others explained by the movement of the old population westward and the incoming of foreign elements, and the influence of the bicycle upon church attendance; but it has some foundation in truth. It demands serious consideration. Roman Catholic writers are bewailing their failure to reach the agricultural masses. "In the United States," they say, "we are losing; the country people are not ours, therefore the country itself is not ours, and never will be."

Our pioneers established strong churches in the rural districts. The country people are good thinkers, careful Bible students. When you preach in the city, take your best clothes; when you preach in the country, take your best sermon. The country supplies the city with its best material, leaders in the ministry, in business, in government, in spiritual and even intellectual power. The church must care for the little springs that go to swell the great rivers of our religious life. There must be a self-denying ministry that are willing to stand by the work among our rural populations. What shall become of our larger city churches if the country churches are closed? We talk of the city ceaselessly, of the problem of the rich, of the workingman, of the slums, of the sweating system, of charity, of prostitution, of gambling, of the family and the school, of politics and legislation, of the character and work of the church, of the awful death-dealing, soul-destroying, nation-blighting curse of the saloon, of the relation between Lazarus and Dives—a thousand problems of the city. We need have some concern for that which is forever feeding the city and the city's religious life—the country people and the country church. Who shall question the wisdom and foresight of the fathers of this reformation?

Literature.

We have done our readers grievous wrong in failing to tell them earlier about "The Sky Pilot," a story of the Canadian foot-hills, by Ralph Connor. It is scarcely necessary to explain that "sky pilot" in the cowboy's vernacular means preacher. He was a young fellow, both sensitive and sensible, who went out as a home missionary among the rough denizens of the foot-hills. Loving his message and loving not less the men to whom he spoke it, he worked his way by grace and tact and perseverance to success. It is a story which will give the reader a new respect for the missionaries in the newer parts of our own country, and if the reader happens to be a missionary himself, it will give him a better insight into his own task. It is, in short, just the kind of book that Ian Maclaren would have written if he had known the foot-hills and the cowboys as well as he knew Drumtochty and the Scotch Presbyterians. (Flemming H. Revell Co., Chicago.)

MORE MAGAZINES.

Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson is to the front again with a paper on the National Zoo in Washington, in the current number of the Century. This establishment is not like other zoos, even as the author's way of writing about animals is not like anybody else's way. The Washington Zoo is not a series of cages, but a series of ranges upon which buffalos antelope, elk and other disappearing aborigines of this country live their out-of-door life according to the dictates of their own instincts very much as if they had never been captured. Readers of Mr. Seton-Thompson's "Biography of a Grizzly," who were led to suspect that he must have been a grizzly himself at one time to know them so well, will now have ground for the suspicion that he was an antelope before he was a grizzly and a Virginia deer before he was an antelope. Richard Whiteing, "whose "No. 5, John St.," is fresh in all minds as a vivid picture of the extremes of poverty and wealth in London, contributes an article on "Paris of the Faubourgs," in which he gives similar pictures of lowly life in the French capital.

The Outlook, which is a monthly magazine as well as a weekly paper—or, more accurately, a weekly magazine with a monthly illustrated edition—is well represented by special correspondents at the seats of war. Phelps Whitmarsh writes well of the military operations in the Philippines and takes good pictures of the same. James Barnes is adding to his already exceptional reputation by his work as a war correspondent in South Africa. Both have articles in the March magazine number. Hamilton Mabie's life of Shakespeare deals, in this number, with the "Shakespeare country," including Stratford, Warwick, Kenilworth and the Forest of Arden.

The South African war continues to occupy a large amount of space in the North American Review. There are seven articles on various phases of the subject by distinguished writers, including the Marquis of Lorne, Captain Mahan, ex-Secretary Alger and Prof. Macvane, of Harvard. Among the other living topics treated in this issue are the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, national divorce law, "Americanism" in the Catholic Church in France, and the President's war power with reference to the tariff.

We take pleasure in repeating a remark, which we made some weeks ago, that the prospective visitor to Paris and the Exposition can get more of the right sort of preparation for the trip out of the series of articles and studies now appearing in the Chautauquan than from any other single source known to us. And what is good for the prospective traveler is of course good for the still larger company of those who wish to get as much benefit as possible out of the trip without making it. The series began last October under the title, "A Reading Journey Through France."

The most interesting feature of Munsey's for the present month is an illustrated article on the British army. While the decision is pending regarding the building of the Nicaraugua ship canal, it may be worth while for the public to become better acquainted with the "Soo," which connects Lake Superior and Lake Huron and which a writer in this magazine calls "the greatest canal in the world."

Gen. Miles writes an elaborate article on the British Army for Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. An excellent article on the Trans Siberian Railway exhibits the fact that the greater part of the materials for that enormous undertaking are being furnished by American firms. The author estimates, from the various contracts for steel rails, locomotives, etc., which are being filled in this country at the present time, that not less than 128,000 men, women and children in the United States are eanning their living by the building of the railway across Siberia.

The fullest account of the Clark-Daly feud, which has been the leading feature of Montana politics for several years and has come into national notoriety during the trial of Senator Clark for bribery, is given in Ainslee's Magazine. It is a piece of local history of which both the state and the nation must be ashamed, but it ought to be widely known. "The greatest engineering feat the world has ever seen" is the description applied to the building of the great dam across the Nile at Assouan, which is to save the water from being wasted at the season of the inundation and irrigate Egypt. Incidentally it is also to submerge the Temple of Philæ, one of the most precious remains of Egyptian antiquity, which stands on an island in the river at the First Cataract. This work, which is now in progress, is described in the same magazine.

Obituaries.

BOZARTH.

Mrs. Harriet Bozarth, wife of J. C Bozarth, and daughter of Olney and Mary P. Ticknor, was born in Morgan County, Ill., Nov. 30, 1832; died in Beatrice, Neb., Feb. 16, 1900, after an iliness of five weeks; age 67 years, two months and 16 days. She became the wife of John C. Bozarth, Dec. 9, 1849. They celebrated their golden wedding at the home of their son, H. E. Bozarth, Dec. 9, 1899. To them were born five sons and three daughters. Five children died in childhood; one son at the age of 21 years. Her aged husband, who has been sick since September 5, and is unable to walk, to whom she was so devoted and untiring, and two sons, William L., of Hebron, Neb., and Harry E., of Beatrice, with their wives and children, are left to mourn the loss of an ever-kind and most devoted wife and mother. She will be missed and mourned by a host of friends, among them the writer and his family, our friendship extending over a period of 34 years. We who have known her so long and so well knew her to be a good, true friend and an earnest Christian woman, ever ready to do her part in any good work. She began her Christian life when she was about 15 years old under the preaching of Father Happy at a meeting held at her father's house. For years she was one of the most active working members in Jordan and Bethel Christian Churches near her home. In 1875 these two congregations united, or rather organized a church at Chapin, situated about half way between the two old churches. No one helped more in establishing and keeping up this good work than Sister and Bro. Bozarth. In March, 1883, they moved to Beatrice, Neb., where they have lived ever since except a few months spent near San Jose, Cal. Sister Bozarth had been a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever since Bro. Garrison first began editing the paper. She died as she had lived for more than fifty years, a faithful Christian. She expressed herself as ready and willing to go. The funeral sermon was preached by Bro. D. A. Wickizer, pastor of the Beatrice Christian Church at the home of her son, H. E. Bozarth. The remains, accompanied by her son, W. L. Bozarth, were taken to Chapin, Ill., where they were met and carried by loving hands to the church, where religious services were held. Many friends then followed the remains to the burying ground near her old home, where her children, father, mother and many other relatives are buried. There they tenderly laid her to rest. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. S. B. DOOLEY.

DANIEL.

Mrs. Judith Daniel was born in Virginia, July 30th, 1827, and died at her home, Savannah, Mo., Feb. 24th, 1900. She went with her parents to Kentucky when two years old and came to Missouri when nine. Was married to Geo. W. Daniel June 1st, 1842. Of this union several children were born, two of whom survive her. Sister Daniel became a Christian Sept. 18th, 1871, since which time she has lived a faithful and consistent Christian life. Funeral at Christian Church, Savannah, and interment in Greene cemetery near St. Joe.

A. R. HUNT.

HESTER.

Robert S. Hester was born in Boone County, Ky., Nov. 19, 1825. While he was very young his family moved to Brown County, O. Here he grew to manhood on his father's farm, and in 1847 came West and joined the farmer pioneers of Marshall County, Ill. He entered land near Belle Plain and made that his home for nearly 53 years. In 1857 he was united in marriage with Miss Lydia Davidson, who died in 1863, leaving one daughter, Miss Affie Z. Hester, of Los Angles, Cal. In 1864 he was married to Miss Nancy McKeever, and to this union were born L. L. Hester and Mrs. Cora V. H. Lester, of Belle Plain, Ill. These three children with the surviving companion and five bright grandchildren mourn his departure, but not without the hope of a blessed immortality. He became a Christian early in his manhood days and for many years was an efficient elder in the Belle Plain Church. He had been a public-spirited man in many ways. He served his county one term as sheriff and was one term in the state legislature. At the time of his death he was a member of the board of trustees of Eureka College, and for a few years past had been living in Eureka. He passed away very suddenly, Feb. 5th, in his 75th year, falling dead upon the streets in San Antonio, Texas, whither he had gone Feb. 3, to spend the unpleasant winter months. On Sunday, Feb, 11th, the body was followed to its last resting-place, from the old home church at Belle Plain, by a large concourse of his friends, most of whom had known him all their lives. The funeral sermon was preached by Evangelist C. E. Evans, who has been for some time in Bro. Hesters personal employ in his evangelistic work. R. A. GILCREST.

Eureka, Ill. Feb. 20.

PHELPS.

Mrs. Frances Phelps departed this life Feb. 11, 1900, in Geneva, O. Sister Phelps had been a member of the church here about five years. She was the youngest of three daughters born to Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Call. About twenty years ago she was married to Mr. John Phelps. She leaves one daughter, Alta, to mourn her loss. She rejoiced in Christ her Savior. H. N. ALLEN.

Cotner University Saved.

Cotner University, which suffered during the panicky times, was reclaimed yesterday and a deed to the entire property was given to the new board of control. An effort will be made to place the institution on a solid financial basis. One of the first movements will be an effort to secure the re-establishment of street car service to the town of Bethany, where Cotner University stands. Those at the head of the new enterprise are determined that the institution and the town shall grow and take its place among the other suburban towns near Lincoln, that have successfully withstood the long period of hard times. The property reclaimed originally cost over $100,000.

Yesterday afternoon the committee in charge of the Cotner University Trust Fund turned the fund over to Mr. Snell, trustee, and received a deed to the University building, campus and dormitory property. Since the loss of this property to the Church of Christ, quiet but persistent effort has been put forth to regain it. Through the liberal spirit shown by those being most largely interested, namely the Union Savings, American Exchange, First National and Columbia National Banks, a group of workers headed by President W. P. Aylsworth began the task of gathering a trust fund July 1, 1898, although a small amount of work had been done the previous year. The funds have been raised by the field secretary and others who have aided as they could. Mr. Horace Morse, who gave $2,000, made the largest contribution. Mr. Morse lives in California. Alfred Allen, of Rising City, Neb., and George Parmenter, of Plainview, Neb., each gave $500, and others gave in sums ranging from $400 down to small amounts. The churches as organizations have given a large part of the money.

During the time since the University property was lost to the Christian brotherhood, some four years, the institution has been maintaining its place among the colleges of the state by the extreme loyalty of the faculty. No expense for the running of the institution during the same time remains unpaid.

The buildings and grounds in the beginning cost over $100,000, and so substantial were the buildings that they are not impaired materially.

The student body has increased this year, and the attainment of success in regaining the property will immediately make it possible to advertise definitely in the future, which is expected to increase the student body rapidly.

The plans for future work are being matured. Endowment will be built up in several ways and everything will be conducted upon a conservative business basis. It is expected that Bethany will immediately become one of Lincoln's attractive suburbs. The town is free from debt, the University property has been reclaimed and the public school is under its own control.—Nebraska State Journal, March 2.

[The foregoing article states the facts correctly relating to the status of Cotner University. The property has been deeded without a shadow of incumbrance to trustees for the brotherhood of Nebraska. It is due to the committee who have conducted the canvass to say that they have assumed $600, now fully pledged, but yet unpaid, and are in honor bound to see that it is promptly collected. Those who owe these amounts will no doubt appreciate the situation and remit as soon as possible. The pledges have been those of good will and their collection has been conducted with very little loss thus far. The amounts in this settlement include the per cent. due teachers and all other creditors legally involved. All settlements are computed and paid by Mr. N. Z. Snell, Lincoln, trustee for the creditors.

This important step means much to the brotherhood of the Northwest. The coming commencement will be a jubilee, a time not only for congratulation, but for enlargement of plans for the future. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." W. P. AYLSWORTH.]

"Leaves From Mission Fields."

One of the most charming volumes ever issued by the Christian Publishing Company is just off the press. It is "LEAVES FROM MISSION FIELDS," from the pen of N M. Ragland. The book is in five parts, each part devoted to the life and work of a missionary. The five missionaries of whom the author has written are Mrs. Harriett Newell, who went as a young bride to India in 1812 and died after a few months; Mrs. Ann Judson, wife of Adoniram Judson; Miss Hattie L. Judson, Mrs. Josephine Smith and Charles E. Garst, the last three being some of our own missionaries, who gave up their lives in the foreign field.

N. M. Ragland is a master of beautiful and classic English. This present volume contains 273 pages. Every page is delightful. Every paragraph is a gem. Every sentence says something. The author has written with a purpose. He has aimed to hold up the lives and achievements of those who have gone before to the view of those who yet abide, that missionary zeal may be kindled anew, that fresh interest may be awakened in the evangelization of the world, and that other heroes and heroines may volunteer to take the places of those who have fallen.

Mechanically, "LEAVES FROM MISSION FIELDS" is equal, or superior, to anything ever issued from our press. In paper, type, printing and binding the book is above criticism. The volume is illustrated with seven half-tone cuts.

The price of this volume is One Dollar, postpaid. No preacher, no lover of missions, no admirer of the courage, faith and sacrifice of the pioneers of the cross should be without this book. It is a most valuable addition to our missionary literature, being both a memorial to the dead and an inspiration and appeal to the living.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Our list of subscribers still grows.

As a response to the hearty co-operation of the brotherhood, we point to the increasing merits of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

There should be a club of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in every church. If there is none in your church, whose fault is it?

We have just added thirty subscribers to our list at Alvia, Ia. The Iowa church which does not have a large circle of readers of this journal will soon be a curiosity.

Notice our offer to give a copy of "In His Steps" absolutely free to subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. See below for particulars. The cheap paper edition of this book will hardly answer the purpose of the earnest reader. We propose to give you a cloth-bound copy, which you may read and reread, preserving it for your bookshelf.

Another club of twenty-five is reported from St. Joseph, Mo., making an increase of fifty new subscribers in that city.

Why do we offer to give away to every subscriber who desires it a copy of "In His Steps," a cloth-bound volume of 284 pages? We have two reasons for so doing: First, it is a book that every one should read and whose "theology" everybody can understand; it will do good wherever it goes; second, we believe the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can be made even a greater power for good than it has been by a large increase in its circulation; therefore we are taking this method of increasing its list of readers without counting the cost to closely. All we ask is that you follow exactly the rules set forth in the offer (see the bottom of this page), call the attention of your friends to this opportunity and act quickly. We do not promise to continue this offer long.

Kansas City has always been an earnest and loyal friend of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Our list of readers in that city has been large and steadfast. Hence we welcome the addition of fifty-one new subscribers from the Convention City of 1900.

Topeka, Kan., the home of the "Sheldon Daily," is also interested in the subject of a Christian weekly. A large club of subscribers is being formed for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the last report was that our present list had been about doubled and the good work still in "full blast."

New subscribers to the "Christian-Evangelist" sending $1.50 for one year's subscription will receive a cloth-bound copy of "IN HIS STEPS," Chas. M. Sheldon's celebrated book.

Old Subscribers may secure a copy of the book by paying subscription to April 1st, 1900, and $1.50 for a year in advance. If subscription is already paid in advance send $1.50 for an additional year's subscription and the book.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxvii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, March 22, 1900. No. 12.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Early last week the Senate, by a vote of 44 to 26, passed the currency bill in the form in which it was agreed upon by the conference committee and had already been adopted by the House. So little interest was manifested in the measure at the time of its passage that the debate flagged before the appointed hour for the vote arrived and the last quarter of an hour of the time had to be occupied in the consideration of minor matters of business. The bill has received the signature of the President and is now a law. One feature of the bill to which we have not yet called attention in these columns is the provision for refunding the bonded indebtedness of the United States by the substitution of 2 per cent. bonds for those now bearing interest at 2, 3 and 4 per cent. It is provided that these new bonds shall not be disposed of at less than their par value. As no government has ever yet succeeded in floating bonds in any quantity at their face value at thisrate, it will be interesting to see how the United States will succeed. If the bonds are disposed of it will be a remarkable tribute to the financial soundness of our government.

The capture of Bloemfontein by General Roberts marks the long-delayed consummation of the first part of the original British plan as devised even before Gen. Buller reached Cape Town. Gen. French was the first of the British commanders to enter the Free State capital and Gen. Roberts was not far behind him. There was no resistance at the last stage of the advance. Preparations had long been going on for the removal of the government archives, and the army and the government trekked to the north without waiting to come in contact with the invaders. President Steyn has established headquarters at Kroonstad, about a hundred miles north of Bloemfontein, on the road to Pretoria. Gen. Roberts has officially declared that the Orange Free State no longer exists and is organizing a military government. The inhabitants of the capital and the burghers of the surrounding country have received the invaders with cordiality, so that the effect is almost as if a beseiged city had been relieved by a friendly army. Gen. Roberts is not resting at Bloemfontein but, preparatory to pursuing the Boers to the north in a movement against Pretoria, he is establishing a new line of communications to the south. An expedition has been sent toward Norval's Pont and Springfontein to cooperate with Gens. Gatacre, Clements and Brabant in clearing the southern part of the Free State. When this has been accomplished there will be unbroken railway communications from Cape Town to Bloemfontein. The expedition for the relief of Mafeking is proceeding under the leadership of Gen. Methuen and Col. Plumer. Resistance is looked for at the crossing of the Vaal River, but it is expected that the next important news from the seat of war will be the announcement of the relief of Mafeking. Accurate reports as to the recent doings of Gen. Buller have been received, but it is known that there is a considerable force of Boers in the Biggarsberg and Drackensberg Mountains on the border between the Free State and Natal and Buller will have to come into contact with them before he can advance far beyond Ladysmith.

The facts about the Anglo-Boer negotiations for peace, which were only vaguely guessed at a week ago, came clearly to light during the past week. It seems that the heads of the Boer republics forwarded to our government, through the United States Consul at Pretoria, a request to use its efforts to secure mediation. Through our diplomatic representative in London a note was presented to Lord Salisbury in which the United States, without any officious or unfriendly insistence, expressed its willingness to be of service in effecting mediation if Great Britain so desired. The reply was that Great Britain cannot accept mediation at this stage of the war. There is reason to believe that the other powers were also requested by the South African republics to attempt to secure mediation, but Lord Salisbury's refusal to accept our offer makes it impossible for the representatives of the powers to make any overtures. The statement, which has been frequently repeated during the last few days, to the effect that the prompt action of our State Department in making its offer alone before the other powers had time to act, was the result of an understanding between Secretary Hay and Lord Salisbury to forestall interference by the powers, is a shrewd political guess—but it is only an inference, with no great amount of probability back of it. At any rate, it will be safe to wait for further information about that alleged secret understanding before denouncing the Secretary for acting in an underhanded way as a tool for Great Britain. The outcome of the whole episode is that every one knows now that Great Britain will not stop short of the complete subjugation of both of the republics, and that until that has been accomplished no offers of mediation will be considered.

The German Reichstag, which adjourned on Saturday for its Easter vacation, has had a stormy session on account of two measures which have been before it. The meat inspection bill, providing for such an inspection of all meat imported into the empire as amounts practically to exclusion, is the measure which the Agrarian party introduces and fights for at every opportunity. It is strongly opposed by the government, but it was believed a few weeks ago that a compromise had been arranged whereby the Agrarians would agree to support the Kaiser's naval appropriation bill in return for the government's support of the meat bill. If any such agreement existed it has fallen through, for Chancellor Hohenlohe has announced that he would resign his office sooner than sign the meat bill if it were passed. A paragraph excluding all foreign meat was passed by a preliminary vote, but the bill as a whole has not yet come to a vote. It will be remembered that our own War Department beef scandal figured in the argument on a similar measure a year ago. The other bill, which has been producing fiery debates in the Reichstag, is the Lex Heinze, a bill for the regulation of theatres, newspapers and the arts in the interest of public morals. The bill is favored by a substantial majority, and its passage a few days ago seemed almost certain, but an active minority, composed of the Socialists and Radicals, succeeded by filibustering tactics in postponing action until after the Easter vacation.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has never allowed itself to be numbered among those papers which glory in making indiscriminate attacks upon all organizations of capital on a large scale in a belief that in thus denouncing "trusts" they are doing a service to labor. We believe that combinations of both capital and labor are in accordance with the spirit of the age, are inevitable, and will be beneficial to all classes if properly guarded from abuse. But they do need to be hedged about with more restrictions than they have had in the past. To be sure, in several lines of trade which have been virtually controlled by trusts the price of the product has decreased in recent years, but it is not so easy to maintain the proposition that it was the trust that reduced the price. This reduction has been seen notably in steel; but Mr. Carnegie's $40,000,000 profit in a single year, which has been recently revealed in the Frick-Carnegie case, suggests that there might have been a still further reduction if one firm had not controlled so large a part of the industry. The price of refined illuminating oil has in the last thirty years fallen about 78 per cent., but the Standard Oil Company last week paid a dividend of $20,000,000—the regular 3 per cent. quarterly dividend and a 17 per cent. extra cash dividend.

The sugar industry is a particularly interesting illustration of the same thing, and especial attention is called to the facts which are given below. The figures are quoted from a statement issued by the United States Export Association, which has for its function to defend the trusts from indiscriminate attack. In 1879 the difference between the price of raw sugar and the price of granulated was 1.362 cents a pound, which represents the cost of refining. In the eight years following the differential fell, through the operation of natural causes, to 0.760 cent. In that year (1887) the sugar trust was organized. The cost of refining was at once raised to 1.258 cents, and down to 1896, in spite of the continued operation of the same natural causes, had fallen only to 0.981 cent. Since 1896 there has been a still further reduction, until in 1899 it reached 0.57 cent, but this reduction was not caused by the trust, but in spite of it. The same pamphlet, stating the case from the standpoint of the trust, says: "Since 1896 prices have been affected by changes in the tariff, and during the last few months by increased competition consequent upon the construction of new refineries, which have reduced margins to an absolutely unremunerative point." So it seems, after all, that instead of reducing the cost of refining, the formation of the trust caused an immediate increase, and that the cost did did not again reach the low level which it had attained in 1887 until tariff changes and increased competition interfered with the free operation of the trust. On the other hand, the cost of raw sugar has at the same time been reduced, and that, too, partly by reason of the trust. Still, the reduction in the price of the raw material was somewhat less during the first eight years of the trust than it was in the last eight years before the trust. After all, it seems rather risky to maintain that Mr. Havemeyer, as controller of the sugar trust, is to be considered in the light of a public benefactor.

The editor of another Topeka newspaper, moved to the greenest kind of envy by the amount of advertising which the Capital has received out of its Sheldon experiment and the amount of money which has been made by its enterprising manager during this single week, has been casting about for some scheme by which he can accomplish an equally notable and profitable coup for his own paper. His scheme was to publish a series of "lay sermons," exhibiting an editor's opinion of how a church ought to be run and what it ought to teach. He defines his purpose as "to show that the church has its faults as well as the press." Of course, the editor has a perfect right to do this, but he ought to understand that this is not the counterpart of Mr. Sheldon's plan. The aim of the latter is not to attack the press, but to improve it. The general attitude of the envious editor of the rival sheet is sufficiently obvious from his statements, that every intelligent man who pretends to believe in religion now is a hypocrite; that the Bible, so far as it relates the pretended facts on which the Christian religion is founded, is not accepted by a single living scholar of note; that the purpose of theology is to teach what is positively known to be false; and that the best authorities admit that no part of Christ's alleged teachings were written until sometime in the fourth century. There are a good many interesting things which a layman, even a non-church-going layman, or even an honest infidel, might say about the defects of the church. But this is only the futile and insincere twaddle of an atheist of the Ingersoll type, which no intelligent infidel, even, has had any respect for these twenty years past. The ambitious editor has not bettered the fortune of his paper.

MR. SHELDON ON CHRISTIAN UNION.

Following his plan of putting the most important things on the first page of his Christian daily, Mr. Sheldon has a leading article on "The Union of Christendom." Mr. Sheldon does not overestimate the value of this subject and its vital relation to the success of all modern reforms. Whether we consider the evangelization of the world, the suppression of the liquor traffic, the solution of the labor problem, the purification of politics and municipal reform, we are confronted by the fact of a divided church, which wastes much of its time and resources in building up that which is not vital to the well-being of mankind.

Mr. Sheldon says, in his signed editorial: "The time has come for the union of Christendom. The sectarian denominational lines that once bounded the narrow limits of the churches are no longer visible as a barrier to fellowship. The union of service has come to take the place of disunion of dogma." Perhaps this is stating it a little strongly. It is rather what ought to be than what is. And yet it is true that sectarian lines no longer constitute the barrier to fellowship that they once did, and that Christian people are better prepared for co-operation to-day than in any previous age of the church since the birth of denominationalism.

Mr. Sheldon asks: "What is to hinder us from uniting as brothers and sisters to destroy the sin of the liquor business? What can hinder us from uniting to preserve the Lord's Sabbath for rest and worship and ministration? What force can resist our united efforts to build up and defend the sacred life of the home, center of all pure and useful power for the state?" The answer to these questions is, greater zeal for denominational prestige than for the overthrow of these several evils. There is no use in closing our eyes to the fact that the zeal for denominational triumph does exceed, in many cases, the desire for the overthrow of these works of the devil.

"We do not need to have the same theological creed," says Mr. Sheldon. True, in the sense in which Mr. Sheldon uses the word creed—a formula of theological doctrine. This is what we who have been pleading for Christian union since the dawn of the century have steadfastly insisted upon. We must have one faith—one confession of faith—viz., the confession of Jesus Christ as Lord of all; but it is not necessary that there shall be unity in our theological opinions. As Mr. Sheldon remarks, "the church is greater than opinion; and the kingdom of God is greater than the kingdom of man."

We are sure our readers will join with us in the wish and prayer with which Mr. Sheldon closes his article: "May He who by his providence is working out the miracle of redemption through the sure processes of his own mighty Spirit open our ears to hear the Divine Voice which says to this generation: 'O, my disciples, if ye be my d sciples in deed and truth, love one another and unite in that union of fellowship which shall win the world to faith in the Savior and to life everlasting.'" If we will only open our ears, and our hearts as well, to the Divine Voice calling us to unity and to service, we shall yet realize the fulfillment of our Savior's prayer for unity and the conversion of the world. This cannot be, however, until we are ready to subordinate our party names, our party interests, our party pride, and all our denominational glorying, to the glory of Christ and the needs of a perishing world.

METHODISM CALLED TO REPENTANCE.

The appeals of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church to that body to observe the last week of this month as a week of fasting and prayer is a noteworthy event in current religious history. The condition of things which calls forth this appeal is thus set forth by the bishops:

"To-day our Methodism confronts a serious situation. Our statistics for the last year show a decrease in the number of our members. Year before last our advance was checked. Last year our advance column has been forced back a little. The lost ground is paved with the dead. We are surrounded by powerful enemies. The attack is on every side. It is high time for every Methodist to take himself or herself to prayer, to call mightily on God for help, that each one may know for himself that he is accepted of God, that in this testing time each one may hear the Lord say, 'Be of good cheer: thy sins are forgiven thee.'"

It is natural that the bishops should seek to ascertain the causes which have brought about this retreat in modern Methodism. In doing so they call attention to what has been a peculiarity of Methodism from the beginning, viz., the emphasis it has laid upon what it calls the witness of the Spirit. "It has been strong in a personal conviction, deeper than logic, more certain than argument, as deep as the very depths of personal consciousness." But many Methodists are not living up to this experience. "They lack present knowledge of New Testament salvation. They have slipped a cog in their experience, and like many old families who have to date back to some buried ancestor to find their virtue and title to their nobility, have to date back to some dead experience to find their assurance and title to spiritual nobility. It is this slipped cog in our experience that ails our statistics."

Herein is stated, in our judgment, both the strength and weakness of Methodism. It has been strong in its emphasis of the internal witness of the Spirit as against an undue reliance on mere outward rites and ceremonies. It was this that gave the Wesleyan movement such a mighty momentum, and made Methodism a mighty factor in molding the religious life of this country. It has been its weakness because this emphasis of what is internal and spiritual has been permitted, in many cases, to degenerate into mere emotionalism, and in a reliance upon feelings rather than upon faith in the word of God. It is noticeable that in this rather lengthy appeal to the Methodists of this country there is no exhortation for a closer conformity to New Testament teaching as the rule of faith and practice for Christians. It is not to be inferred from this that the bishops do not believe in this inspired rule of faith and practice, and do not think that their members ought to conform closely to its teaching. The fact to which we call attention is that they do not feel that the lack of such conformity is the cause of the present condition of things which they lament. If along with its insistence upon the inner witness of the Spirit there had been an equal insistence upon the necessity of loyalty to the written Word of God, and a reliance upon faith rather than upon feeling, Methodism, we think, would have been saved from some of the extremes and extravagances to which it has gone and because of which it seems to be suffering a present reaction.

Among other causes of the decline, the neglect of the laboring classes, the vagaries of Christian Science, the omission of the camp meetings of the fathers, the light literature found in the home, the abnormal craving for amusements, the spirit of criticism, including that of higher criticism, are mentioned as "among the principal symptoms indicating the famine that enervates our Zion." In a word, the bishops point out very clearly that there has been a decline in that old-time heroism of the early Methodists, who practiced self-denials, endured privations and wrought unceasingly for the salvation of men. This decline of zeal, we take it, is not peculiar to Methodism, but is perhaps a characteristic of the time in which we live.

The encyclical of the bishops closes with an earnest and eloquent appeal to prayer and confession of sins and the seeking of divine strength to meet this crisis in the church. On the whole it is a manly, frank and fearless facing of the facts of the situation, which will commend it to the approval and sympathy of good people everywhere, to all of whom it has greater or less application. We sincerely trust that it may meet with such response as will regain for Methodism its old-time zeal and humility, without those occasional extravagances which have hindered its power and usefulness.

THE PORTO RICAN TARIFF BILL.

The degree of interest awakened by the discussion of this bill, which has passed the Lower House of Congress and is now pending in the Senate, is wider and deeper than would be excited by a purely partisan question. A dispatch from Washington indicates that Republican leaders, especially, are astonished at the opposition manifested to the bill amoug Republicans, particularly in the Central and Western states. They charitably attribute it to ignorance of the nature of the bill. One of them is quoted as saying: "I have never known such a peculiar and inexplicable political craze as this protest against the Porto Rican bill from a limited section of the country."

The politicians at Washington are mistaken in supposing that opposition to this bill proceeds from ignorance of its nature and intent. There is a widespread feeling in this section of the country that there is a moral question involved in this bill. So far as the question of protection or free trade is concerned, we do not care to discuss that issue in these columns. It is an economic question, about which there is honest difference of opinion. The constitutional question is one that has not yet been settled by the Supreme Court and it may await the decision of that tribunal. But the moral issue involved grows out of the fact that in taking possession of the island of Porto Rico, the United States promised to the people of that island the same privileges and rights enjoyed by the people of the United States. Is this Porto Rican bill a violation of that promise? It seems to us that it is, and if so, this supersedes all questions of expediency which have been urged in favor of the bill.

Professor Schurman, of Cornell University, who was president of the first Philippine Commission, in a published letter expresses our view of the situation when he says:

> We are bound to this course by solemn promises. The supreme and irresistible reason for removing all customs barriers between the United States and Porto Rico is the promise made by Gen. Miles when the first landing was made by American forces on the island, that the Porto Ricans should enjoy the same rights, privileges and immunities as the people of the United States. On this understanding the Porto Ricans accepted American sovereignty, not only without opposition, but with joyful trust and confidence. The present issue is simply this: Shall we repudiate or shall we fulfill the national engagements? Shall this great republic break faith with the little island of Porto Rico? Having secured the fruits of Gen. Miles' promise, shall we now renounce the promise?
> The American people will not tolerate any faltering with solemn obligations. Recognizing the national good faith as the nation's chiefest good, they will condemn any violation of it as the blackest crime. All over the country this Porto Rican question has stirred to the deepest the national heart and conscience. Legislation inspired by a breach of good faith will bring a terrible Nemesis. It is said that a tariff is needed between Porto Rico and the United States to provide a case for the courts, to determine the extent of our jurisdiction over the new dependencies, especially the Philippines. I answer that no convenience, no expediency, no other tion ever justifies a breach of the national good faith.

It was this consideration, no doubt, together with the impoverished condition of the island, that led the President, in his late message, to say that it was "the plain duty" of the United States to grant free trade to the people of the island. If it is "a plain duty" to carry out our promises to the Porto Ricans, as the President says, then it is the plain duty of the Senate to defeat this bill. The Republican party will find this to be good politics as well as good morals, for, as Prof. Schurman says: "The American people will not tolerate any faltering with solemn obligations." No political party can ignore these obligations, break its solemn promises, and expect to remain long in power in the United States. Political leaders may as well understand now, as later, that the people of this nation are jealous of the nation's reputation, and that they mean to tolerate no action of any political party that compromises our motives in respect to our new possessions, in our own estimation or that of the civilized world.

Hour of Prayer.

THE CHRISTIAN ARMOR.

(Eph. 6:10-20.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, April 4.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: He that has called us into the conflict with sin has provided the armor, offensive and defensive, by which the victory may be gained.

That the Christian life is a conflict is not only taught us in the New Testament, but is a matter of every-day experience. Whoever makes an earnest effort to live in this world as Christ would have him live will not be long in being made conscious of the reality of this warfare. So strong are the enemies arrayed against us, and so ill-equipped are we, by nature and in our own strength, to defend ourselves against our antagonists, that our safety and success alike depend upon heeding the admonitions of this lesson. It outlines an armor by means of which we can overcome the evil forces and achieve an enduring victory.

An essential condition of a good soldier is strength. Notice from whence the Christian soldier's strength must come: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the strength of His might." It is possible for us to be clothed with the strength of our Leader. But a soldier must be armed as well; wherefore, we are exhorted to "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." The necessity for putting on the whole armor arises from the powerful nature of our antagonists, "for our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." It is only by putting on the complete armor that we may be able to "stand in the evil day"—the day of battle.

Note the different parts of the armor:

1. Truth. We must be girdled with it. Our minds and hearts must be stored with the gospel truth, until it becomes to our spiritual nature what the girdle is to the body.

2. The breastplate of righteousness. The breastplate covers the vital parts of the human body, and its office is to ward off the missiles of the enemy. This is what righteousness must do for the Christian soldier. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous," says John. The man who lives a righteous life has a reputation and a character against which the fiery darts of the wicked are hurled in vain. The consciousness of an unsullied character is the greatest source of confidence and courage in the hour of conflict.

3. Feet shod. A soldier cannot do marching in the enemy's country successfully without having his feet shod; neither can the Christian soldier. His feet must be shod with "the preparation of the gospel of peace." It is the lack of being thus shod that makes so many backsliders in the church. The phrase "preparation of the gospel" implies studious, careful attention to its fundamental facts, truths, commands and promises, until we are familiar with them.

4. The shield of faith. This was worn by the Roman soldier on the left arm, and was used for the protection of the body from the fiery darts of the enemy, while with his right he waged an aggressive warfare. The Christian's shield is faith. It is by the power of spiritual vision, of trust in God, that the Christian soldier is enabled to turn aside the darts of the evil one. In other words, it is the vision of spiritual things that enables the soul to turn away from the fascination of material and sensual pleasures.

5. The helmet of salvation. The helmet, worn on the head, protected another vital part of the body from the enemy. The head is supposed to be the seat of the intellect. The Christian's mind and reason are protected by salvation, or, as Peter puts it, the hope of salvation. Many a man's reason has been dethroned because it was not protected by a well-defined hope of salvation. The intellect needs the gospel.

6. The sword of the Spirit. The sword was the weapon offensive in the armor of the Roman soldier. "The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," is also the weapon with which the Christian soldier wages an aggressive warfare against his spiritual foes. It was with this weapon that Jesus defended himself from Satan. "It is written" was sufficient to silence Satan in each of his assaults.

But how can we use the "sword of the Spirit" successfully without a better acquaintance with it than many of us have, and more practice in using it? A great Protestant denomination has just reported a decrease in its annual statistics; others are making little if any progress. Does not this indicate a radical deficiency in aggressive warfare and a lack of skill in the use of the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God?

But finally, note the last condition of successful spiritual warfare: "With all prayer and supplication, praying at all seasons in the Spirit and watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all the saints." It is only by prayer that we can keep our weapons burnished and our strength renewed for the daily conflict.

If the church is to be an aggressive army, and not a mere hospital, let us see to it that we cultivate the soldierly spirit, and put on the whole armor of God, that we may be "good soldiers of Jesus Christ."

PRAYER.

O God, our Father! We thank Thee that Thou hast called us out of the world and into Thy kingdom by Thy Son, Jesus Christ. We thank Thee that inasmuch as we are surrounded by dangers on every side and confronted by the wiles of the devil, Thou hast provided an armor by which we may protect ourselves and wage a successful warfare with the powers of darkness. If we have been indolent, cowardly, unfaithful soldiers, help us, in the strength of the Lord, to put on the whole armor of God, to the end that we may fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

In the early dawn, this orning, we heard some familiar bird-notes in the forest trees at Rose Hill, indicating that some of the feathered songsters which nest there have returned from the Sunny South where they have been spending the Winter. At first there was a noisy chattering—a kind of exchange of gossip, we imagine, between the go-aways, and the stay at-homes. The latter would want to tell about what a horrid February and March we have had and how fortunate the visitors to the South had been in being absent from such a climate. The former would naturally wish to dilate upon some of the beautiful things they had seen, not omitting to mention the discomforts of travel and living among strangers. After this exchange of greetings and gossip, the reunion was celebrated in an informal concert in which the new arrivals seemed to take the leading parts. We accept this as a harbinger of Spring—not that she is here yet, but that she is on her way, and will soon arrive with her banners of green waving in the vernal breeze. She will receive a hearty welcome when she makes her advent in this latitude.

Indianapolis is to be the center of intellectual attraction and gravitation next week. The Second National Congress of the Disciples of Christ meets at the Central Christian Church in that city Tuesday, March 27, 2 P. M., and closes on Thursday evening. A number of the ablest men in the brotherhood are on the program to discuss some of the living questions of the day. That fact is enough to create a strong attraction in the direction of the Hoosier Capital. When we add to this that Indianapolis is one of the cleanest, most beautiful and wide-awake cities in the country, and is one of the strong centers of our religious reformation, where whole-hearted members and public-spirited citizens await our coming to give us a cordial welcome, the attraction becomes well-nigh irresistible. Those who attended the St. Louis Congress will be anxious for another such a "feast of reason and flow of soul," and those who did not will be curious to know what kind of an institution a Congress of Disciples of Christ is, any way. It is reasonable, therefore, to anticipate a goodly company and a delightful season of fellowship.

Love is truly the greatest thing in the world. It is the source of all true heroism. It is the inspiration of all noble, unselfish deeds. In a railroad disaster which occurred in this state a few days ago, a man and his wife and their little daughter went down together in the wreck. When a rescuing party approached the little girl to relieve her from the debris by which she was badly crushed, she said: "Never mind me; help papa and mama." She had no thought of being heroic or even unselfish. Love is unconscious of its sacrifices. She loved her parents better than herself, and her concern for them outweighed her desire for personal safety. She died of her injuries, and across the little casket that contained her bruised and crushed body were placed, in letters of gold, "NEVER MIND ME; HELP PAPA AND MAMA!" Thank God for the love which binds the family together! What a heaven would this earth become if this principle of unselfishness dominated every home, filled all our churches and guided us in our relations with each other! "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." But there are many nameless heroes and heroines who have done so.

Sheldon's daily has run its weekly limit. We were right in advising him to cultivate a tough cuticle. The criticisms are numerous. Some of them are just. The Capital was not a success as a news-paper, and that is an essential feature for a daily. Mr. Sheldon placed too light an estimate, as it seems to us, upon many of the current happenings of the day. But with a year's experience he would have made a very different paper. The question of proportion is a very difficult matter. It was a very brave thing for Mr. Sheldon to attempt, with no previous experience. We do not think it was egotism, or the desire to advertise himself, or love of gain, or any other unworthy motive that prompted him to undertake a task in which he must have known he would be much criticised and must make many mistakes. It was his belief that out of his experiment, in spite of his mistakes, something good would come, and he was willing to fail if only some one profiting by his mistakes might succeed in conducting a Christian daily. We have never doubted but that this would be the case. We understand the paper he has been conducting is to be carried on, after this, on the same principle with some modification in method. But the main good will be in its tendency to strengthen the moral side of the daily press generally, and make it less objectionable to those who believe it should be both a conservator and promoter of public morality.

Questions and Answers.

Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — I have read your editorials in your issue of March 8th on "The Gift of the Holy Spirit," and it leaves me still confused, as I have been all my Christian life—forty years. I feel timid about pointing out some things that puzzle me: for instance, that God should make men efficient by a gift, and that gift depend on asking and not on consecration, and that this gift produces the Christian character by miracle. I know the Scripture says that God gives the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him, but it also says, "Whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved." How are we to ask and call? Surely, not the most persistent beggars, but the doers are blest? Does the Lord keep back part of the price from the meek, diffident ones, and give to those who demand their rights? Why should we be censured or praised for what is done for us?

S. H. Baldwin.

Plevna, Mo.

It "puzzles" us not a little to know how our brother got these impressions from the article to which he refers. Certainly, we have never written anything from which any one can fairly deduce the idea that mere verbal asking for the Holy Spirit, or for any other divine gift, without a hearty compliance with the conditions on which such gift is promised, is sufficient. God gives the Holy Spirit to them that obey Him. Asking for the Holy Spirit is only one of the points of obedience. There must be faith and a surrendered life. As we pointed out, one who would enjoy the blessings of the Holy Spirit must put his life into conformity with the will of God to the extent of his knowledge of that will. The Holy Spirit, when received by the believer, accomplishes his blessed work, not by miracle, but according to the laws of spiritual growth and development. We should not be "praised" or "censured" for what is done for us, but we certainly deserve censure if, when Christ has done so much for us, and placed such spiritual wealth within our reach, we put forth no effort to avail ourselves of it. This we fear is the censure that rests on a large part of the church to-day.

1. Does not the "day of the Lord" mean the same as the Lord's day?

2. What evidence is there that the Lord's day was the first day of the week, or Sunday?

E.

Tekamah, Neb.

1. No, the two phrases are not equivalent. "The day of the Lord" refers to some great and notable event, like the day of judgment, while the Lord's day refers to the first day of the week, or the day of Christ's resurrection from the dead.

2. Perhaps this question should read: "What evidence is there that the first day of the week is the Lord's day?" The answer is that Christ rose from the dead on the morning following the Sabbath, or the seventh day of the week. The day which follows the seventh day is the first day, sometimes called Sunday. This is the day which was observed as the Lord's day in New Testament times, and is so designated in Revelation 1:10. That this was the first day of the week is shown by such passages as Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2.

Have we any missionaries among those starving people in India, and is there any one who receives funds and forwards same to them? If so, who? J. S. Butts.

Beaumont, Kan.

Yes, we have missionaries in India who are doing all they can to alleviate the sufferers from the famine in connection with their mission work. They could do very much to help their own cause as well as to save the lives of the people if they had the funds placed in their hands. Donations for the relief of the famine sufferers in India should be sent to A. McLean or F. M. Rains, P. O. Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio. We have received and forwarded a number of such gifts, but we prefer that all funds for this purpose be sent directly to the secretaries of the Foreign Society at Cincinnati, or to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind. It saves time and expense.

Bishop Merrill says: "Infants are in the kingdom, and therefore they ought to be admitted to the rite of baptism. We baptize infants to fulfill the great commission." How would you meet this? T. M. Wollard.

The great commission to which the Bishop refers puts teaching and faith before baptism. When infants are old enough to be taught the gospel and to believe it, they are old enough to be baptized. Baptism is an act of faith in Jesus Christ. It has no significance, therefore, in relation to infants. The New Testament is silent on the subject of infant baptism, and it is not silent concerning any command of Christ's which we ought to obey. More could be said, but why is it necessary?

To what does Jesus refer when he says to Peter: "On this rock I will build my church?" (Matt. 16:16.) Disciple.

He refers to the rock-truth which Peter had just confessed, viz., the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus. Roman Catholics hold that it is Peter himself on whom the church was built. The connection shows plainly enough, however, that Peter was not the foundation, but the man who was to use the keys of the building which was to rest upon the foundation. This has been the prevailing view of the leaders in the Current Reformation, and it is the view of many of the ablest thinkers in the religious world. Principal Fairbairn says: "Peter had made his confession, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.' On this rock, this truth confessed, His church was to be built." (Place of Christ in Modern Theology, page 513.)

Current Religious Thought.

The following item of information is taken from the Catholic News:

The Christian Brothers are looking forward to the canonization of their founder, Jean Baptiste De La Salle, at Rome, on May 24. It will be an event of interest to the religious world. For years the processes of elevating De La Salle to saint-hood have been under way at the Vatican, where the Congregation of Rites have sifted every iota of evidence concerning his extraordinary career before passing it to the Pope for inspection and revision. The titles of "venerable" and "blessed" have been already granted him, and his coming announcement as a saint will be the culmination of processes which have engaged some of the most erudite prelates in Rome over a decade. The precise date of the canonization, May 24, has been designated by Pope Leo who, despite physical infirmity, hopes to preside. The Pope was ninety years old on Friday, March 2.

It is coming to be pretty well understood that the "ministerial dead-line," about which we have all heard so much lamentation, is not an arbitrary boundary which preachers reach by the mere fact of having attained a certain age, but is simply the stern demand for efficiency which this age makes upon its leaders in all walks of life. The dead-line operates in business even more rigidly than it does in the ministry, and in either case it is not a man's misfortune, but his punishment. The Religious Telescope mentions the following as some of the causes which promote an early crossing of the dead-line:

When you see a minister forming habits which are detrimental to his ministerial character and dignity, as slovenliness in dress and person, he may reach the ministerial dead-line at about thirty-five. . . . . The ministerial dead-line is also invited by a mere prefunctory exercise in word and doctrine. When a minister ceases to grow in the grace and peace of God by ceasing to advance in the knowledge of God and our Savior Jesus Christ, he will soon find the dead-line, because he has ceased to feed his people with knowledge and understanding. 'The salt has lost its savor.' The discussion and agitation of old and dead issues, whether in theology or anything else, in an acrimonious and bitter manner and spirit, will bring the dead-line to ministers and professors before they are aware. When a minister or professor has become so exceedingly opinionated that he is averse to all progress, he evidently has reached the dead-line in his work, and the sooner he steps down and out the better it will be for the church.

Some of the papers have lately been discussing the reasons why men do not go to church. That is good and profitable. But some men do go to church, and it is worth while to inquire, therefore, why men do go to church. The Presbyterian states several reasons, which may be summarized as follows:

Some of them are there through the power of habit. From earliest recollections they have sat in the family pew. They have grown up to feel that the right thing to do is to enter into the courts of the Lord's house and engage in his worship. Even the Savior felt that influence, for "he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and as his custom was he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." But it is more than habit to go to church. Many men have a great desire to receive the benefits of the worship of God. Wearied by the turmoil of the week, they find rest in the sanctuary. They have met temptations fierce and strong, and on the Sabbath they take refuge in God's house, to gather strength for coming conflicts. There are those who are drawn by another motive. Besides the good received in their own souls, they have an influence on others. They think of the influence they exert on their families, their neighbors, their business associates and upon the whole church to which they belong. The interests of others are at stake and they will never dishonor religion by encouraging others to neglect its services.

DEMOCRACY AGAINST ABSOLUTISM.

The Problem and Its History.

THEO. A. JOHNSON.

Democracy against absolutism has been the problem of the ages. Wars, popular uprisings, political contests and revolutions have had the principle of self-government involved in them. The struggles for freedom in Greece, Rome, England and America form the most interesting and thrilling part of history. These struggles have not been of the blind, though the advocates of democracy secured their knowledge in spite of meager opportunities and absolute government. And as men advanced in knowledge and experience, their convictions became stronger that no earthly power exterior to themselves had a valid claim to dominion over them. Consequently, the contest has in a sense been intelligence against ignorance; for ignorance is one of the things which make absolutism possible.

The cause which brought this problem into existence "lie deep down among the forces which control human society," and "in the fundamental difference in the beliefs and desires of mankind." Some men believe that government is apart from man and set over him; that man was not created to govern, but to be governed; and that he will destroy himself unless he be controlled by an external force which is known as government.

In other times and places this power has been vested in kings who ruled by "divine right;" but the better part of our race has learned that kings are human, and that if any ruled by divine right it was the people themselves. And so "divine right" has exploded. Yet, the supporters of absolutism believe in the old form, though their favorite doctrine has been destroyed. They still believe that government is apart from the people; that it is a thing of crown and sceptre, and that it is best when it keeps mankind in order by repressing their activities. Such are the shah, the mikado, the czar, the king of Italy, the sultan and the emperor of Germany.

On the other hand, an increasing number of people believe exactly the opposite—that man was created to govern, not to be governed; that he is capable of managing his temporal affairs, that in him are found the germs from which civilization and progress have sprung; and that the danger lies in repressing his activities and denying him the right to construct his own government and administer it after his own ideas of right.

It is the principle of democracy to exalt the many and not the few only. It does not believe in dividing society into two classes, "the round hats, the people, and the cocked hats, the visible government." It demands that every citizen be subject to public opinion expressed in the shape of law. It tolerates not the proclamations of crowns and executives, the dictation of mobs, the arbitrary decrees of courts and judges, nor any mandate whatever, except it comes from the people in their organic capacity. It means everything for the people and by the people. It does not permit any interference with the wishes of the people, be that interference domestic or foreign, or any "principle of legitmacy," or any claim said to be superior to the people in their national sovereignty.

Democracy was born in the hearts and hopes of mankind; absolutism, in their superstitions and fears. Democracy means youth, strength, life itself; absolutism, old age, decay, death. Democracy tends to develop and construct; absolutism, to repress and destroy. Democracy causes all noble hearts to throb with liberty and independence; absolutism crushes their higher aspirations and makes of men contented serfs. Democracy applauds men for proclaiming liberty and encourages them to better their government whenever they can; absolutism cries "socialism!" "nihilism!" "anarchy!" and puts them into jail or exile for so doing. Democracy cherishes the Platos, Jeffersons, Lincolns; absolutism, the Alexanders, Cæsars, Bismarcks. Democracy teaches men the principles of government in the school of experience; absolutism keeps them in ignorance, and then tells them they are unfit for self-government. Democracy is a beacon pointing to progress, civilization and happiness; absolutism is a spectre pointing to retrogression, darkness and ruin. Democracy is our friend, and we intend that it shall envelop the earth; absolutism is our enemy, and we intend that it shall be banished from the world.

The history of this problem is the history of the human race, for history is simply the record of man's struggle for freedom. It is not meant that men have been trying to get beyond legitimate bounds, but to reach them when they have discovered them, or think they have. And man's experience in his struggle for freedom has been his most efficient aid in searching for these limitations. This experience has taught that there is a democracy of thought and also a democracy of action, and that the progress of the former paves the way for the latter. Some of our deepest thinkers in social philosophy say that society has thus far witnessed three stages: the military stage, which is best represented by the Roman Empire; the industrial stage, which is best represented by the first half of this century, and the humanitarian stage, into which we have just now entered. In the field of thought, men were first passive and submissive to authority in the form of government; then they investigated, reasoned, doubted and revolted; and now they are trying to construct something rational, something that will correspond to their own life and experience. They are trying to establish a spiritualized democracy.

There has been an evolution of the democratic idea. The first attempts at popular government were only protests against the "divine right" and its abuses. Even the Revolutionary patriots in America were concerned almost wholly with ridding themselves of kings and changing their form of government, but faintly realizing that democracy means a change in the principles and purposes of government as well as a change in form. We now conceive the democratic idea to be, not only that all men should share in shaping their government, but also that they are peers in rights and dignity, and that the sole excuse and end of government is to secure these rights and maintain this dignity on a basis of equality.

The progress of democracy has been marvelous, yet variable. It has within itself the elements of strength, though many a so-called democracy has ended in empire. The history of nations justifies the assertion that a tendency toward democracy gives increasing vitality, and a tendency toward absolution brings weakening and decay. Again and again has revolution unseated empire and enthroned an attempt at self-government; then there has been a centralizing of power and wealth, followed by decline and fall. Yet, through all this period of successes and defeats, democracy has made steady growth and is to-day stronger than ever before.

There is much evidence to sustain this view. The breaking up of the monarchical system seems inevitable. This is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. Every one will admit that England affords, perhaps, the best example of a stable government the world has ever seen, and every thoughtful person who has any acquaintance with history understands that stability is not due to the monarchical form of government; that the fires of liberty which have been continually burning and a constantly growing democracy have been her sources of strength, and that her glory will vanish if these fires are quenched and the growth of democracy stopped.

When we survey the other nations of the globe we find in most of them some evidence of declining absolutism and growing democracy. In Spain there has been a shaking up and in Japan a waking up, each of which was of some service to democracy. In Russia, despite the iron rule of the czar, the advocates of a constitutional form of government are rapidly increasing in number and character and have enlisted in their cause some of the ablest men in the empire. In Switzerland, the government has gone back to the people, and they are successfully solving the most difficult problems and teaching the world a lesson in economics and politics which it never would have learned under the system of empire. In Germany, militarism has no longer any charm for the common people, democracy is expanding and the influence of the nobility waning. In 1871 there were 160 noblemen in the Reichstag; in 1881, but 147, and in the last election only 88 of the nobility were chosen, of whom two are avowed social democrats. In our own country we find many reasons for hope, though monopoly and aristocracy are stronger than most of us believe them to be. The people are discontented with their present situation and are striving to find a way out; education has a new and higher meaning and is becoming more nearly universal; the church is placing more emphasis on the political and social side of Christianity; legislation is trying to check the centralizing of wealth and power, and people are carefully scrutinizing their government, and consequently advocating anew and with increased ardor "that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." In the near future, notwithstanding the reactionary influence of war, this doctrine will be fully enforced. Then our civilization will take a fresh start, and we shall be in a position to show the world that ours is truly the "land of the free and the home of the brave."

HACKETT CROSS-EXAMINED ON REMISSION OF SINS.

J. B. BRINEY.

Doctor, you are the author of a Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, are you not?

"I am."

That work was meant to be critical and accurate in the use of language, I presume?

"It was."

Did you ever use words in a double sense?

"Not unless I said so. That would not be fair to readers."

You always aimed to state accurately and fully the meaning of the text?

"Always."

Doctor, on Acts 2:38 I find the following: "'In order to the remission of sins.' We connect, naturally, with both the preceding verbs. This clause states the motive or object which should induce them to repent and be baptized. It enforces the entire exhortation, not one part of it to the exclusion of the other." What did you mean by that?

"I meant just what I said."

Can you not make your meaning plainer by elaboration?

"I do not see how I can. That is simple language, and its meaning is upon its surface."

You mean, then, that remission is connected by eis with both repent and be baptized?

"That is what I say."

And you mean that eis signifies in order to?

"That is what I say."

Do you mean that the object which the people were to seek through repentance and baptism was remission of sins?

"That is precisely what I say."

They were to repent for the remission of sins?

"Yes."

And they were to be baptized for the remission of sins?

"Yes."

Is the relation of repentance to remission expressed by the same preposition that indicates the relation of baptism to remission?

"Identically the same."

Then the relation is identically the same, is it not?

"It certainly is if there is reliability in language."

Now, Doctor, do you mean that remission means one thing as related to repentance, and a different thing as related to baptism?

"If I had meant that I would have said that. I was not juggling with words, nor do I think the Holy Spirit was."

Then, if you had understood one preposition as expressing two different relations, and one noun as expressing two different ideas, you would have said so, would you?

"As an honest man, endeavoring to teach the truth, I would have felt under obligation to do so."

Doctor, why do you so pointedly say that "we connect, naturally, with both the preceding verbs," and that "it enforces the entire exhortation, not one part of it to the exclusion of the other?"

"Because there are theologians and philosophers who do not like the plain and natural meaning of the passage, and are trying to make distinctions that do not exist."

But, Doctor, some of these theologians and philosophers are trying to put you in the same boat. How about that?

"Their boat is a leaky craft, and I decline to take passage in it."

Do you think that the people were to repent for actual remission, and be baptized for formal remission?

"There is no hint of such distinction in the passage."

Does the passage mean that repentance and baptism are for the same object or end?

"Certainly."

Then, if baptism is for formal remission, repentance is for formal remission, is it not?

"Of course."

"Doctor, are you acquainted with any sentence in any language, in which two things are commanded to be done for the same end, and in which that end is to be taken in two different senses?

"I know of no such case. Taking the same word in the same sentence in a multiplicity of senses is nonsense."

Do you know of any case in the whole range of the Greek language, in which a noun preceded by eis simply means that the thing indicated thereby is to be reached in a formal sense, the actual thing having already been reached?

"I am acquainted with no such case."

This is a common construction in the Greek language, is it not?

"Very common."

And you know of no such case as is indicated by the question just propounded?

"None."

Now, Doctor, seeing that you state so fully and accurately the meaning of this passage, how are all other utterances in your Commentary to be construed?

"In harmony with what I say on this passage."

How about any representation of a subsequent utterance, that puts such utterance out of harmony with what you say on Acts 2:38?

"It is an unfair representation."

In your examination-in-chief you were made to consent to the following: "You mean to say that this passage (Acts 10:43) teaches that the prophets testify that through the suffering, atoning Savior, God will forgive the sins of all who trust in him; and that, without any other condition—without baptism, for instance?" Now, Doctor, I will vary that just a little, and put repentance in the place of baptism—"without repentance, for instance?" Do you mean to teach that the believer is saved without repentance?

"If I mean what the other attorney put into my mouth, I must mean this also."

Do you mean this also?

"I do not."

Then you do not mean the other?

"No; the attorney is wholly responsible for that."

Some rulers believed on Jesus, but would not confess him lest they be put out of the synagogue. Do you think they were forgiven?

"No."

Is there any expression in the Greek language to indicate a closer relation of a believer to Christ than the one here used?

"No; they believed (eis) into him."

And yet they were not saved?

"No."

Then, faith is not absolutely the only condition?

"No."

Doesn't Mark 16:16 make baptism a condition?

"It certainly does, if it makes faith a condition."

Isn't repentance a condition?

"It is."

Doctor, what do you mean when you say that "this condition [faith] brings the attainment of pardon within the reach of all?"

"I refer you to Webster for the meaning of the terms I use. Webster defines attainment thus: 'The act of attaining; the act of arriving at or reaching; hence, the act of obtaining by efforts.'"

You mean, then, that a believer may obtain pardon by efforts?

"Yes."

One does not make efforts to obtain what one already has, does he?

"Certainly not."

Is there any passage of Scripture which clearly teaches that faith simply confers the right to become a child of God?

"Yes; John 1:12 says: 'But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name.'"

Then, the believing rulers might have become children of God by making efforts to obtain pardon according to the will of the Lord?

"Just so."

What is your meaning when you say that "faith in Christ is the only condition annexed to forgiveness?"

"That is to be understood in the light of the passage upon which I was commenting, and its context. There Peter was addressing a company of Jews, and was trying to convince them that salvation is through Christ, and that a believer in Christ may reach forgiveness through him without any such item of the law as circumcision. I simply meant to exclude the law of Moses from the conditions of pardon."

You did not mean to exclude repentance?

"Of course not."

Did you intend to exclude baptism?

"I did not mean to exclude any part of the gospel."

Do you think that Peter contradicted, in that speech, anything he said on Pentecost?

"No."

Did you intend to contradict anything you said in your comments on Acts 2:38?

"Such an idea never entered my mind."

All right, Doctor; you can stand aside.

A PLEA FOR THE LARGER VISION.

E. S. STEVENS.

In 1889 I read an article in the Century Magazine on "A History of the Interpretation of the Constitution of the United States." The writer showed how that immediately upon the drafting of the constitution two views of its interpretation arose, and that these early statesmen found themselves in one of two political parties—the same that, with varying fortunes, are maintained to this day. He showed that of these two conceptions one carried out to its practical effect was that of "states rights," fostering the institutions that were compatible with that doctrine. So plainly were the lines drawn that it became a matter of geography. It providentially occurred that the terrible war decided in favor of the centralized government at Washington, and that every state must exist for the well-being of all the other states.

I have thought that this might apply to the history of Christian doctrine, and that the application of the various interpretations has wrought out similar results. Not caring to enter into a tedious review of it, we may assert without mistake, I think, that denominationalism arose from that reason; and that this state of the church, if let alone, would ruin every prospect of the world's salvation. A divided church cannot successfully evangelize divided humanity. I am glad that we are awake to this fact; that we challenge the right of these divisions to exist, and that we will have a united church on Christ and his Word as we now have a united nation on the constitution. But it is not to be done so easily as we may imagine. It will be necessary to draw the attention of the whole church to the unchristian world first. It will require that every family shall furnish a member or more for this welfare. In George Wendling's lecture on "Stonewall Jackson" he shows that our country is a better union because of the severity of the war. It called into action every family ever so remote and made them taste the sweets of liberty and union after they had purchased it with their own blood. It shall be so in this case. Every family in Christendom will have to share personally in this war. Our blood must mingle with the blood of the world's heroes of the cross until a united church can sing with a bounding heart the praises of our Lord.

A large part of this responsibility falls on the colleges. Heretofore every college of our acquaintance, whose students went out with the evangelization of foreign nations in mind, has produced what we see to-day of the heat of the battle. Men who have graduated from our colleges and turned back to raise tobacco or enter a kindred business might have been turned into a course that would repay a thousandfold in this life and hereafter life everlasting. The place in all the world now is that taken by the missionary. The missionary of the twentieth century is a harbinger of marvels. He hastens the day of our Lord's coming. No one can know, but I sometimes imagine that his coming will occur at the end of a century more. At least the time is short for this generation. The man who will devote his life to foreign lands will be rewarded in his own joy and also in sturdiness and breadth of character. His children enter into his reward, and with scarcely an exception become most useful men and women. The colleges and the churches with their preachers shall covet this opportunity. Every college, every church, every family and every member must share in this work until they know what it costs and how come the results. You must cease making light of the pleader and take up the plea yourselves.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR BRO. JONES.

C. P. EVANS.

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of January 25th Bro. Jones quotes largely from H. B. Hackett on the "remission of sins." The object seems to be to show that H. B. H., in a critical examination of a few passages of Scripture, reaches the conclusion that faith in Christ and faith only is the condition for the remission of sins. And yet, before he is through he says: "According to Hackett, then, baptism stands between the sinner and his forgiveness in some sense." Please tell us in what sense. I do not wish to err in my judgment, but I beg Bro. Jones' pardon if I judge him wrongfully when I say that this article seems to have been produced in justification of his position on the "Actual and Formal Remission of Sins."

I shall be very much pleased and instructed if Bro. Jones will produce chapter and verse in the New Testament that says anything about "actual and formal remission of sins." If sins are actually forgiven upon the exercise of faith in Jesus Christ, why should baptism be required?

What ground for the hope of eternal life has the man who exercises faith in Christ and yet refuses to obey him in the institution of Christian baptism? What ground for the hope of eternal life has the man who exercises faith in Christ and who recognizes that baptism is commanded by Jesus Christ and yet treats it as a non-essential and therefore refuses to be baptized.

Arapahoe, Neb.

ANSWER.

The article referred to concerning "Hackett on remission of sins" was written for the purpose of showing that this distinguished scholar and exegete found that the Scriptures plainly teach that sins are forgiven before baptism, in some sense, and yet they are forgiven through baptism, in some sense, and that in thus interpreting the Scriptures Mr. Hackett has shown himself to be a fearless, learned, broad-minded, honest man, and in this matter has put himself in line with Alexander Campbell who, himself, always claimed and proved that in thus interpreting the Scriptures he was in line with the great thinkers and writers of the Protestant world. "Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" puts a man in that personal, moral attitude that secures the personal, real forgiveness of the Father's heart. In being baptized the man puts himself in proper legal attitude to the divine government and secures formal remission. If a man contracts for a piece of property today—really contracts—the property is morally and really his. The bill of sale or the deed is delivered to him to-morrow. Now it becomes formally and legally his. Alexander Campbell said: "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, formally pardoned when he was baptized."

To ask for "chapter and verse" for this particular phraseology is a species of childishness that would appear to Bro. Evans, if some man should rise up in his audience next Lord's day and ask him for "chapter and verse" for nine-tenths of his utterances. Bro. E. could, perhaps, cite Scripture substantially authorizing his own way of putting things. And this is what I did in quoting Hackett on remission of sins. That Hackett's position on this point is that of Alexander Campbell and the general Protestant world, I propose to make so clear, in the near future, that the celebrated "wayfaring man" need not err therein, unless by his own deliberate, self-imposed blindness. To ask "why baptism should be required," if sins are really forgiven on the ground of faith, is to ask "why a deed should be required," if a man really bought the property beforehand. I answer The deed, like baptism, assures and confirms the man in his rightful property.

Bro. Evans' case of a "man who exercises faith in Christ and yet refuses to obey him" is a moral impossibility. No man ever had faith in Christ in its New Testament sense and acted thus. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" This is the way men who really have "faith in Christ" respond. "And he arose and was baptized." "Then they that gladly received his Word were baptized. "And the same hour of the night he was baptized." This is the way "faith in Christ" works. A superficial gospel will produce superficial results. The apostles did not preach a superficial gospel; the fathers of this Reformation did not preach a superficial gospel. With the degenerate sons of the fathers it is sometimes otherwise; and very much to the discredit of "this Reformation."

UNITARIANISM AS A RELIGIOUS FORCE.

W. T. MOORE.

The current discussion of Unitarianism in some of our Eastern cities and the recent death of Dr. Martineau bring to my mind several facts which cannot fail to be of great interest to the public generally. These facts will help us to understand the estimate of some prominent Unitarians concerning their system as a religious force.

The first year of my residence in London was 1881. It will be remembered that President Garfield died in September of that year. On October the second I delivered an address on his life and character in the Kensington Town Hall, one of the largest and finest halls of London. Long before the hour to deliver the address the hall was crowded in every part, and hundreds had to go away for want of room. It was really a memorial sermon, and I remember one circumstance connected with it of a somewhat remarkable character. It was the only sermon I ever saw reported in the London Times during my residence in the metropolis. Next morning the Times had a little over a column, giving a very accurate report of the sermon.

But the particular matter to which I wish to call attention occurred at the close of the discourse. A fine-looking, well-bred gentleman arose in the audience and asked the privilege of saying a word or two. This was readily granted, and he was invited to occupy the platform, so that his remarks could be better understood. He told the audience that his name was W. H. Channing, the nephew of William Ellery Channing, the great Unitarian preacher of Boston, and his biographer. He stated also that he was chaplain of the House of Representatives at Washington when General Garfield was the Republican leader of the House. He said he knew General Garfield personally very well, and had the amplest opportunity to estimate correctly his character; and he wished, therefore, to emphasize what I had said in the discourse, that the strength of the General's character was mainly his strong religious convictions. In other words, he was a CHRISTIAN, and this summed up the real man. Mr. Channing said he did not hesitate to declare that Garfield's great influence was largely owing to his religious life. He stated, without hesitation, that he himself was a Unitarian, but it was a pleasure to him on a great occasion like that to make the declaration he had.

In a few days Mr. Channing called at my residence to see me, and then invited me to take tea with him at his home one evening during the same week. This I did; and while in conversation at the tea table, I mentioned the fact that I was just then planning to issue a weekly religious paper from the metropolis, which I had about decided to call the Commonwealth. He asked me several questions about what the character of the paper would be; and I described everything as fully as possible. He seemed very much interested in the enterprise, and when I took my leave, he said I should probably hear from him shortly with respect to the issuing of the Commonwealth. I believe it was the very next day I received a long and interesting letter from him urging me and those associated with me to call the paper the Christian Commonwealth. He said the term Commonwealth would mean nothing for the plea I had to advocate, but that "Christian" meant everything. He regarded Christ as the greatest force in modern life; and nothing short of some term that emphasized his religion would suffice for my purpose. I was deeply impressed by all he said, and sought another interview with him, in which he took occasion to declare that, while he was a Unitarian, he was compelled to acknowledge that Unitarianism as a religious force seemed to be of little value. He said he had just had a conversation with his Brother O. B. Frothingham, who was then in England, and that they had mutually reached the conclusion, if something could not be done to put Unitarianism on a different basis, the whole thing would practically die out. Said he: "I want your paper to magnify Christ, and the word 'Christian' before 'Commonwealth' will do that, for Christ, after all, is the only hope of the world."

I need scarcely add that these suggestions and arguments of this Unitarian preacher finally decided the name of the paper, which has so long battled for the cause of Christ in the world's great metropolis. At the same time, it must be readily seen what a protest that name is against the very Unitarianism which Mr. Channing was supposed to defend.

Another striking incident will put on record the testimony of the late Dr. James Martineau. While in London I belonged to an association composed of some of the ablest men in England, such as Dr. Legg, Dr. Fairbairn, Dr. Clifford, Canon Freemantle, Dr. Martineau, etc., etc., etc.

During the last time I met with this association, both Dr. Martineau and myself made addresses. The subject was the "Influence of Definition on Christian Unity." The discussion was opened by one of the most distinguished lawyers and jurors of London. He was on the supreme bench, and I was greatly interested in what he said about lawyers and preachers in contrast. One point I remember was that lawyers seldom evinced any bitterness towards one another, however they might argue their respective points. He was afraid he could not say the same for preachers of the gospel. When Dr. Martineau arose to speak, I at once noticed the profound impression he made by his manner as well as by his words. He was evidently thinking on his feet and his speech was a masterpiece of close reasoning as well as admirable in its lofty courtesy. He went back to the definitions of the Nicene Symbol and discussed briefly the difference between the Arians and Trinitarians of that age. He finally stated deliberately that whatever might be said in favor of the Arian doctrine, from the scriptural or reasonable point of view, he was bound to the conclusion that practically Trinitarianism had been better for the world. I gathered from his remarks that, while he regarded Unitarianism as philosophically more in harmony with human reason, at the same time he regarded Trinitarianism as practically a much greater force in the world for good.

In my remarks, which had been made just before Dr. Martineau spoke, I emphasized the position which the Disciples as a religious people occupied with respect to human creeds. I emphasized the divine creed, and told these distinguished men that what they were talking about as a new discovery within the two last decades was as old as the beginning of the present century with the Disciples of America. I told them that this "rediscovery of Christ," as they called it, was both the center and circumference of the religious movement which the Disciples had inaugurated about seventy-five years before in the United States. Dr. Martineau, in referring to my statement, did not hesitate to pronounce the creed which the Disciples magnified as the true rallying ground for a united Christendom.

A Noble Life.

Our dear Brother Chas. S. Long is deeply enshrined in the hearts of all who knew him and needs no eulogy other than his pure and beautiful life.

Already others have penned loving and fitting words testifying at once to his valuable services to the cause of primitive Christianity and to his loveable peasonal qualities.

I write these words because, in addition to a warm, personal affection for Bro. Long, I was brought into close and confidential relationship with him at the time he determined to become pastor of the young and flourishing church at Dunmore, Pa. I had held two meetings with that church—the only two it has had so far. I knew its splendid spirit of heroism. I believed in its future. And because of this, and of my love for it and for Bro. Long, I labored to see them brought together. It was a love match. Never did church receive its pastor with more tender and sacred joy. Never did pastor come to his church with a fuller spirit of consecration. The whole community took him to their hearts, feeling that he was not only a man of God, but God's man for the place. Then came the sad ending through the mystery of death. Across mountain and plain, over 1,500, miles flashed the message: "Our beloved pastor is dead. Come and conduct the memorial exercises!" So on Sunday, Feb. 25, we gathered in the church which loving hands so recently made beautiful for the reception of the pastor whom now we mourn.

So tender, so loving, so devoted to pastor and pastor's wife, this dear little church was thus soon bereaved. Bro. Long's friends will rejoice to know that he was happy in his new field; that he felt that he had not made a mistake; and that all that loving, generous, consecrated hands and hearts could do was done through the fatal illness of our dear brother.

That God will bless this affliction to the good of the church that loved him so dearly and hoped for many years of his ministry, I am profoundly certain; but none the less is the grief and sense of bereavement hard to bear. God help and comfort the stricken church and our widowed sister and her sorrowing daughter. Our brother beckons to us from the skies and soon, if faithful, we shall meet him.

Our Budget.

—Missouri Lectureship, Palamyra, this week.

—National Congress of Disciples, Indianapolis, next week.

—These meetings emphasize the intellectual side of our work—the side of knowledge.

—Thinking, working, praying, representing the intellectual, practical and devotional phases of our movement, are all essential.

—It is wonderful how earnest work for the Master helps both the praying and the thinking, while prayer helps both the thinking and the working, and likewise, the thinking makes the praying and the working more intelligent and purposeful.

—Push the aggressive work in the churches now, in the early springtime, or ever the evil days come and the heat of summer draws nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in church work, and will hie thee away to the mountains and to the seaside.

—Remember the cry of starving India, and do what you can to feed these famine-stricken millions. God has filled our barns and granaries with abundance; shall we not show our gratitude by ministering to the famishing ones of less favored lands? Send all donations directly to the secretaries of the Foreign Society, Cincinnati, or the C. W. B. M., Indianapolis. See the article of Bro. Wharton elsewhere in this issue.

—As you will want a full report of the great Ecumenical Missionary Conference, to be held in New York next week, including all of the sermons and addresses in full, you will do well to send on your name at once to the Committee on Publication, Room 823, 156 Fifth Ave. The report will be published in two volumes and will cost $2 for the two. While the committee is relying on this to help to meet the expenses of the conference the two volumes will be of far greater value to the purchaser in its rich embodiment of the latest thought on the missionary phase of the Christian religion. After May 1st these two books will cost you $2.50.

—The Christian Orphans' Home Board has decided upon June 28th as the day for their annual benefit excursion for the Home, and give this notice in due time that others may arrange to contribute to its largest possible success.

—The Northeast Iowa Christian Convention will be held in Cedar Rapids, March 26-29. The one and one-third fare certificate plan has been granted those attending this convention, provided there is at least one hundred delegates in attendance, not counting preachers who have paid more than fifty cents in going. Dr. B. B. Tyler is to be present and the chief speaker of the convention.

—The Big Four Railway Company is giving special attention to the Congress of Disciples, to meet in Indianapolis, Ind., March 27. A special circular with map of lines and connections and a beautiful time table book has been printed and distributed, in which information is not only given but assistance offered to preachers who have not yet secured a clergyman's permit in the Central Passenger Association. Such unsolicited favors will not go unappreciated by our people.

—The annual convention of the Platte district of Missouri C. W. B. M. will be held in Richmond, April 9-10. The district comprises the counties of Buchanan, Clay, Clinton, De Kalb, Platte and Ray. A good program has been prepared, and it is the hope of the district manager, Mrs. J. E. Dunn, of Richmond, that every auxiliary and church in the district will be represented in this convention.

—The Christian Preacher's Institute, of S. W. Missouri, will be held in Bolivar, May 15-17. Program will appear in our next issue.

—The editor of this paper acknowledges with thanks the receipt of a "Hayne Suspended Ink-well" from Chas. H. Till, distributingg agent, 207 Lake St., Chicago, which meets "a long-felt want." It fastens to the upper part of the desk, leaving the surface of the desk free, and is a thing both of beauty and convenience. It is adapted to the roll-top desk,and once used makes all others seem in the way.

—We are informed by wire this A. M., from Du Quoin, Ill,, that there were thirty-eight additions there yesterday; seventy in all to date and the meeting only three weeks old. It seems that Chas. Reign Scoville is not the only evangelist among us that can have more than thirty additions in one day. This meeting in Du Quoin is being held by J. V. Coombs, evangelist, and W. H. Kern, pastor. We are glad to hear of this waking up of the church in Du Quoin and hope for a brighter day for our people in that city, in which sectarianism has so long been the ruling religious spirit.

—The church in Canton, Ohio, recently gave a reception to its new members. The occasion was an enjoyable one and a homelike way of making the new members feel at home. The pastor, C. A. Hill, and his wife are well reported of for their faithful work in the church.

—The Foreign Society has recently received $5,650 on the annuity plan. The fund now amounts to $81,000. It will no doubt climb to $100,000 before the missionary year closes.

—We turn our eyes from the Foreign Offering to that of Home Missions. Our home board has only six weeks in which to make the campaign for its one offering from our churches for the year. We should engage most heartily in Home Missions on account of the bearing of Home Mission work on the evangelization of the world—Foreign and Home Missions are the two wings of the church.

—A Mr. Howe was employed by the Topeka Journal—a rival of the Topeka Capital—to write a series of "lay sermons" criticising Mr. Sheldon's management of his paper from the point of view of a newspaper. Instead of doing that he has made an assault on Christianity which will fall very flat. Nobody is interested in Mr. Howe's objections to Christianity; almost everybody is interested in the effort to apply Christianity to the problems of our day. Mr. Howe can now retire into the obscurity out of which he sought to emerge by the Sheldon incident.

—Dr. Seimaro Kubota read a paper before the Indianapolis ministers' meeting, recently, on the kind of mission work needed in Japan. He urged the importance of training young men from Japan in this country, or else establishing a Bible College in that country to train Japanese preachers. He says the people will receive the gospel more readily from a Japanese than from a foreigner. He thinks we are neglecting this work of training a Japanese ministry. Medical missionaries are not as much in demand in Japan as in India and China, because Japanese physicians are more efficient. Dr. Kubota speaks of the difficulty arising from denominational divisions in Japan, but thinks the different religious bodies can be united in that country much more easily than in this country. All missionary societies, he says, must co-operate in the evangeliztion of the world. The paper shows fairly good mastery of English, and we regret the demands on our space forbid us to give more than this brief summary. Bro. Kubota is studying dentistry at Indianapolis and preparing himself to preach the gospel in Japan at his own charges.

—Mrs. Phœbe Cunningham, a subscriber in Northern California, in renewing her subscription writes of the religious needs of her part of the state. She says we have but one preacher between Red Bluff and the Oregon line, and that earnest, consecrated men are sadly needed to do missionary work in that section.

—The Australian Christian says that the beginning of the year 1903 will be the jubilee of the commencement of the restoration movement in Australia and suggests that the occasion be appropriately celebrated. That is the year of our World's Fair in this city, but the Australian Jubilee will probably become history before the fair opens. We have no doubt that the Federal Conference proposed by the A. C. can be made a success and of great value to our cause and people in Australia. We are glad to see them taking up this matter in good time and wish them the most abundant success. There is great power in a large representative enthusiastic religious assembly.

—The Catholic News says that Stephen A. Barnes, an English priest, has rediscovered the grave of St. Peter. The London Tablet says that "the tomb of this apostle has been guarded so sedulously, sealed and walled up so carefully some thirty feet below the surface, that for hundreds of years the remains have not been seen and the exact spot where they lie has been lost." But after years of toil and research Father Barnes has located the grave and awaits permission of the Pope to pierce a certain wall in order to reach and reveal the sacred spot. We are surprised at this confession of unfaithfulness on the part of the keepers of the faith and sacred relics in the city of Rome. When so important a matter as the grave of an apostle, once known to the saints, should be lost while in their keeping and unknown for hundreds of years, how are we to know the truth of many other sacred places over which they have pretended to keep watch for all these centuries? We fear the influence of the rediscovery of St. Peter's actual tomb upon other traditional sacred sites will not be healthful.

—W. J. Lhamon closes an excellent article on "The Rights of Labor," the leading one, in the Preachers' Helper, with the following parody on "The Man with the Hoe," which cannot be too widely known and read. The title of the poem from which these stanzas were selected by Bro. Lhamon is "The Man with the Load," and as to the moral, it is too plain for comment:

Bowed with a weight of fiery stuff,
He leans against the hitching-post and gazes round!
Besotted emptiness is in his face;
He bears a load that still may get him down.
Who made him dull to shame and dead to pride,
A thing that cares not and never thinks,
Filthy, profane, a consort for the pigs?
Who loosened and let down that stubby jaw?
Whence came the scum adhering to those lips?
What was it clogged and burned away his brain?

Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To love and to be loved, to propagate,
And feel the passion of eternity?
Is this the dream he dreamed who shaped the suns
And pillared the blue firmament with light?
Down all the stretch of hell to its last gulf
There is no shape more hideous than this—
More tongued with proof that Darwin didn't know—
Or in all the world of brutish beasts
Is one from which this monster might have come?

O, masters, lord's and rulers in our land,
How may you hope to reckon with this "man?"
How get along with the vote he casts
When there are public offices to fill?
How will it be with candidates when he
No longer hangs upon the reeking bar,
Prepared to fight, to stab, to murder, and
To vote for him who furnishes his drinks?

—Without meaning anything prejudcial to the Sheldon Daily, we are bold to say that if our Christian Endeavor Societies would lend themselves with the same zeal in increasing the subscription lists of the religious journals in which they are supposed to be interested, which they displayed in booming the Daily Capital, it would pan out more in the long run for the cause of Christ. Their interest in the religious daily was all right, but they should not allow their interest in religious journalism to cease with the termination of that experiment. The religious weekly is not an experiment.

—The cross-examination of Dr. Hackett by Attorney Briney this week, closes the trial of Hackett and the case goes to the jury. The only instruction which we have to offer to the jury is that if it finds that Hackett taught that baptism of a penitent believer is for the real as well as formal remission of sins, as contended by Attorney Briney, then its verdict should be that he was guilty of being a very inconsistent Baptist. But, on the contrary, if it finds that Hackett and Campbell held substantially the same view of the relation of baptism to the remission of sins, as argued by Attorney Jones, its verdict should be that Disciples and Baptists should cease quarreling on "the design of baptism" and seek to bring about a closer unity among immersed believers.

—In "On the Wing in Midwinter," in our last issue, a typographical error changes what was intended for the abbreviation of the writer's official relation to this paper, Adv., into a part of the writer's name and of the opposite sex. The writer's initials are simply B. M. The "Ada" should have been Adv. M'g'r.

—Dr. John Watson has suggested that ministers be retired at sixty years of age on half pay. This solution of the old minister's problem is better, perhaps, than shooting them, but it has very serious objections. It overlooks the fact that men are not getting old at so early an age now as they did a generation ago. No well-preserved man now counts himself old at sixty years of age. He ought to be in his prime, so far as usefulness in in the ministry is concerned. Does the average man think of retiring from business at sixty? Nonsense! He has just begun to feel that he understands how to manage business at that age. From sixty to seventy-five ought to be the most useful period in the ministry of a man who has a trained intellect, a reasonably well-preserved body, and a habit of reading and study which keeps him in touch with the life and thought of his times. It takes preparation to be a useful old preacher. Our churches, too, must learn to place a higher estimate on those qualities of a minister which only age can bring.

—That is a rather pertinent question that has been raised in the U. S. Senate as to the number of saloons that have been established in Manila since the American occupation of the city, who run them, who patronize them and the kind of liquors sold, etc. The War Department is asked for this information. The public will be interested in the answer. We are glad to note that a bill has been introduced touching the liquor business in the Philippines which its author believes will have the effect of driving the saloons out of the islands. The introduction of the saloons in the Philippines is at war with every claim we have made concerning our object in holding these islands. Let us at least protect these people from our vices if we can not, speedily, establish among them what is best in our civilization.

—The preachers and press of this city are waging a war of extermination against the "wine-rooms" which have been attached to many saloons—the breeding-places of vice. Strange that any crusade should be necessary to uproot an institution that is so manifestly and wholly evil—recruiting stations for houses of ill fame. The fact that the saloons have attached such an evil as the wineroom shows that they are natural allies of all other vices. They are the evil tree that cannot bear good fruit and that must be hewn down and cast into the fire. God hasten the day!

—Christian College Chronicle for February is given to the memory of Annilee, only child of Mrs. Luella Wilcox St. Clair, co-principal of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. The child was twelve years old and had become the joy of the college household. Many and beautiful are the tributes to this child in this memorial number of the College Chronicle, in prose and poetry, from a representatively wide host of friends, which cannot but sweeten the bitter cup of sorrow which has been pressed to the mother's lips. And as we read these beautiful tributes we are almost pursuaded to say, How sublime it is that some of these rarest flowers of childhood are taken to heaven in all their fragrant innocence and beauty of spirit! Heaven is richer, the words of Jesus take on a deeper meaning, and to the human heart is given a new conception of immortality.

—One of the best meetings held in this city last fall by any of our congregations was held in the Second Church by W. D. Pittman, their present pastor. The good and lasting effects of this meeting in addition to the increased membership has been the increase of work. More money has been raised and more work done in other ways than for some time in the history of the church. A debt of $222.64 to A. B. Moore has been paid and the church debt reduced to $4,600 with $500 more in the treasury ready to apply on the same. During the year 1899 $1661.81 was raised from all sources as against $1030.02 the previous year. Brother Pittman has been an inspiration to the church in many ways and under his wise leadership the church is doing greater things than it has done for years.

—"Ancient Churches of Christ: How were they Formed and What Did they Teach and Practice?" This is the title of a little pamphlet of 15 pages by Elder R. H. Bolton, now of LeRoy, Pa., which will prove both interesting and instructive to those who are seeking the old paths with a view of walking therein. Send to the author for a copy and hand it to your neighbor when you have read it.

—J. S. Myers has resigned as pastor of the First Christian Church, of Philadelphia. In a letter from Dr. E. E. Montgomery, of that church, referring to the cause of Bro. Myers' resignation, he says:

His wife has, for years, been suffering from chronic pulmonary trouble, which has been greatly aggravated by our changeable, humid climate. His longer residence here would not only imperil her life, but endanger the health of other members of his family. I advised his resignation. Bro. Myers has proven himself a faithful, able and untiring minister, thoroughly devoted to the interests of his church. There have been about 100 additions since he came, and the Sunday-school has nearly doubled in attendance. I very sincerely regret that the conditions have been such he has felt it necessary to seek a more equable climate.

Bro. Myers has received a very flattering call from Ft. Worth, Tex., which he has under consideration. He passed through the city last week on his way to Sedalia, his old home, where he has held eight meetings, and where he has already begun another. After that he goes to Ft. Worth for a meeting.

—A telegram reached us last week after we had gone to press, from Bro. E. N. Newman, Richmond Va., announcing the killing by accident of Bro. F. M. Anderson, state evangelist of Virginia. A Richmond newspaper clipping received since gives the following particulars:

Mr. Anderson accompanied a brother minister a short distance up the railroad near Chilhowie, to talk state missions. They separated and Mr. Anderson started back to the station to join Rev. J. W. West by appointment, that they might dine together and talk over business pertaining to the state work. While on the railroad bridge, which crosses the middle fork of Holston River, the passenger train overtook and crushed him to death. While upon the bridge he had a paper in his hand, studying deeply, as seen by eyewitnesses, and did not hear the train until almost upon him. He ran and only lacked about four feet of being over when struck. The engineer supposed that he could get over and did not slow down until nearly upon him.

The president and secretary of the board speak of Bro. Anderson in terms of affection and appreciation. Bro. Anderson was a student in the Steelville Academy, in this state, a few years ago, and at his request the editor of this paper delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the academy the year he finished his course there. He was a bright young man of fine character, high aim and a great zeal for the cause with which he was identified. He was making a useful minister of the gospel in the East, and his untimely death is greatly to be lamented. Truly Isaac Watts was right when he wrote:

"Dangers stand thick through all the ground
To hurry mortals home."

WRITING MACHINE FOR SALE.

A new Munson Writing Machine, in perfect order, is offered for sale for $50, cash. This machine is listed at $100. It is not one of the cheap toys which are advertised at low prices, but a standard, substantial, practicable typewriter. This is an excellent opportunity for some preacher to secure a good machine at half price. Address Christian Publishing Company, 1522 Locust St., St Louis.

"Never Do Things by Halves."

Sometimes the condition of your health could be described as half-sick and half-well. You may not be ill enough to go to bed but too ill to be happy or efficient in your home or your business. Why not be wholly well? Your dragged-out, tired feeling is due to poor blood and nothing else. Make your blood rich by using Hood's Sarsaparilla. It works to perfection; there is nothing like it.

Tired Feeling — "My husband would come home from work so tired he could hardly move. He began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and it cured him. It cured my girl's headaches." Mrs. A. J. Sprague, 57 Oak St., Fall River, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

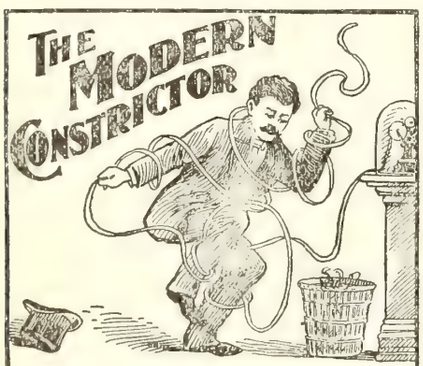
—Wonderful reports come from Springfield, Mo., of the evangelistic work in that city by Major Cole, the evangelist. A communication by John V. Farwell, in a local paper of that city, says:

"Marvelous" is the only word to express the results of Major Cole's evangelistic meetings in Springfield. On two successive days he kneeled with an erring daughter of Eve and led her to Jesus, who received such while on earth. Over 700 have given their allegiance to Jesus Christ in these meetings, and the two who had the "most to be forgiven them" were greeted by a church full of women, one by one, in token of their promised aid and fellowship. At the close of a recent meeting nearly every man in the house came forward and knelt with more than a dozen pastors to make a new consecration and resolve that in the future they might be one in Christ in his work, that they may be "approved of God."

We are sure our readers will rejoice in all evangelistic work, no matter by whom done, that causes people "to give their allegiance to Jesus Christ."

—Charles M. Sharpe has resigned his work at Lawrence, Kas., to take effect March 25th, in order to pursue his biblical studies in the University of Chicago. The Lawrence Daily World says: "Mr. Sharpe is one of the ablest ministers in the city," and that "his resignation has caused widespread regret on the part of the members of the church." The official board passed highly complimentary resolutions.

—G. A. Hess, of Greene, Ia., says that if there is an over supply of pastors anywhere he would like to see an overflow in the direction of Iowa. He names four churches, viz., Nora Springs, Marble Rock, Clarksville and Bristow, that are without pastors. These churches cannot pay a large salary, but for a zealous, able, consecrated preacher they afford a fine opening. Bro. Hess preaches for the church in Greene.



The man tangled in the tape from the ticker is the type of the average business man. His business cares wrap him about like the coils of a constrictor and slowly crush out his life. The common sign of the business man's slavery is "weak stomach," the natural consequence of the rapid eating, the indigestible pastry, the coffee and pie or doughnuts, with which many a man stuffs his stomach under the name of "quick lunch." The quickest way back to a strong stomach and sound health is to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medcal Discovery until perfectly cured. It goes to the root of disease. It removes the cause of ill-health. It makes more blood and better blood, and this blood nourishes every organ in the body to the highest point of vigorous health.

"During the summer and fall of 1896," writes Chas. H. Sergeant, Esq., of Plain City, Madison Co., Ohio. "I became all 'run down,' nerves were out of order. I wrote to Dr. Pierce for advice. He said I had general debility, and advised Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and, thanks to you for your advice, I used six bottles; and since I stopped taking it about one year ago, I have not taken any medicine of any kind, and have been able to work every day. My appetite is good, I can eat three square meals a day, and I do not feel that miserable burning in the stomach after eating. My blood and nerves are in good shape, and, I am in good running order."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

Personal Mention.

W. W. Pew reports $40 raised at Dayton, Wash., March 4th, for Foreign Missions.

G. E. Jones reports $11.30 raised at New Haven and $11.44 at Chamois, Mo., for world-wide missions.

F. A. Lindenmeyer says that Lexington, Neb., more than raised its apportionment for Foreign Missions.

E. E. Cowperthwaite, of El Dorado, Kan., says that they doubled their apportionment for Foreign Missions this year.

H. M. Brooks has accepted a call from the church in Tuscola, Ill., and will soon remove to that place from Paris, Ill.

As an aid to his work in North Tonawanda, N. Y., A. Hootman is publishing the Christian Exponent, a neat, newsy and helpful paper.

W. A. Fite, while pursuing his classical course in Kentucky University, will preach every Sunday for the church in Washington, Mason County.

F. N. Calvin has gone from Milwaukee, Wis., to Colorado Springs, Colorado, having accepted the pastorate of the church in Colorado Springs.

E. W. Thornton writes that the Mayfield (Ky.) brethren expect to have Evangelist J. V. Coombs with them in a meeting, beginning about April 15th.

J. S. Myers, of Philadelphia, is holding a protracted meeting in the East Side Christian Church, of Sedalia, Mo., assisted by the pastor, F. L. Cook.

R. M. Messick has been called to Garfield, Wash., for one year, from March 4, for full time. His family remain in Salem, his former field of labor.

James Egbert says that Missoula, Mont., raised $60 for Foreign Missions. Just double its apportionment and the largest offering of the kind in the history of the church.

We are indirectly informed that Elder J. B. Briney, of this city, will preach for the church in Owensboro, Ky., during the absence of their pastor, R. W. Crossfield, on his Oriental tour.

W. H. Waggoner is in a good missionary institute at Toulon, Ill. He remains several weeks in Illinois and then goes to Fulton, Mo. He can remain in Missouri to hold other institutes if desired.

Oscar Sweeney, who recently resigned his work at Unadilla, Neb., has located with the church at ElDorado Springs, Mo., and has already entered upon his work there, and is encouraged with the outloook.

E. C. Davis, of Springfield, Mass., sends us the following good repot: "Our mission church, of 54 members, raised $39 for work in foreign fields. We are thankful to share in the privilege of giving."

W. H. Waggoner's missionary institutes, illustrated by a fine selection of stereopticon views, are proving to be both profitable and popular. He draws full houses wherever he goes. Was at Labanon, Ind., March 8, and at Toulon, Ill., last week.

R. H. Bolton, who edited the Christian Messenger at Everett, Mass., for a number of years, and who is now located at Le Roy, Pa., has added to his labors the publication of a local paper called the Le Roy Messenger, which he will evidently find helpful in his pastoral work.

The tenth annual commencement exercises of the Lincoln Medical College, Lincoln, Neb., were held in the parlors of the Lincoln Hotel, March 15, and after the rendering of a suitable program degrees were conferred by President W. P. Aylesworth.

In the absence of M. E. Harlan from his pulpit in the First Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., recently, his wife supplied for him and the matter seems to have been quite a sensation. Several reporters were present and her sermons were reported in all of the leading papers in New York City. The World published her two sermons in full, and this led to an invitation for her to address the "Woman's National Council" at their triennial gathering in February, 1902. These reports and the invitation are fine compliments to Sister Harlan's pulpit ability.

THIN HAIR

Lots of people have thin hair. Perhaps their parents had thin hair; perhaps their children have thin hair. But this does not make it necessary for them to have thin hair.

One thing you may rely upon—

makes the hair healthy and vigorous; makes it grow thick and long. It cures dandruff also.

It always restores color to gray hair,—all the dark, rich color of early life. There is no longer need of your looking old before your time.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"As a remedy for restoring color to the hair I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor has no equal. I has always given me perfect satisfaction in every way."

J. P. Myers, who succeeded G. W. Buckner at Clarksville, Mo., Jan. 1st, writes that he is well pleased with his new field, and the brethren of that church raised its apportionment for Foreign Missions.

Dr. Albert Buxton has been re-elected chancellor of Add-Ran University, Waco, Texas. At the same time he will serve as pastor of the church at Hillsboro, having asked the trustees to appoint a president of the faculty to relieve him of some of the burdens of college administration.

F. W. Emerson, pastor First Christian Church, Topeka, Kan., has undertaken the publication of a local paper called the Church Index. The second edition before us indicates clearly the demand for such an aid to his pastoral duties in its announcements, news and editorial items.

Geo. F. Hall has been campaigning in the East for social purity, speaking under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., at Allentown, Pa. At a great meeting for men only, held in the Academy of Music, 800 took his pledge to a purer life.

FITS Permanently Cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2.00 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline, Ltd., 931 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Contrary to the wishes of the church in Geneva, Ohio, N. H. Allen will adhere to his resignation, to take effect April 1st. He has been with that church two years and will carry with him the prayers and well wishes of his brethren. Bro. Allen has several fields awaiting him, but will take a few weeks' vacation before locating again.

W. E. Bates reluctantly gave up his work at Exline, Iowa, that he might better concentrate his time and efforts at Cowgill, Breckenridge and Jamesport, Mo. He will reside at Cowgill, where he preaches one-half time. The church in Jamestown is only about two months old, has 45 members, has rented the Baptist house, and has the largest Bible-school in the town. The church at Exline, Iowa, raised $10 for Foreign Missions, March 4th, and the church at Cowgill $5.

B. S. Ferrell, of Watseka, Ill., sends us the following: "We are in the midst of a most interesting revival, with Bro. Victor W. Dorris in the lead. I am free to confess I have never heard his superior as a teacher and preacher, and I am not speaking in haste, either. No offering of the brotherhood is ever sidetracked in his meetings; consequently this congregation observed Foreign Missionary Day and raisd more than it has for years. How I do wish we could turn a dozen or more men of his power loose in the great cities of this denomination-ridden country of ours."

Sumner T. Martin and wife were tendered a reception by the Mason City (Ia.) Church last week. The Mason City Globe says of it: "If there ever existed a doubt of any kind in the minds of Rev. and Mrs. Sumner T. Martin of the positive affection in which they were held by the members of the Christian Church in this city, skepticism was certainly brushed away last night. It is rare that a midweek social or reception fills any church in the city, but last night was a noticeable exception at the Christian Church. The occasion was a farewell reception to the pastor and his wife, who are soon to remove to Omaha, and the church was crowded with the membership." After a good program the pastor and his wife were made the recipients of some substantial gifts as a token of the estimation in which they are held by the church and community.

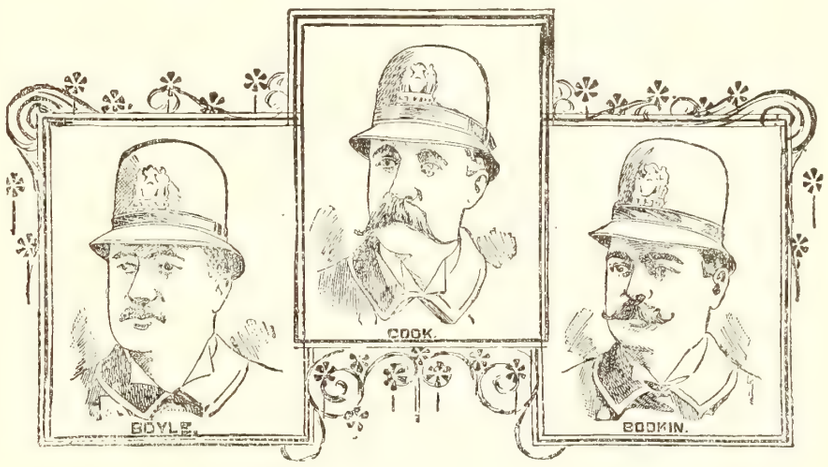
G. A. Hoffmann.

G. A. Hoffmann, whose portrait will be found on the first page of this issue, was born in Baden, Germany, August 31, 1847. In 1851 he was brought by his parents to the United States. They lived for a time in Cincinnati, and then settled on a farm in Ralls county, Mo. He attended the district school, and afterward spent three years at the State University at Columbia and two years at Christian University, Canton. In 1875, while a student at Columbia, he united with the Christian Church under the preaching of Dr. Hopson. L. B. Wilkes took his confession and Pres. J. K. Rogers baptized him. He began preaching almost at once, and during the twenty-five years since his conversion has been pastor of eighteen churches. He spent three and one-half years as county and state Sunday-school evangelist, and was corresponding secretary of the Missouri state missionary work for ten years. For one year he was office editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and quite recently was for one year editor of the Register-Review. Three years ago he became publisher of the New Christian Quarterly, and maintained it until publication was discontinued at the first of the present year. Six years ago he was selected statistical secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, and still holds that position, in which he has done and is doing much valuable work.

Mr. Hoffmann's record of his work shows that he has preached in over six hundred places in Missouri, organized forty-two congregations, dedicated fifty-three houses of worship, has been instrumental in adding over three thousand persons to the church, and for twenty years averaged a sermon a day. He now resides with his family at Columbia. He is the field agent and general business representative of the Christian Pub. Co., in which he has been a stockholder and director for several years.

Wonderful Cures By Swamp-Root.

To Prove What This Famous New Discovery will do for YOU, Every Reader of the "St. Louis Christian-Evangelist" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.



65th Police Precinct, Greater New York.

Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Nov. 11th, 1899.

Gentlemen:

In justice to you, I feel it my duty to send you an acknowledgment of the receipt of the sample bottle of Swampt-Root remedy you so kindly sent me. I had been out of health for the past five years with kidney and bladder trouble. Our best physicians prescribed for me. They would relieve me for the time being, but the old complaint would in a short time return again. I sent for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and I found it did me a world of good. Since then I have taken eight small bottles purchased of my druggist and I consider myself perfectly cured. I do not have to get up during the night to urinate as I formerly did, three or four times a night, but now sleep the sleep of peace. My back is all right again, and in every way I am a new man. Two of my brother officers are still using Swamp-Root. They, like myself, cannot say too much in praise of it. It is a boon to mankind. We recommand it to all humanity who are suffering from kidney and bladder diseases.

My brother officers (whose signatures accompany this letter) as well as myself, thank you for the blessing you have brought to the human race in the compounding of Swamp-Root.

We remaim, Yours very truly, JAMES COOK,
HUGH E. BOYLE,
Officers of the 65th Police Precinct, Greater New York. JOHN J. BODKIN,

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root the one which we publish this week for the benefit of the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers, speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you cannot understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you—and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and get up many times during the night to empty the bladder, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, sometimes the feet, limbs, or body bloat, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative proprieties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

Chicago Letter.

The only interdenominational gathering of preachers in this city is composed of five representatives of the five bodies—Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian and Christian. It is called the Fellowship Club, and it meets once a month at the Palmer House for luncheon, after which a discussion on some vital theme is had. The subject at the last two meetings has been a book by Frank Crane, the well-known Methodist pastor, entitled "The Religion of To-morrow."

It is a book with the breath of life in it. The author affirms his belief in all the great doctrines of the historic creeds, but thinks "the common notions of these doctrines contain error." And then he goes to work literally to demolish the doctrines, as commonly held and understood. His central thought is that "religion is the personal influence of God." The object and scope of God's personal influence is "to change mankind from its sinful condition into a condition called 'the kingdom of heaven;' not primarily to prepare us for another world, but to prepare us for right life here and hereafter, here or anywhere."

Some of the chapter titles are: "The Kingdom of Heaven," "Dynamics," "Eternal Life," "The Shadow of the Cross," "The Light from the Cross," "The Incarnation," "The Leaven," "Hell," "Life in the Heavens." He holds that the central doctrine of Christianity is not based upon the cross, but upon the resurrection, and salvation is not the legal consequence of the dead Christ's deed, but the present effect of the living Christ's immanence, made possible by his death. "We are realizing the second advent." "It is Easter morning in theology. Throw away your crucifixes! Receive ye the Holy Ghost!"

This is not intended as a review, but merely a notice of a remarkable book. There is a tinge of Bushnellian thought in it; some things are said as no doubt Bushnell would say them now. Speaking on this feature, Dr. Crane said: "Bushnell I regard as the greatest preacher that ever lived next to Christ and Paul." Some of the preachers are wondering how Crane manages to stay in the Methodist fold. One of them inquired of a Methodist brother as to the judgment of his colleagues on Crane, and he replied: "It isn't at all likely that Crane will ever be bishop." Herbert S. Stone Co., Chicago and New York. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

L. A. Crandall, D. D., pastor of the Memorial Baptist Church, read a fine paper Monday, March 12, before our Preachers' Association on "Union of Baptists and Disciples." After calling attention to the fact that both bodies profess to take the Bible alone as guide, he raised the question: "Why separate?" and answered: "Because we differ in interpretations of the Bible." And he might have added, because we make our interpretations of the Bible conditions of membership, even though those interpretations are not drawn up in creed forms. Concerning union he inquired: "Is it desirable?" and answered: "Yes." "Is it feasible?" "Not now." He dwelt upon the great differences that exist in each body among its own ministers, and observed that it is "easier to divide one into two than to unite two into one."

Our very likeness is a hindrance, paradoxical as it may seem. A family quarrel is always bitterer than any other. Both bodies have a wealth of tradition and an esprit de corps which neither would willingly sacrifice. But the question arises, Need there be any such sacrifice? As practical measures, tending to promote a better understanding and closer fellowship he suggested: 1. A national conference of Baptists, Disciples and Freewill Baptists. 2. Union meetings of the ministers of the two bodies in different cities at least four times a year. In the discussion that followed an additional suggestion was made. 3. Exchange of pulpits. It was a pleasant and profitable hour.

The Chicago churches are busy with the March offering. It began with the First Church on the 11th, at $30, and we hope to make it more. Evanston has already contributed $45. Englewood is working for $100; Monroe Street, $75; Union and North Side, $100 each, and others in proportion. Chicago churches are poor enough to be thoroughly alive to the need of missionary work. J. W. Allen is working very successfully with his old congregation, the West Side. E. W. Darst goes to Texas for his health, and immediately engages in a meeting with the Houston Church! That is a typical preacher's vacation.

The labor disturbance shows no signs of abatement. There are now more than 50,000 union workmen idle. There is abundance of union work at union wages staring them in the face, and yet they strike. Why? Because the unions claim the right to say how much shall constitute a day's work; not simply how many hours, but how much work in the hours, and when the workman has done the prescribed amount, he is to sit down until the clock points to the time to quit! A Saturday half holiday is also one of the points at issue. The trouble arose over these matters and the number of the strikers has been augmented through "sympathy." Nonunion men are employed in many places, but the police department must exercise unusual vigilance to avoid riots.

The Country and Village Church.

Having had some experience in the past five years with the above class of churches I have concluded to make a few remarks. And I wish to mention a few obstacles with which I have come in contact.

In the first place, there is not that cordial, brotherly feeling between the country and village church on the one hand and the city church that should obtain. Nor will such feeling ever obtain under our present organization. What we need is an organization that will make all classes of churches on better terms by making them better acquainted one with the other. The most important work to be done is with the country and village churches.

It is from these churches that we have in the past received our greatest preachers and many of our best members in the city churches. And to be specific, it seems to me that our first great need is country organization for country evangelization. Our manner of conduct should be reversed.

As it now stands we are always looking for the strongest preacher for the strongest church. This is, in my judgment, wrong. We should put the strong man in the weak but important place. The weaker man should be placed with the strong church, and he should be made to understand that he is being sent to the strong church because he is weak and that the church is willing to share its strength with him. There are many reasons why the strong men should be placed with the weak churches. First, the weak or country churches will have a respect for the teaching of the strong man that they will not have for the weak man. If he is broad in his presentation of the truth he will destroy that envy and prejudice which so often exists on the part of the country church against the city church.

Members of the country church are all the time streaming into the city and many of them neglect or refuse to identify themselves with the city church for many reasons. First, there are those who have been taught by the little, weak preacher that the city churches are proud and hateful and wholly destitute of Christianity. And then we have a class of members, whom we usually call retired farmers, that not only retire from the farm, but also from religion as well. It is their opportunity to deadhead their way. They attend the city church, but the preaching don't exactly suit them. Go to them for help and they will tell you that they are helping the old home church in the country. And when the country church asks them for help they say they have to help the city church, and by this manner of conduct they help no place. I have nothing to say against state and district organization, only when they fail to do the work and meet demands that they never can meet. And I am not going to propose any plans, but I must say that in my judgment our hope lies in country organization and evangelization. And I will go further and say that in my opinion a thorough state organization is impossible without country organization. I had thought of saying some other things, but for fear of being too lengthy I shall close.

Food Rules Complexion.

MEDICINES OF NO AVAIL WHEN IMPROPER FOOD IS PERSISTED IN.

A young lady whose first name is Blossom, and who was for many years misnamed, but is now properly named, tells some interesting facts about her efforts to clear up her complexion, which in spite of all sorts of medicines and washes, face bleaches, etc., etc., were ineffective, because the root of the difficulty was not removed.

Her own story is interesting. "From childhood up, I, with my sisters and brothers, have been allowed the use of both tea and coffee. After I became a young lady of course it was no more than human that I should wish for a beautiful complexion like several of my companions, but which I did not have. Many different courses were taken to accomplish my end, such as applying face bleach, taking bottles and bottles of cleansing medicines, etc., all to no purpose.

"My older sister had learned before me that coffee was the root of the difficulty and urged me to begin taking hot water. I tried it, but could find little satisfaction in so weak and unpalatable a beverage. While visiting a friend one day, I accepted a cup of coffee (as I supposed), when I noticed that this particular coffee had a hundred per cent. better taste than the coffee we had been in the habit of using. Upon inquiring for the receipt of this very pleasing beverage, I learned that I had partaken of the noted Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

"I had struck the goal at last. This was the morning beverage that I wanted, and this, it turned out, was the secret of the beautiful complexion of my friend. Of course we immediately commenced using it in our home, and I want to say that today not a more healthy, robust family is to be found in the United States, and the fact is attributable to our abandonment of coffee and the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee." We do not feel disposed to publish the full name of Miss Blossom, but the name can be given to those interested, by letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich. The young lady lives in Traverse City, Mich.

It may be of interest to know that many of the young ladies' seminaries throughout the country have discontinued the use of coffee and are using Postum Food Coffee. A letter from Rev. Alex. Burr, Secretary of the Seattle, Wash., Young Ladies' Seminary, recites: "We are using Postum Cereal Food Coffee on the table, greatly to the satisfaction of the faculty and a large number of boarding students."

Colorado Letter.

Let us continue in this letter the topic considered last week, i. e., the capture of the cities for the Christ.

The method of bringing the gospel of salvation to men is not specifically revealed. The command of the Master is to make known to all men the glad tidings of great joy. How? At this point there is abundant room for the use of sanctified common sense. The gospel may be published by the use of the printing press. We have the "iron preacher." This is a modern method. Of it the first Christians had no knowledge. The only preachers with which they were acquainted were flesh-and-blood men. They had not even the New Testament. It is possible to make known the message of life in informal conversations. This was a common method in the olden time. The heralds of mercy, in the early days of Christianity, went from house to house and talked to the people. By the way, they conversed with men about Jesus—his nature, official dignity and mission. Many were in this manner persuaded to turn to the Lord. There are many ways by which the message of redeeming love may be published other than by public, formal discourse. The method of doing this work must vary with times and places. This is simply common sense. In the beginning of the gospel the methods of bringing the Word to men varied. Read the sermons in the Book of Acts. How various the presentations of Jesus and his claims! In only a single instance was there even an apparent failure.

In our country and time every congregation, in a city of considerable size, ought to have a plurality of pastors. It is absurd to require one man to preach a new, fresh and vigorous sermon twice every Lord's day, attend the services of the church during the week, visit from house to house, meantime looking after all the details of the life and work of the church, and at the same time reach the outside world. Such a requirement is unreasonable. What then? Let there be a plurality of pastors, and let the work be divided among them. Let one man be the preacher. There is no reason for surprise that by the present preposterous arrangement the cities are not captured for the Christ. The overworked pastor has no time to even attempt to reach the unchristianized part of the crowded populations of our great cities He does well to hold what has been gained.

Paul, in Ephesus, had what our brethren of the Protestant Episcopal Church call a "staff of clergy." His name stands for the work that was done in Ephesus; but his speech to the elders or bishops of the church in Ephesus, delivered at Miletus, reveals the fact that he had numerous coadjutors in this great work. No wonder that Demetrius said in his speech to the silversmiths that "almost throughout all Asia this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people."

Our eldership is very unlike the eldership of the apostolic church. The presbytery of that early day gave itself to the ministry of the Word —not to farming, carpentering, banking, practicing medicine or law, working insurance or teaching school. The distinction which, in fact if not in so many words, we make as to "teaching elders" and "ruling elders" is a bit of lumber that our fathers brought with them when they abandoned the Presbyterian camp. It is a distinction without warrant in the New Testament. The plurality of elders in the church of the apostolic time was a plurality of men in a given congregation engaged, as were the apostles themselves, in preaching and teaching the gospel of God's grace. Simon Peter spoke of himself as "fellow elder." Consider, if you please, what that implies. To the Ephesian "bishops" Paul said: "I gave you an example" as to how to do the work of a minister of Jesus Christ. A return to the New Testament teaching on the subject of church organization would be a most important step in the direction of capturing the cities for the Christ.

Women can and ought to be utilized in our effort to capture the cities, as they are not now employed. Let us, for a moment if you please, consider the position and work of women in the early days of Christianity.

Women of means co-operated with the Master in his personal ministry. The names of Mary, of Magdala, Joanna, the wife of Chuzas, and Susanna are written by Luke in the eighth chapter of his Gospel. He says also that "many others" besides those named "ministered unto him." "Many women were there" when Jesus died. Two of the Marys sat "over against the sepulchre" when their Lord was buried. It was a woman who first preached the gospel of the resurrection. In the protracted prayer-meeting which preceded the the wonderful demonstrations on the great Pentecost day in Jerusalem women participated. "Mary, the mother of Jesus," was there when "the day of Pentecost was now come." Peter preached, and in his discourse quoted an Old Testament prediction in which are the words, "Your daughters shall prophesy," and also the words, "On my handmaidens in those days will I pour forth of my Spirit and they shall prophesy." Jehovah declared by his servant Joel that his "handmaidens" would in the new dispensation "prophesy;" and Paul said that to prophesy is to "speak unto men edification and exhortation and consolation." "Philip, the evangelist," whose home was in Cæsarea, "had four daughters, virgins, who did prophesy." And who has not heard of "Phœbe, our sister," who was "a servant" or "deaconness" of the Cenchrea Church of Christ. Priscilla was one of Paul's helpers in the gospel who imperiled her life in the work of the Master. In the last chapter of the epistle to the Romans Paul mentions a woman named Mary who, he says, "bestowed much labor" on the "saints" who lived in Rome. He says also in the same place that Persis "labored much in the Lord." Euodia and Syntyche, who were members of the church in Philippi, Paul says, "labored" with him "in the gospel." In his epistle to Titus Paul speaks, in the third chapter, of certain "aged women"—why not call them "elderesses?" The word, in the Greek, is the the same as that which is translated "elders." In the one case the gender is masculine, in the other feminine. The characteristics or qualifications of these "aged women" indicate that they occupied an official station in the church. They were required to "be reverent in demeanor, not slanderers nor enslaved to much wine, teachers of that which is good; that they may train the young women to love their husbands, to love their children; to be soberminded, chaste, workers at home, kind, being in subjection to their own husbands, that the Word of God be not blasphemed." These women seem to have worked with the "elders" in caring for the spiritual health of the church. The first meeting attended by the first Christian missionarias to Europe was a female prayer-meeting. The first sermon was delivered to a congregation of women. The first convert to Christ in Europe was a woman. One of the few converts made by Paul in Athens was a woman named Damaris. In Thessalonica, under the ministry of Paul and Silas, "chief women, not a few" turned to the Lord. In the church which was in Corinth, women participated in the public worship in other ways than by singing.

Would you ordain women to preach in public? Not necessarily; but, why not?

There is much to be done besides preaching, as the word is generally understood. How about going from house to house with the message of divine love?

Kansas City Letter.

The "Silver Jubilee" services, recently held in this city, afforded an additional proof of the growing interest of the Disciples in world-wide evangelism. Despite inclement weather and snow-blocked streets the attendance was large. About 50 out-of-town brethren were in attendance. There was inspiration in song and speech, information, too, and careful detail instruction in methods. From those whose successes are the commission to instruct we learned how to make preparation for our offerings. These same experienced gentlemen guided us through the studies of technique in taking the offering.The instruction was of a most definite and satisfactory kind, partaking of the nature of institute work. Such discussions are needed. How good men flounder through ignorance! How great is the need of definite instruction as to procedure. Without any disparagement of the contributions of others, the deepest and most abiding inspirations came from the addresses of F. M. Rains and G. L. Wharton. Mr. Rains came to us, though his physician had ordered him to give up his work, and with Spartan heroism took up the burden of his work. His presence under such conditions stirred all hearts. We felt like we had, not only heroes and martyrs in the foreign field, but hero and martyr stuff, too, in our consecrated secretary. His address was one of fervor and of power, and the chords of the heroic in us all, though perchance long slumbering, were touched to answering nobleness. The devout Wharton added to this impressiveness. Travel-worn, tired, warned by his physician also that he worked in imminent peril, he had a heart-message which he was constrained to deliver. And with what unforgettable power and sobering seriousness was this story told. All in all it was a great day and will live long.

The first Lord's day in March was a notable one at the Sixth and Prospect Church, memorable through the addresses—one in the morning by F. M. Rains on "Grounds for Encouragement in the Missionary Work," the other by G. L. Wharton on the India Famine—and, too, by the response of the church to these appeals, $600 for the support of a missionary, $175 for the relief of the famine sufferers. This church is developing very rapidly in the missionary spirit. Each year witnesses a forward movement. It is a great church, and God is richly blessing it.

We are all interested in Foreign Missions. It is the burden of speech and prayer. This is well. But what folly to shut our eyes to the opportunities at our own door. We are giving grudgingly, miserly, to our state work. Only a few churches are having part in this fellowship. Our receipts are pitiably small. Shall we abandon our state work? Shall we close our eyes to the great work that has been done through our state organization? Is there a charm only in remoteness, and have we no eyes for the field at home? What is the secret of this strange apathy, this criminal lethargy, this drowsy unconcern? Why do not our preachers take the offering for this work? Some rather severe indictments have been recently leveled at our Missouri ministry. There is no space here to consider the justice or injustice of these charges,but room there is to say that the most caustic and unanswerable criticism ever made on our minisitry is the report of the state board. Only a few of our churches are so much as touching this work with the tips of their fingers. It is a shame that cries to heaven. We need to be roughly tumbled out of our sleek complacency and smooth satisfaction and learn the whole bitter truth that our state work is pinched and starved through our neglect! Write to T. A. Abbott a word of cheer—take the collection

The writer has in lecture work recently been brought into a close knowledge of the workings of some of the larger denominational colleges. The contrast between these splendidly equipped institutions and our own struggling institutions saddens. How can we as a people hope to maintain the respect of the public, move into that large place to which we are called with this confirmed indifference to our educational needs and opportunities? Doctrinal soundness will not save us here, nor even evangelistic enterprise. In competition of this kind we are hopelessly distanced. The evil is rooted, not in our poverty, but in our apathy. Ours is the financial ability to put our struggling institutions on their feet if only ours were the heart-willingness. Two or three of our colleges feel the throb of a new impulse and are moving to the front, but the remainder are far in the rear. The time for reformation has come. This whole educational question must receive a new emphasis. We must readjust ourselves to the conditions and give this matter a more commanding place in our thought. It is vital. The "overmastering issue" seems to overshadow nothing. We view it clear out of its just proportions. The agitation is confined chiefly to a few of our college men. The gravity of the situation seems to be in no adequate way appreciated. There is no general advance. Is the time not ripe for an educational propaganda? May we not have concerted action? This would bring victory. We are a great people. Ours is a giant's strength. Shall we use it? Shall we use it now?

Notable additions are being made to our Missouri ministry. R. Lin Cave comes to Independence. Robert J. Frank takes up the work at Fulton. S. B. Moore has been persuaded to leave Denver to lead on the hosts at Moberly. The church at Liberty has its eyes on President J. H. Hardin, and we trust will be successful in its efforts to bring him to our state. Other strong men are coming to us. Now if we can only hold those we have, with such valuable recruits our ranks will be materially reinforced.

Are you beginning to hear from B.L. &C.C.Smith? No doubt you will soon, and will you not graciously receive their message? Oh, the heartaches that come to our faithful secretaries over the indifference, often, of those who stand as the representatives of Christ on earth, the apathy of men who have been called to the ministry of the gospel of grace. Let us stand with them in the forefront rather than idle in the rear. It is our battle, our opportunity, our responsibility. It is as reasonable to suppose a condition when the preacher jogs up a lazy secretary as the opposite. Why should a preacher need exhortation and appeal? That we do is our sorrow and our great shame. Let us rally and rally all around our secretaries, who would lead us on.

Your scribe begs leave in this omnibus way to thank his friends and reviewers for the many kindly and appreciative notices of "Some Latter-day Religion," and to express the wish, stated in the preface of this book, that it may "counteract in some slight degree the baneful effects of the Athenian itching for new things;" also to say, as orders for the book still come to him, that Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, publishes the book, to whom all communications should be addressed. And again, for beautiful courtesies and gracious words, sincerest and abiding thanks.

To Cure Drunkards

MARY'S MIRACLE.

The day of working miracles,
I'm sure is far from past,
And to illustrate what I mean,
I'll tell you of the last
Great one, that happened right to me,
For I was part of it, you see.

You know the life I used to lead—
A kind of living death,
A drunkard of the hopless kind—
For scarce a sober breath
I ever drew, and hope and pride
Were lost to me and all beside.

MRS. MARY HARRY,

920 York St., Newport, Ky.

No, no, not all—there was my wife,
God bless her ev'ry hair!
She saved me from a drunkard's grave.
And from Drink's fiendish power.
Just how she saved me you shall see—
This is the way she told it me

When hope was almost dead within
Her faithful constant breast,
She read of Dr. Haines' Cure.
Then without stay or rest,
She sent for Trial Sample Free,
And gave it, unbeknown to me!

I drank of it at ev'ry meal—
I ate it in my bread,
While Mary watched me anxiously,
But never word she said;
Until one day, I stopped to think,
That I had lost my love for drink!

When, quite unconscious, I was cured,
Then Mary told me all;
It seemed a kindness straight from God,
A modern miracle:
I call it this, because my wife
And Haines' Cure had saved my life

And now my little story's done,
And ev'ry word is true,
And what this Treatment did for me,
The same 'twill do for you:
And wives and mothers—one and all,
Take heart of Mary's Miracle.

A Trial Package Mailed Free to All.

This new discovery can be given in tea, coffee or food. It does its work so silently and surely that while the devoted wife, sister or daughter looks on, the drunkard is reclaimed even against his will and without his knowledge or co-operation. Send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Haines, 1841 Glenn Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and he will mail enough of the remedy free to show how it is used in tea, coffee or food and that it will cure the dreaded habit quietly and permanently; also full directions how to use it, books and testimonials from hundreds who have been cured, and everything needed to aid you in saving those near and dear to you from a life of degradation and ultimate poverty and disgrace.

The St. Louis Letter.

Next to better co-operation each congregation in St. Louis needs a better plant for its work. This may sound strange in view of the numerous church buildings erected in this city during the last decade, but it is nevertheless true for two especial reasons.

In the first place, our houses are too small to accommodate the work in each locality, with but few exceptions, to say nothing of the need for larger room for co-operative and evangelistic purposes. Take the Fourth Church building, in North St. Louis, for an example. This is a frame house with an auditorium which will seat easily about two hundred people; perhaps two hundred and fifty. And yet, into this room are crowded every Sunday from two hundred and fifty to three hundred Sunday-school scholars. The result is better imagined than told. Classes, lessons and sound mingle together in indescribable confusion. Mt. Cabanne had to build an extension to her Sunday-school room last summer to accommodate her school. The First Church has to use chairs in the auditorium and often the lecture room in addition to accommodate their regular audiences for worship on Sundays. The Beulah and Compton Heights Churches are each limited to a small chapel for all their work. Give either one of these churches a commodious house of worship and they will do two or three times the work they are now doing. We have a number of pastors that could and would be preaching to a thousand people twice each Sunday instead of from two to four hundred each as things are now.

And then when it comes to a mass meeting we are out. We have not a house that will hold a thousand people nor seat one-half that number without the use of chairs and the lecture room. I think as a rule the seating capacity of church buildings are overestimated.

In the next place, a body of people that cannot afford at least one representative church structure in a great city loses prestige with the people. Do not understand me to say that we have no respectable church buildings in St. Louis. We have some buildings that cost from ten to twenty thousand dollars each, but beside some of the cathedrals, among which they stand, they look exceedingly common. So much so that they are repellent to a large element of society in the city. Neither am I arguing that we should be like the people about us, but simply that we need better, more commodious church buildings.

No matter how we as Christians may see things, it is a fact that many families will not attend church where their standing in society will be put in jeopardy. Neither will they send their children to a Sunday school where the poverty, commonness, or social rank of the place will be cast in their teeth in the public schools, on the streets, or other places of meeting, as is done in this city continually. You say this is not Christianity. Certainly. But when will they ever become Christians if you fail to get them into a house where the gospel is preached. There is no reason that a church house should offend the taste of the people about it. They are not or should not be considered penal institutions. People go there for worship and not to do penance or to be wounded except for their sins.

Garfield attended worship in a very common house, that might easily have been taken for a hay barn, although in the national Capitol. But there are not many Garfields in this respect. There is not one of our pastors in this or other of our large cities but understands and appreciates what we have said on this subject.

Of course, we cannot all have a costly church edifice, nor is it needed to overcome this difficulty. If we had one representative church building or tabernacle and then had New Testament co-operation of the churches, every congregation in the city would be protected by the influence of that one building. They could point to it with pride as representative of the refinement, culture, standing and influence of the religious body in this great city of which they were each a part.

Or such a building would at least make possible the assemblage of such audiences from time to time that would command the attention and respect of the highest social circles of the city, whether they ever become Christians or not. While it would not be the means of saving all, it would at least so enlarge our influence as a religious body in the city that the number saved in each of the congregations would be greatly multiplied.

The wisdom—of this world at least—may be seen in the methods of the Roman Catholic Church in the larger cities. They make large plans, take their time for execution, build with a view to commanding influence and then hold their ground. Simply a cathedral will not command an audience, as some of our religious neighbors have demonstrated. It takes a live church to touch and leaven the living mass. A fine church building without a live, active congregation in it would be like a form of godliness without the power.

But how to bring about an improvement in our present plants is the greatest question. Some of them are already burdened with debt. But we ought not to falter at the task. It cannot be done in a year, but we can go about the establishment of forces and methods that will bring about the desired results, and that only is the duty of the hour in this and other of our larger cities. But of this we cannot now further speak.

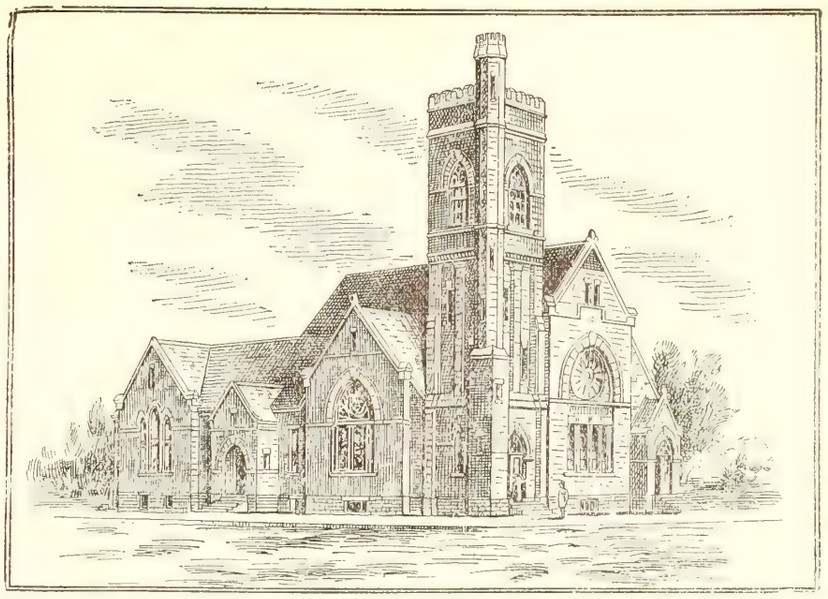
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CHURCH.



The people of the First Christian Church of Brazil, Ind., and their friends have determined to build a new church edifice in this city. The above is an exact cut of the building; the following is a description of the same: The proposed new structure is to be 58 ft. wide and 97 ft. long. It will be built of brick with stone trimming. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 500. The lecture and class rooms will seat 500. The class rooms, four on the north and four on the south side of lecture rooms, are furnished with moving partitions which allow of these rooms being opened into lecture room. This will give a seating capacity for Sunday-school purposes of 500. The lecture room and auditorium can be thrown together which will give seating for 800, exclusive of class rooms. Both the auditorium and lecture rooms have inclined seats. The pulpit will be located on the south side of the building on line of auditorium and lecture room. A handsome pipe organ will be used. The arrangement of organ, choir loft and pulpit show skill of the architect. The baptistery is located at south line of lecture room, near by are two robing rooms. The choir room and pastor's study are located on south side of building. There will be twelve rooms exclusive of auditorium and lecture room.

Through the efficient labor of our beloved brother and pastor, A. L. Platt, we feel highly encouraged in this great movement. As is nearly always the case we were timid about this undertaking at first, but with the unwavering zeal and talent of Bro. Platt, this work has assumed a condition that warrants us to say that by the help of God we will go through this work without a scratch and ever hail the memory of the day when we listened to the determined appeal of our pastor to build now. We say for Bro. Platt that he is an all-round hustler and knows his business and has taught us ours, and we are glad of it and are hustling too.

GENESIS IN HARMONY WITH ITSELF AND SCIENCE. Published at $1.25. This work deals with the common difficulties of Genesis by a new exegesis arrived at through a careful study of the Hebrew original I maintain that the verses prior to Gen. 2:4 record events long anterior to the verses which follow. I show this to be in harmony with the whole Book. Among many things I deal with; local and universal floods, various races and languages prior to Babel, the locality of Eden, Nod and the Land of Cush. In short, I harmonize Genesis with itself and Science. Send me a $1 note and I will mail you the book free. Pastor G. Rapkin, Christian Church, Margate, England.

"A Battle of Giants."

It was the 13th day of January, 1837, at the Sycamore Street Meeting House, Cincinnati, Ohio, that the battle began, continuing thereafter for seven days. It was truly a "battle of giants." Neither Protestantism nor Romanism had a mean defender in the struggle. Alexander Campbell towered high above all the theologians and religionists of his day. He was a master of learning and of logic. John B. Purcell, Bishop (and afterwards Archbishop) of Cincinnati, was one of the ablest prelates which Romanism has ever had in the United States. The subjects for debate between them were clearly understood and agreed to, and their struggle was a battle royal.

It was a unique debate. Never before or since has a Roman prelate of high rank consented to meet a representative champion of Protestantism in open and public debate. Roman priests have stood upon lecture platforms and denounced Protestantism; Protestant clergymen and orators have publicly assailed Romanism and its evils; but once only have champions of the two great parties of Christendom stood upon the same platform, before the same audience, to debate and discuss the respective claims of Romanism and Protestantism.

Previous to the debate it was agreed that Mr. Campbell should affirm the following propositions, which should be denied by Mr. Purcell:

1. The Roman Catholic institution, sometimes called the "Holy Apostolic Catholic Church," is not now, nor was she ever, catholic, apostolic, or holy; but is a sect in the fair import of that word, older than any other sect now existing, not the "Mother and Mistress of all churches," but an apostasy from the only true, holy, apostolic and catholic church of Christ.

2. Her notion of apostolic succession is without any foundation in the Bible, in reason or in fact; an imposition of the most injurious consequences, built upon unscriptural and anti-scriptural traditions, resting wholly upon the opinions of interested and fallible men.

3. She is not uniform in her faith, or united in her members; but mutable and fallible, as any other sect of philosophy or religion—Jewish, Turkish or Christian—a confederation of sects with a politico-ecclesiastic head.

4. She is the "Babylon" of John, the "Man of Sin" of Paul, and the empire of the "Youngest Horn" of Daniel's sea monster.

5. Her notions of purgatory, indulgences, auricular confession, remission of sins, transubstantiation, supererogation, etc., essential elements of her system, are immoral in their tendency, and injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political.

6. Notwithstanding her pretensions to have given us the Bible, and faith in it, we are perfectly independent of her for our knowledge of that book, and its evidences of a divine original.

7. The Roman Catholic religion, if infallible and unsusceptible of reformation, as alleged, is essentially anti American, being opposed to the genius of all free institutions, and positively subversive of them, opposing the general reading of the Scriptures and the diffusion of useful knowl edge among the whole community, so essential to liberty and the permanency of good government.

This great debate took place sixty three years ago. There is probably no one now living who was in attendance. Fortunately, the disputants agreed upon employing a stenographer and having the entire discussion reported and published. This was done, and the book, "Debate on the Roman Catholic Religion," has remained a standard work upon this subject. There have been a great many books written against Romanism, and these are invariably denounced by Romanists as "slanderous," "bigoted," "lying," "infamous," "unfair," etc. No such charge can be brought against this volume. In it both sides are given equal space. The charges made against Romanism were made in the presence and hearing of an eminent representative of that faith, who was given every opportunity for reply.

Romanism is becoming daily a more momentous and live question in this country. There have recently come under the jurisdiction of the United States new possessions, the religion of whose inhabitants is Romanism. We shall soon have new and perplexing problems with which to deal. Romanism in the United States is bad enough, but Romanism in Luzon is tenfold worse, and will be a vastly more difficult problem with which to deal. In view of the new and fresh interest which is being felt on this subject, and in compliance with the suggestion of a number of our patrons, who feel that the "Debate on the Roman Catholic Religion" should have a wide reading, the Christian Publishing Company, who publish the work, have reduced the price to one dollar. It is a book of 360 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, with red edges. It should have a place in every library, and be found in every home. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

Christianity and Denominationalism.

During the past two months I had the opportunity to live in a city which is entirely controlled by denominational churches. I have attended some of the services of every church in that city. The leading and best working church is the Roman Catholic. It works "daily" from 5 A. M. to 7:30 P. M. The M. E. Church, Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian Churches, with all their wealth and social influence, do not accomplish one-half as much as the Roman Catholic Church has accomplished within the past two years. The success of the R. C. Church lies in their untiring efforts. Unlike the Protestants, they work from early till late, through sunshine and rain, through heat and cold, through prosperity and adversity. Nationality, people of other "faiths" and color is a secondary matter to them. They count the profits. The bishop and priest associate with all classes, trying to secure their good will and thus gain support. They make a special effort to help the poor and make it possible for the "prodigals" to return, without some one in the church "being offended or threatened to create trouble." In their peaceful unity there is strength. In their imperfection they fast, repent, forgive, forget and give reverentially and liberally for the advocacy of their faith.

I wish I could say as much of the Protestant churches. While their aim and purposes are higher, they fail in their efforts. The ministers of these different Protestant bodies are excellent men, scholarly and able representatives of "their faith." They have few active workers who do not in some way manage to carry on the work. There are Christians in all these churches, but the denominational fence stands in the way of a united effort, and therefore hinders their growth and success. The Christian Science people have endeavored to teach their "imaginative theology," but have failed. A New Testament church or Church of Christ is in demand. Numerically, the Church of Christ or the Christian Church is weak in Florida. Bros. J. T. Boone, T. H. Blenus, F. J. Longdon, Jr., and two or three others will almost complete the list of New Testament gospel preachers in that state. I am informed that we have a number of orgranizations without preachers. The church without a preacher is helpless. For all success depends on good leadership. There are too many churches now without preachers, and such congregations should learn that the brethren on the day of Pentecost "continued" in the apostolic teaching.

The increase of 417 ministers, 210 churches and 32,781 members during the past year is due to the efforts of preachers, evangelists, churches and members who "continued" in the New Testament Christianity. In our living and giving advocacy, "going" or "sending," we can bring about a union of God's people. With the truth on our side and 1,118,396 strong, are we doing our best? I heard a preaching brother say, I must quit on account of not being supported. Trust in God, preach Christ and him crucified, pray and work hard, be guided by the Holy Spirit, and you will be supported. There is much to be done and much to be overcome, but especially the spirit of "denominationalism" is to be overcome by Christianity. Are we doing our best as the Disciples of Christ?

Is Cancer Hereditary?

Mr. J. H. Brown, of Columbia, Mo., Cured of a Most Malignant Cancer of the Face.

After suffering for seven years and having exhausted all hopes of a cure, and his father having died of cancer at the age of 64, naturally he made up his mind that to look further for a cure would be useless, and he, therefore, decided to wait for the end. Read below what he has to say:

Feb. 6, 1900.

Dr. Bye, Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Doctor: I wish to express my most hearty commendation of your success in the treatment of cancer, and of what you have done for me. I was suffering from a most malignant cancer of the right side of the face, the size of a silver dollar, and had given up all hope of ever being cured, my father having died of cancer ten years ago. After witnessing his suffering and failure, and after having tried several different treatments, I fully made up my mind not to endure the tortures of a course of treatment. But after you cured my neighbor, Mrs. Smith, 65 years old, who had a very malignant cancer on the forehead, and doing it without pain, I began to investigate, and I am glad to report to you another success. I believe that any one suffering with cancer, no matter how bad, should apply to you without delay. I will answer all letters of inquiry in regard to my case with pleasure, and will always regard you as one of the greatest benefactors of suffering humanity.

Respectfully, J. H. BROWN.

Notes and News.

Bro. Patterson claims the largest baptism in the state of Indiana—370 pounds. I am disposed to dispute his claim, but am unable to give figures as my subject refused to be weighed. At Kokomo I baptized a woman who had traveled with Forepaugh as his fat woman, and it was thought that she weighed more than 400 pounds. E. L. FRAZIER.

I have a fine, large tent that will hold 1,200 people which I will use in evangelistic work this season. I can furnish tent, song books, badges, etc., and conduct the music for either pastors or evangelists. Would like to begin in the South as early as season will admit. For dates, terms, etc., address me at 192 Spring St., Lexington, Ky.

The attention of our brethren is called to the annual offering for Home Missions the first Lord's day in May. If our work does not suffer loss we must equal the offering of our Jubilee Year. We have now more missionaries employed than ever before in the history of this work and their work was never more successful.

We will send supplies, literature, envelopes, etc., free to any church asking for them.

DEAR SISTERS:—One half of our missionary year is gone. Have we added one half to our membership in the six months past, so that one half more added during the remainder of the year will bring us to the Moberly convention with our membership doubled? With a consciousness that we have been loyal to our national board, to our state board, and above all, to the infinite Father, who has sent us out into his fields to glean. Missouri has always given to special objects. Shall we not concentrate all special offerings this year upon the endowment of the Virginia Bible Lectureship? The endowment calls for $25,000. Of this $13,00 has been raised. I believe Missouri will come to the frout with at least $500 of that amount. Kansas City proposes to raise $100 or more. All money from self-denial week, the mite boxes, open meetings, etc., may properly be turned into the Bible Chair Fund, unless previously pledged to some other special work. Let us not forget that to Missouri comes the honor of entertaining the national convention this year, and we will not be doing well unless we do better than in any previous year of our existence as individual Christians, as a state organization or as a national organization. The achievements of past years, however great, must serve only as stepping-stones whereby we are lifted nearer the Infinite One in spirit, in daily living and in the beautiful grace of Christian giving. Let us, as a whole-hearted, united sisterhood work, pray, give, that when the year closes and our labors are weighed in the balance we shall not be found wanting.

Yours in his service,

MRS. F. M. LOWE, Pres.

A Drunken Lecturer.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—It is with regret that I request you to publish the following statement, but the cause of Christianity and the rights of the people demand that the people know it.

Geo. R. Wendling delivered his lecture, "The Man of Galilee," in Wadsworth, O., March 15. He was so drunk at the time that he was compelled to hold to a stand in order to keep from staggering. His explanation was that a cold, accompanied by symptoms of pneumonia, caused him to pursue the course he did. But it is evident from his dissipated look and evasive answers to questions, as well as from reliable testimony from other sources, that his course has not been above suspicion for some time. Yours truly,

THEO. A. JOHNSON.

Wadsworth, O., March 17, 1900.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

No committe has done better service for this work and a Bible-school convention than W. H. McClain, Davis Errett, S. D. Dutcher, Mrs. Mary Wisdom Grant and J. H. Garrison, who gave time and thought to make the coming convention practical and thus helpful. That was before them all the time.

You will see what success is when their program goes to press, and you will get the benefit at California, June 11-14, so make thyself ready for it.

Our rally at the East Side, Moberly, was first-class, if the weather was bitter cold, for the people there have a mind to work. S. J. Copher will only add to such by giving them the methods of the work. When the debt is lifted then you will see a busy hive, but as it is they do not hesitate, giving to your servant and meeting all the expenses of the rally in full. George Elzea is a pusher himself.

Troy sends good news, with 121 present, and seven confessions from the school in J. H. Crutcher's good meeting. Mrs. Bird Shelton is superintending with success, and at California will give us a report gratifying to all.

Hurrah for Marshall and James A. Gordon in a report of 280 pupils for seven successive Sundays! which pleases the pastor, B. T. Wharton.

So comes the report of Milan, where Alfred Munyon has just taken hold, the growth of the school passing that of the church, as it should, the membership coming from the world and the church. Apportionment in full.

Clarence has the same good news, while A. B. Elliott is going to do better, and what is the best, the workers join him in the intention. Apportionment in full.

So in Macon City, where Ed T. Miles is at the head and F. R. Stutzman labors. Ed will keep trying, and if all will co-operate, it is done, and F. R. will help in his pushing way, anxious for the success of all the work. Apportionment in full. See?

Arlington Heights, in St. Louis, is doing good work in the needy district and meeting with success, too, under Bro. Fields, assisted by men like F. M. Call, J. H. Allen and D. R. Dungan, while on the blackboard R. M. Denholm is out of sight. W. D. Cree and W. A. Moore are giving it their time, while souls are turning to God.

At the Stubbs Schoolhouse work has begun looking to a church, over $200 being promised M. H. Wood, and he is to see to it further in the spring.

We had a great day at Lamar in our rally, having the three sessions crowded with work and happy workers. Sisters Shelton and Houston do not spare efforts when the cause is considered, so that the day was one of happiness to all, while the giving to our work only made me the more joyous in my service with them. Mrs. L. E. Shelton makes one of our best superintendents and has a corps of assistants that never fail. It was my first work with W. W. Blalock, but I hope it is not my last, for with such it is my pleasure to be often and long. He is true to one.

Brethren, for the first month this year the men are not paid promptly, simply because I could not do it, and you do not know what regret I have. please remit as per the cards likely now in your hands, and help us to the front again. It is for others, worthy and deserving, that I pray your help; do not disappoint me.

C. B. Gilbert, Clarksville, says: "You do not appreciate the great work T. A. Hedges can do for your school and church, or you would not hesitate calling him for an institute. At Clarksville there was an uplift to all departments of the church, and the Bible-school feels the blessed effects to this day." Brethren, write him at LaGrange and you will be glad of it in the Master's service.

The twenty-fifth annual Bible-school gathering is to be memorable, the board deciding to give all the delegates and visitors a "souvenir" that will be treasured by every friend of this holy cause of God and the children, so you are urged to begin your preparations for the feast at California.

Do not forget, the name of every school and every minister whose school gives to our work this year will go before the convention on a scroll.

H. F. DAVIS.

Ohio's State Convention.

Ohio Disciples, the best, most devoted, most intelligent, most liberal Disciples on earth, are looking forward eagerly to the coming state convention, to be held at Mansfield, May 21-24, in this year of grace. Secretary Bartlett has sounded the bugle-note for 1,000 delegates. The program will be superb. F. D. Power will make one address and preach one sermon. John E. Pounds will talk of "The City Problem—the Slums and the Suburbs." President B. L. Smith will plead for "Ohio Missions to the Front." F. A. Bright, who behaved himself by coming back home from Nebraska, will demonstrate the "Paramount Importance of State Missions." W. W. Sniff, a new man in Ohio, will tell us "The Measure of Giving." H. F. McLane, R. H. Timme, M. L. Bates and other thirteen-inch guns will be fired. Geo. A. Miller, of the land of Goeble and Taylor, will make the Endeavor addess. C. W. Huffer, of Toledo, will conduct a C. E. Round Table. These are a few samples. One of the leading features of the convention will be fifteen minutes of devotional studies at the close of each session by Bro. W. J. Lhamon of Allegheny, Pa. This will be worth a trip to Mansfield. The disciples, who were first called Christians at Antioch, never had brighter prospects in the land of the Buckeyes. S. H. Bartlett is not a lazy man. He is endowed with much common sense, excellent executive ability, a burning zeal and a Hiram diploma. Why shouldn't the Ohio work succeed? If neighboring Disciples want to learn how to do things, let them visit the Ohio convention, May 21-24, at Mansfield.

C. A. FREER.

Columbus, Ohio.

[That is a good bugle-blast and ought to start the Ohio clans to moving. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which has a growing constituency among the Buckeyes, is glad to lend its hearty co-operation to the success of the Mansfield convention.—EDITOR.]

MICHIGAN.

Owassa.—Two confessions recently.—S. A. STRAWN.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Verdon, March 12.—Am in a meeting with the church here. Expect to baptize four to-night. Audiences and interest very satisfactory.—R. D. MCCANCE.

CANADA.

Walkerton, Ont., March 12. — Two baptisms Feb. 28th; one added by statement March 4th; one confession March 11th. All at regular services. Will reopen church, which has been reseated, grained and decorated, on March 28th.—W. McM. LOGAN, pastor.

ARKANSAS.

Mena.—Bro. Streator, of Cardif, preached morning and evening on last Lord's day. Received four into the church. We have had material aid from the state board. Bro. E. C. Browning has preached and labored among us.—M. B. LEGATE.

MONTANA.

Bozeman, March 7.—Closed Monday night at Anaconda. Five baptisms and five otherwise received. Church prepared to receive the new minister, Frank Minnick, who now has the reins and will make a good record there, as he has done elsewhere.—R. E. DUNLAP.

WASHINGTON.

Palouse, March 5.—Six added at yesterday's services; two added last week, not previously reported. All by confession.—E. C. WIGMORE.

Waitsburg, March 5.—We closed a good meeting here last night, with 37 additions; 26 by confession. The house was full from start to finish, with but one or two exceptions. Mrs. Stephens led the singing and furnished a solo for each service. We go from here to Brownsville, Ore.—L. F. STEPHENS.

OHIO.

Perry, March 12.—One confession at our regular service yesterday and 10 accessions previously since entering upon the work here. Our Foreign Mission offering was delayed by bad weather, but we will reach our apportionment.—O. A. RICHARDS.

Geneva, March 12.—There were two accessions here yesterday; one in the evening by baptism. We hope to raise one thousands dollars by April 1st to apply on our church debt.—H. N. ALLEN.

By telegram: Toleda, March 19.—Eighteen additions yesterday; total of 124 to date.—WILSON AND HASTON.

KANSAS.

Columbus, March 10.—Assisted my son Claude and his church at Modale, Ia., in a two and a half weeks' meeting, closing March 1st with 18 additions; all new to the Christian Church except one man whom I had baptized in Northwest Missouri eight years ago.—M. MCFARLAND.

Scottsville, March 10.—L. S. Ridnour, of Highland, Kas., began a meeting with the Fairview Church Feb. 20, with 12 additions to date. Doubled our offering for Foreign Missions. We heartily commend Bro. Ridnour to any church wanting a meeting.—ELLA CUNNINGHAM, clerk.

Dodge City, March 13.—Our meeting continues with a growing interest. Forty-two in all to date; thirty by baptism.—E. M. CARR, pastor; D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Lyons, March 10.—J. A. Cornelius held a meeting of three weeks, with 25 additions; 16 baptized.—F. W. LENNEN.

Belleville, March 6.—Just closed a good meeting here with Bro. W. E. Pitcher, pastor, with 12 additions; nine conversions. It is a delight to assist a man like Bro. Pitcher. He is one of Kansas' young, consecrated, wide-wake preachers. If any other state has any of the same kind of Pitchers, please to pitch them this way.—M. INGELS, evangelist.

Oberlin, March 13.—A series of meetings began at this place Feb. 26. There was no church organization here; only a very few Disciples who had been struggling for many years almost without hope because of the limited number and the strong sectarian opposition. The meeting has been in progress two weeks, conducted by Walter G. Menzies, of Norton, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. A band of 21 Disciples have been gathered together, with one confession.—JENNIE DEAN.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, March 13.—Special meetings were held at the Forest Ave. Church during February. Bro. Roland A. Nichols, of Worcester, Mass., preached every night to the spiritual upbuilding of all. Twenty-one souls in all were added, and this was not the greatest work done. Bro. Nichols succeeded in bringing about negotiations for a change of location, and we hope in the early summer to be at work in the center of one of the best fields in this part of the city. The church has contended against the odds of a mean neighborhood and shifting populat on, in a geographically limited area, and this move, we are sure, marks the beginning of a new epoch and new life for the church. Thanking you, I remain yours sincerely.—JAY A. EGBERT.

IOWA.

Urbana, March 13.—Five were added last Lord's day; three by letter, two by personal commendation.—MILTON WELLS.

Mason City, March 14.—Last Sunday was a great day at the Christian Church. Bro. J. H. Garrison preached two exceedingly helpful and inspiring sermons. Bro. J. A. Seaton, of Spencer, was with us also and did much to make the day one long to be remembered. There were four added to the church.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Estherville, March 11.—Six additions since we last wrote. But it will take a good many weeks at this rate to win Northwest Iowa.—S. MORTON GREGORY.

Cincinnati, March 12.—On Feb. 25 E. J. McKinley closed a meetiug at this place with 22 additions; 11 by confession elsewhere. Elder McKinley has worked here for the past year and has greatly strengthened the organization and is employed for one-half time for the coming year.—G. A. D.

NEBRASKA.

Grand Island, March 12.—Ten added at our regular services yesterday.—Z. O. DOWARD.

Exeter, March 12.—Meeting one week old with 10 added; eight by confession. Audiences very large, weather favorable and interest widespread. Our chorus is led by Jesse Wilson, of this place.—R. M. DUNGAN.

Chester, March 11.—Good attendance, a nice interest, brethren hopeful and a number of baptisms. Bro. Encell preaches the old Jerusalem gospel. A pastor will be secured and the work pushed on.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN.

Lexington, March 10.—We closed the meeting at Overton last Sunday evening with 12 additions; 10 by confession. Sunday afternoon we drove three miles in a snow storm to the lake, cut the ice and Bro. Wickham baptized them; he knows how to baptize. Monday evening we began the meeting here with Pastor T. A. Lindenmeyer. We have nine additions to date, good attendance, house crowded, good preaching, a fine chorus and good singing.—R. A. GIVENS.

Harvard, March 9.—Closed our meeting at Palmer Monday night, 18 added; 13 by confession.—E. W. BOWERS.

Chester, March 18.—Meeting continues with good interest. We close here March 25. Church here desires a pastor—young man, married. Address me here with stamp.—F. H. SWEETMAN.

COLORADO.

Cripple Creek, March 12.—The work in the great gold district is moving very satisfactorily. During the past eight months the membership of the church has more than doubled itself, and the congregation have built a new house of worship, worth from five to six thousand dollars. The Ladies Aid has quadrupled its membership, the Y. P. S. C. E has grown wonderfully, and a Junior Society has been organized. All departments of the work are in harmony with each other and good results are expected during the year. Bro. J. P. Lucas has been with us three weeks in a meeting; closing last Lord's day evening. During this meeting 12 were added to the body of Disciples worshiping at this place. Bro. Lucas is an able preacher, a safe exegete, and his thorough knowledge of the Scriptures make him a power in the pulpit. Any pastor desiring the assistance of an able evangelist in a meeting would do well to correspond with Bro. Lucas at Colorado City, Col.—JOE S. RILEY.

Ft. Collins, March 12.—Three added yesterday; 21 in all since the first of last November.—S. P. TELFORD, pastor.

Denver.—Thirty-one additions since I became pastor in January. We would be pleased to have you call and see us when you are passing through Denver.—BRUCE BROWN.

IDAHO.

Boise, March 12.—I closed a meeting two weeks ago with the church at Caldwell, in which there were eight additions; five by confession. The offering for Foreign Missions amounted to about $30. I began a meeting with the church here on yesterday, which will continue for several weeks. There were nine additions by letter. We expect a good meeting. We shall take up the offering for Foreign Missions on next Sunday.—B. F. CLAY.

INDIANA.

Bedford.—Our work here is in excellent condition. Two confessions last Sunday. We also raised our apportionment of $100 for Foreign Missions.—JAMES SMALL.

Elkhart, March 11.—Three confessions to-day; 18 additions at regular services since beginning work here in November. The church recently raised $700 in cash for improvement of house and property indebtedness.—S. J. TOMLINSON.

Portland, March 13.—Meeting progresses with Roy L. Brown, of Fountain City, assisting. Ten days old and 16 added; 20 since we began our work here. Much interest is being manifested, and the greatest of harmony prevails in all lines of work.—M. F. RICKOFF.

ILLINOIS.

Sullivan, March 12.—Yesterday was a grand day with us; packed house, increased enthusiasm and four accessions. Mrs. Brickert preached to two fine audiences in Dalton City.—E. W. BRICKERT.

Carrollton, March 11.—Two added to-day by letter and two others a week ago, not reported. Church steadily growing. Our pastor, J. S. Smith, is a grand man.—A. UNDERWOOD.

Galesburg, March 12.—One added here Sunday.—C. H. WHITE.

Clay City, March 12.—We had two additions at our regular services here yesterday.—WALTER KLINE.

Hume, March 13.—The revival conducted by R. L. Brown resulted in 37 additions; 29 by confession. Much interest is aroused in Bible study. Sunday-school attendance increased to 100. Raised our apportionment.—MRS. M. DEVER.

Du Quoin, March 19.—Thirty-eight additions here yesterday, 35 confessions. There have been 66 added since J. V. Coombs began his meeting. He goes next to Veedensburg, Ind.—W. H. KERN, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Clarksville.—One confession March 4th.—J. P. MYERS.

Moberly, March 10.—Nine additions since February. All departments moving.—S. J. COPHER, East Side.

Chamois, March 12.—One young man reclaimed at morning service. All departments of the work prospering.—G. E. JONES.

Joplin, March 9.—Six additions last Sunday.—W. F. TURNER.

St. Louis.—The following additions were reported in this city on last Monday, March 12th: First Church, two; Fourth, one; Central, two; Beulah, one; East St. Louis, one.

St. Joseph, March 12.—Four additions by letter to the Wyatt Park Church yesterday. Two recently by baptism not hitherto reported.—M. M. GOODE.

Springfield, March 12.—Eight additions yesterday; six confessions. Think we will reach our apportionment for Foreign Missions. The work grows.—D. W. MOORE.

Canton, March 9.—Since my last report we have had the following accessions: At Laddonia, 11 by baptism and two by letter; at Kahoka, one from the Baptists, and at New Bloomfield, five by letter. At each place the work is progressing nicely. We expect to have fellowship in the various missions. Our Bible-schools are flourishing.—J. D. GREER.

Richland, March 12.—One confession here yesterday. Eleven additions not heretofore reported. All departments of our church work prosperous.—PERCY T. CARNES, pastor.

Savannah, March 12.—Yesterday was a good day with us. One addition in the morning. To-night voted to spend $50 in new song books.—A. R. HUNT.

La Monte, March 10.—I closed my meeting with the Osceola Church March 6th. It was in many respects one of the most extraordinary meetings I ever held. It was during the terrible storm period of the past few weeks. There were 41 accessions to the membership; 28 by confession. Osceola is one of the best towns in the state for a good work for the Master. They are in need of a pastor, but they want a wide-awake, progressive man; none other need apply.—KING S. STARK.

Trenton, March 13.—I have made two visits to Cowgill and had one addition by letter. We hope for a prosperous year. I have preached three sermons at Jamesport and have baptized four; received one by letter, two reclaimed and one candidate for baptism at next appointment.—W. E. BATES.

MEN OF YESTERDAY

A Series of Character Sketches of Prominent Men Among the Disciples of Christ.

BY THOMAS W. GRAFTON.

Author of "Life of Alexander Campbell."

This volume contains biographical sketches of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, B. W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess.

The essential facts in the lives of these men are told in an attractive style. This volume meets the demand for information concerning these worthy men, presented brief enough to be read and appreciated by readers of to-day.

TESTIMONIALS.

"Men of Yesterday" is written in that pleasing style that made the "Life of Alexander Campbell," by the same author, so greatly admired. It would be an especially good book to put into the hands of young people. The narratives are full of interest, and these are men with whom the generation now growing up should have some acquaintance."—Peter Ainslie, Editor Christian Tribune, Baltimore, Md.

"The men mentioned in 'Men of Yesterday' are worthy of these sketches and the sketches are worthy of the men. Their histories will inspire noble lives in others. These sketches are not long enough to be wearisome, and not so brief as to be unsatisfactory. The author is happy in his chosen field, happy in the title of the book and happy in the treatment of his subject."—M. M. Davis, Dallas, Tex.

Creature, or Creator?

I. W. CAMERON.

[Suggested by Edwin Markham's proposition, "There is no providence ready-made for men."]

Before you stands the outline of a man,
The offspring of an Omnipotent thought;
Ideal, or is't design?—a master plan
On which the course of destiny is wrought,
Or do we see but answer to a cause—
A helpless victim to unyielding laws?

Will creature make itself and choose its fate,
From strong environs plucking straw and clay
To mold the being fashioned uncreate,
And live and toil and perish in a day,
Or must we view predestined man complete
As focused plans Almighty ends to meet?

The gifts of God are all prepared before
The soul-breath thrills the image into life.
In man thus "made" exists a normal store
Of love for parents, children, husband wife,
As well as hopes, desires, instinctive fear
And attributes that make him hold life dear.

Whate'er may be the lack or overdue,
Embryo man no answer shall assign.
His talents may be many or but few—
Responsibility thus far divine
Relieves "created" man from praise or blame,
But this comprises not all God shall claim.

The great creation purposed now begins—
A precious charge entailed on human will.
Shall it be dwarfed by blasting breath of sins,
Or formed in wisdom's lines by heaven-born skill?
A tenfold reproduction may be found
As oft on rough soil as on nobler ground.

A dual creature follows double cause
(Enough for man to answer for his own).
Almighty God gives substance and the laws—
Man does the rest; he builds, but not alone.
The judgment views not measures or design,
But counts the increase over means divine.

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XXI.

During the mild winter a large area of wooded land had been cleared of timber. The brush had been piled and burnt, and only the logs, cut in suitable lengths for sawing, remained to cumber the ground.

With the return of spring there was much work to be done, and the activities of the men were correspondingly increased.

Under Smithson's direction a dam was built up the creek at the head of slackwater and near the center of the clearing. Here a waterwheel was put in, with a windlass and a skilfully wrought cable, made from the fiber of the tenax, was used to draw the sawlogs to the stream, and on this they were floated to the mill. This proved a great saving from the very fatiguing labor to the men who had not a solitary draught animal.

The serious problem, however, was without animal labor to prepare so large a field for sowing. To do so with hoe and spade seemed out of the question. Here again a requisition was made on Smithson's ingenuity, and as usual not in vain. "I guess," said Smithson, "Old Buck can do the work."

"No doubt," the Captain answered, "if we had an ox of that or any other name, but it'll be many a day before we have a craft of that kind to tow a plow."

But Smithson explained that by Old Buck he meant the waterwheel that drew the logs to the stream. The difficulty, however, was to harness "Old Buck" to the work. So great was his strength that in the "clearing," full of roots and stumps, he must inevitably break to pieces a plow of ordinary strength before an hour, and that idea was given up by Smithson as impracticable, and he devised the following: A round log was cut, about four feet in length, and a row of cultivator teeth firmly set in this from end to end. Likewise three other rows at spaces equidistant from each other and the first row.

This toothed roller was firmly fastened in a frame so that it might revolve on its axles; a driver's seat was secured to this frame, so that the rider's weight rested on each end of the roller, the friction being sufficient to hold a row of teeth in the ground until they struck a root or stump or other obstruction, when the roller revolved, releasing them and instantly bringing another row of teeth into action. This machine was mounted on cart wheels, so that the driver by the movement of a lever could at once raise the teeth out of the ground, and at the end of the field, by getting off his seat, he could readily swing it around to cultivate in the opposite direction.

There still remained a difficulty: to attach "Old Buck," who never moved from his place, to a plow that went about the field. To accomplish this, a revolving drum was put up at the waterwheel and another was erected on a cart about forty rods distant. An endless tenax rope belt passed from drum to drum. The plowing machine was attached to this belt by a grip not unlike that used on cable cars. This could be instantly applied or released.

The water power was turned on, the drum revolved and the rope belt started on its way, the driver in his seat applied the grip, and a broad strip was plowed for forty rods to the cart. The cart was moved forward four feet, the cultivator wheeled around, the grip attached and a like furrow made back to the power. Thus a circle with a radius of forty rods could be plowed around the "ox," and by substituting a roller with narrow teeth for the one used in the first cultivation, the harrowing could be done in like manner.

There was also a smaller tract near the sawmill which could be similarly cultivated by removing the machinery to that place and utilizing the power there.

Just here I want to say for the benefit of shipwrecked colonies without draught animals, that Dr. Smithson has applied for no patent on his invention.

One thing I ought to explain: as the cultivator returned every time to a fixed center the furrow necessarily became narrower and narrower until it became a very fine point. This was obviated by plowing toward the power until the cut was considerably narrowed, and plowing back to the movable drums, thus going back and forth many times in the outer part of the circle and only occasionally returning to the power.

This arrangement worked admirably, and enabled us to cultivate a much larger field than we could otherwise have done.

We were particularly anxious to raise a large crop, also to get a quantity of lumber for boat building, so that by the following season we could build and provision a ship, if we were tired of the island, and return to America.

During these busy spring days, one of the men brought word that the Blackbirds had abandoned the cavern and pitched their tents on Soutwest Bay.

The Captain, Smithson and McGregor, with quite a party, went at once to the place. Leaving the men in concealment near at hand, the three repaired to the tent of the Birds and informed them that they desired a definite understanding. They were willing to have peace, which they hoped would be secured by general consent; if not, all the power of the colony must be used to compel a peace. Captain Wolcott said to the Birds: "Now, boys, if you're going to be orderly and industrious, to share in the labor and its fruits, to let bygones be by bygones, to be friendly and hospitable, here's my hand. But if you are going back to your old games, you'd better pipe all hands and hoist anchor and get sea room, for this island's not big enough for you and us."

The Birds answered that they wanted peace, and that with a proper division of goods and tools, they would farm and fish on South Bay and would give no trouble.

It was thereon agreed to divide boats, utensils, fishing tackle and tools; reserving, however, the canned goods and other articles saved from the wreck that might prove useful in case of a voyage of the colony to America. The South Bay men were by no means pleased with the proposed reservation, but finally, after much grumbling, gave in and the treaty of peace was concluded.

For some time after this everything went on quietly. It was, however, regarded as a bad sign that the gardening of the Birds was on a very limited scale; indeed, it was in an inverse ratio to their consumption of fat pigs and goats. Something or somebody also levied on our poultry supplies by night.

"All signs point to squally weather," said the Captain. "It's only a question of time when there'll be rough sailing again."

And immediately he added, apparently without any connection with the preceding remark: "I've been thinking we ought to have a boat of about twenty-five tons at once. It'll do to cruise about the island, or to go to the continent for supplies, or in emergency it might carry the whole colony to San Francisco." But he privately stated to a few of the leading advisers, that the real need for the boat might be to carry the ring leaders at South Bay to the islands north or to the Continent east.

This suggestion meeting approval, and there now being less time required in the fields, Smithson and a number of the most skillful with tools, under the advice of the Captain, set about the work of ship-building.

And here I may be allowed to anticipate several weeks by saying that the Island Queen, so christened, proved to be a very creditable little brig, and Captain Wolcott having gone on a trial trip around the island, was hearty in his praise of her sailing qualities.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

March In the Woods.

BY MILTON H. H. LEE.

Grim winter o'er, the woodland feels the force
Of battle, when the genial spring contends,
To free the earth from winter's prison-walls.
'Tis morn, and Heaven smiles serene upon
The barren trees. The winter-waste is strewn
Upon the ground. But early rays of spring
Are wooing earth to life and love again.
So gentle, warm, and spring-like is the morn,
That in its tree a birdie wakes and sings.
A stillness reigns, unbroken by a sound:—
A rustle now among the fallen leaves.
A gentle breeze, and now a gentle rain:—
And lo! the snow falls thick and fast, amidst
The shrieks and wails. The wind is high and fills
The woodland pathway with the fallen snow,
And brings the chill of winter on its breath.
Now all is still, and sunlight comes once more.
But, see! The clouds roll angrily across
The sky like smoke of battle, and the peals
Of thunder echo through the woods, and gleams
Of lightning flash among the leafless trees:—
What dreariness! The heart grows still and faint,
And stands in awe midst warring elements.
The storm has ceased. The wind-swung clouds rolled by,
And spring has won the battle grim and wild.
Sweet life, expectant of a brighter day,
Fills all the world, and nature smiles in earth
And sky. The woodland laughs and all is glad!

"An Earnest Call For Help."

MRS. JAS. H. WHITE.

"Oh! America, thou art slow to learn; but thou wilt know at length,
The stream which drains thy life away can never be thy strength;
The thing which makes thy people poor thy riches cannot be;
The thing which is thy people's curse must be a curse to thee."

The above lines ought to be a message to every Christian, both male and female, not only in South Carolina, but in every state in Union. It should be sounded upon the street corners and upon the highways until every ear could hear and heed its convincing argument; but sad, sad indeed, that the eyes and ears of our Chistians cannot be opened. We, of the Christian Temperance Workers, are forced to say in the words of our blessed Master: "Lord, pity them; they know not what they do." Is there not a whitened harvest ready for the gleaners? "Who will go and work to-day?"

"Ye soldiers of the temperance cause, our work is but begun.
Oh! sit not down in idleness and think the field is won.
Our lambs are straying from the fold, the wolves are on the track;
Oh! can you sit and see them go, nor strive to bring them back?"

Let us not retrograde, but be onward in our work, with never a flagging step. There is nothing to oppose the Christian Temperance Workers, but on the other hand they are daily gaining reinforcements by the ministers and laymen who stand ready and anxious to uplift our hands. Only about fourteen months ago this renewed effort for temperance work was begun among a few women in Spartanburg, S. C., led by the the Spirit, and emanating from them are to-day a large number of living societies (one numbering sixty) among the women, and many flourishing Bands of Hope, composed of the future men and women of our next generation who like soldiers are being trained for duty, and who will carry the sword of the Spirit. What a wonderful thing a trial is to the man who has something he knows will stand the test; how we do crave for a trial of what we advocate! Dr. Sheldon has been offered a trial for a week of what he believes to be a good thing, a daily religious newspaper. If our President McKinley would only give us a trial for prohibition for a few months in every state in the Union, we believe we could stand as firm as the rock of Gibraltar. We must prepare ourselves by beginning our work first in our churches, where sit Lord's day after Lord's day, under the sound of the preached Word, men and women who go to their homes with their ears unstopped and a selfish appetite over their hearts.

"Alas! that men for power, position or for gain,
Should fully lend their influence to sustain
That monstrous evil, red with the blood
Of human beings wrecked and shut out from God."

As if sent out by the hands of God, these few noble women of South Carolina, spurred with the great need of work for temperance in the state, have gathered in the men and women and are rapidly filling our towns and cities with temperance literature from the pens of America's best writers. They are in for a united effort and are growing in strength.

"Though weak in ourselves, yet in Thee we are strong,
For Thou art our strength, salvation and song.
For the slaves of the cup, Lord, we cry unto Thee,
Oh! loose them from bondage and let them go free.
Thy presence, Thy power and Thy wisdom we seek:
Lord, lift up the fallen and strengthen the weak."

Good Morning.

A sunbeam touched my little bed.
"Good morning, dear," he gently said.
I opened wide my sleepy eyes
And said, "Good morning," with surprise:
"I can not think that night is gone,
And are you sure that this is morn?"

The sunbeam laughed and shook his head:
Last night you would not go to bed,
And that is why you sleep so late,
And make me climb the window gate
To say, 'Wake up, you sleepy dear!
Wake up—God bless you!—morning's here.'"

A Boy's Mother.

My mother she's so good to me.
Ef I was good as I could be
I couldn't be as good. No, sir;
Can't any boy be good as her!

She loves me when I'm glad or mad,
She loves me when I'm good or bad,
An, what's the funniest thing, she says
She loves me when she punishes.

I don't like her to punish me.
That don't hurt, but it hurts to see
Her cry. Nen cry, an' nen
We both cry—an' be good again.

She loves me when she cuts and sews
My little coat and Sunday clothes,
An' when my pa comes home to tea
She loves him most as much as me.

She laughs and tells him all I said,
An' grabs me up an' pats my head,
An' I hug her, an' hug my pa,
An' love him purt' nigh as much as ma.

The Finest Set of Chimes.

At the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo in 1901 will be seen and heard the largest and finest set of church bells in this country; in fact, they are little, if any, inferior in size or musical quality to the most famous European chimes of Copenhagen, Westminster, Ghent or Amsterdam. These carillons, as they are termed by their French originators, which will delight the visitors to the all-American Exposition next year, have a peculiar history. Although they have been in this country more than thirty years, and their fine qualities are well known, their superb tones have never been advantageously heard. For over a quarter of a century they have hung with dumb tongues in the silence and gloom of the tall tower of Buffalo's big cathedral, of St. Joseph. They were produced by the noted French bell-makers, "Bolle et Fills," having been contracted for by Bishop Timon in 1865 at a cost of about $25,000. They were cast in 1866 and exhibited at the Paris Exposition in 1867, being there awarded a gold medal. They reached Buffalo in 1868 and were then hung in St. Joseph's tower which, however, proved a very unsuitable receptacle, being damp and of very limited area. Attempts were made to sound the chimes, but the result was ineffectual, and since 1875 the bells have been mute. There are forty-three bells in this splendid carillon, ranging in weight from the small tenor of 25 pounds to the ponderous and sonorous monster weighing 5,068 pounds. Each bell is artistically ornamented and each bears an inscription in Latin with some religious phrase, such as, "Deo Uni Trio Laus et Gloria Sempiterma," "Laudate Dominum Omnes Gentes," "Gloria in Excelsis," etc. The metal of the bells is a composite of 775 parts copper and 225 parts tin.

It was originally intended that these chimes should be rung by clock work, but the more modern methods of keyboard manipulation and electrical power will be used.

At the Pan-American Exposition the bells will be hung in a graceful campanile, especially constructed for the purpose, erected on elevated ground in a location which permits their melodious voices being heard with due effect whenever they are sounded. The importance of this group of bells and the volume of harmonious sound they will produce may be in a measure realized when it is remembered that the fine chimes of St. Patrick's Cathedral, so much admired in New York, consists of only 24 bells—a little more than half the number of those which constitute the carillon of St. Joseph.

A Literary Curiosity.

POEM OF THIRTY-EIGHT LINES TAKEN FROM AS MANY AUTHORS.

Each line of the following poem is said to be a quotation from some one of the standard authors of England and America, and is the result of laborious search among the voluminous writing of thirty-eight leading poets of past and present, says the Minneapolis Tribune. The number of each line refers to its author below:

1—Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
2—Life's a short summer, man's a flower;

3—By turns we catch the vital breath and die
4—The cradle and the tomb, alas, so nigh.

5—To be is better far than not to be,
6—Though all man's life may seem a tragedy;

7—But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb.
8—The bottom is but shallow whence they come

9—Your fate is but the common fate of all,
10—Unmingled joys, here, to no man befall.

11—Nature to each allots his proper sphere.
12—Fortune makes folly her peculiar cure;

13—Custom does not often reason overrule,
14—And throw a cruel sunshine on a fool;

15—Live well, how long or short permit, to heaven,
16—They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.

17—Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face—
18—Vile intercourse where virtue has not place.

19—Then keep each passion down, however dear,
20—Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear;

21—Her sensual sneers, let faithless pleasure lay,
22—With craft and skill to ruin and betray;

23—Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise,
24—The masters grow of all we must despise.

25—Oh, then renounce that impious self-esteem;
26—Riches have wings and grandeur is a dream.

27—Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave,
28—The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

29—What is ambition? 'Tis a glorious cheat,
30—Only destructive to the grave and great.

31—What's all the gaudy glitters of a crown?
32—The way of bliss lies not on beds of down.

33—How long we live not years but actions tell;
34—That men live twice who live the first life well.

35—Make, then, while yet you may, your God your friend,
36—When Christian worship yet not comprehend,

37—The trust that's given guard; and to your self be just;
38—For live we how we can, yet die we must.

The Red Box Clew.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

"No, sir," said Vega, examining the box, "I have never seen it before. But I know Frank Douglas well."

"Ah! Where can I find him? Where does he live?"

"You are mistaken," said Vega. Frank is a girl, a few weeks older than I. She lived here two weeks—she was my friend. But she has gone away, now. I may never see her again!" And the tears came to the child's eyes.

"A girl?" cried the lady. "You say she is a girl, and named Frank Douglas?"

"Wait, my dear," interposed Mr. Douglas; "remember she cannot hear you." Then he wrote: "You do not know where she went? And she was your friend? How is this?"

"My mother sent her away, sir, because—well—for one reason—because she did not know who her parents were."

"Who didn't know?" demanded Mr. Douglas in a curious voice.

"Nobody knew. She was left on a doorstep when she was a baby. Nobody knows where she came from—except an old woman named Nance, who can't be found. Such a frightful old woman, with a nose!"

"With a nose!" cried Mrs. Douglas. "Richard, she means with the bone gone. She means Lucy Olney. Richard, this Frank Douglas is our child!"

"Wait!" said her husband. "My darling, remember how many times our hopes have been raised, only to be disappointed."

"But the box," returned his wife, excitedly.

"Yes, it seems conclusive. But I will write again. . . . Dear child, you are filling us with hope and life. Can you tell us this: Why was the girl named Frank Douglas, if her parents were unknown? How came she by the name?"

"Yes, I know," answered Vega, who had begun to share their excitement. "Listen and I will tell you. She was left on the doorstep of a man named Mr. West, in St. Louis; he had a sister who had been engaged to a young man named Frank Douglas. But her sweetheart was killed in the war. And she wanted the baby named Frank Douglas, because I guess she just loved the name and liked to hear it, over and over." As soon as she had said this, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas embraced each other with many tears. At last Vega faltered: "Is she your daughter?"

Then the gentleman wrote: "My brother was Frank Douglas, and I know he was engaged to a Miss West. Our little baby was stolen from us by her wicked nurse, and she was just such a woman as you have described. May Heaven bless you, my child, for the hope you have given us! Take us to your mother and we will find out where Frank has gone."

CHAPTER XX.

Vega led Mr. and Mrs. Douglas through the pasture to the front porch where Mrs. Clarmont sat beside her son. Ronald was in an easy chair, and he looked pale and thin; the chair was inclined, to ease his wounded leg. Vega introduced the travelers to her mother and there was an awkward pause. Mrs. Clarmont perceived that the visitors were of her own station of life, so she invited them politely to enter, although her tone of voice intimated that she had rather they wouldn't. "No," said Mr. Douglas; "but if you will permit, madam, we will rest a moment on the porch, for we have come a long way, and my wife is weary. It will not take long to explain the reason of our intrusion. We have learned from your daughter that a little girl named Frank Douglas was with you not long ago."

"Yes," said Mrs. Clarmont looking as if she had taken a taste of something that wasn't nice, "she was. But she's gone now, and gone for good," she added in a tone of satisfaction.

"I regret very much that your manner leads me to suppose this Frank Douglas is not a good child."

"Well," said the mistress of the house, "oh, as far as that goes, she was good enough, I suppose. As far as being good is concerned, I do not object to her. But you are a gentleman of the world, sir, you know goodness is not a key into proper families. The child was—well, common. But if you want to hire somebody, and have no young children of your own to associate with her, I think Fanny would do very well, indeed."

The lady now spoke in a sad voice: "I suppose she has been brought up in lowly surroundings, and is common in her ways. No wonder!"

"Indeed, her ways are not common," spoke up Ronald. "Frank is a perfect lady."

"My son, how can you say so!" his mother exclaimed. "Mrs. Douglas, as far as her manners are concerned, she is well enough. She's quiet and obedient. But—" here she dropped her voice to a thrilling whisper—"the child doesn't know who her parents were; she's a little outcast! Doubtless her father aud mother were murderers, or thieves, or something along that line. Twice she was left on people's doorsteps. You might say she spent her infancy being left around on divers doorsteps. If she wasn't so big, no doubt somebody would get her yet and leave her on a doorstep. So when Ronald said she was a perfect lady, he speaks as a boy. You know very well that a person without parents and a family Bible and things along that line, can't be a lady. But at the same time, if you want to hire her, and haven't children, as I said, I will recommend her."

"Then, your only objection is that she hasn't parents?"

"Well—not all. You see, not knowing who her parents are, she keeps trying to find them; so she wanders around at four o'clock in the morning—why, look at my son! He got shot in the leg trying to ferret out Fanny's parents. And nobody knows what will happen next! But another objection I have is her—well, you may say, religion."

"Oh," said the gentleman, "that's rather scarce where I come from."

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

"Safe bind, safe find." Fortify yourself by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla now and be sure of good health for months to come.

THE BEATITUDES.*

The date of the present lesson was perhaps a month or two later than that of the last. Jesus seems to have made a short visit to Jerusalem, the account of which is given us in the fifth chapter of John's Gospel. He healed the infirm man at the pool of Bethesda on the Sabbath, which increased the anger of his enemies. But when he calmly spoke of God as his Father, in terms of simplest familiarity, their rage could hardly be restrained, and henceforth they dogged his steps with increasing purpose to destroy him.

Returning to Galilee, he pursued his ministry of teaching and healing, regardless of the close watch kept upon his every word and act. To the criticisms on the conduct of his disciples in plucking the ears of wheat and rubbing them in their hands to satisfy their hunger, he boldly proclaimed the subordination of the Sabbath to the needs of man, and declared that he was himself the Lord of the Sabbath. Brushing aside the quibbles of the scribes, he taught the duty of doing good on that holy day, and practiced what he taught by healing in their very synagogue. All these things combined to bring around him, wherever he went, a great multitude. Many came and went through curiosity, but some had kept close to his side for many months. From among these he now chose twelve to be his apostles, or ambassadors, whom he might train for that world-wide ministry which he already knew to be the chosen plan of God for the world's salvation. The personality of these apostles we will discuss when we reach the lesson which has to do with his first commission given them. Suffice it now to say that he naturally included among them those who had been with him from the beginning of his public ministry, Simon Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip and Nathanael, or Bartholomew. He seems to have made formal choice of the twelve while upon a mountain, where he had been spending the night in prayer, and whither he was followed by the multitude from the city and country round about. Feeling that the time had now come to make known fully the principles of the kingdom which he was to establish, he chose a favorable spot on the side of the mountain, where the multitude could see and hear, and with his disciples standing closest to his side, delivered this most remarkable of all discourses.

A wonderful contrast exists between this first proclamation of the fundamental law of the Messiah's kingdom and the giving of the law to Israel through Moses. That was delivered on Sinai's rocky and lone height, which looked out on the desolate wilderness beneath. This was spoken on the green slope of the Horns of Hattin, at whose base stretched the smiling fields, the busy cities and the peaceful lake of Galilee. That was accompanied with mighty thunder, flaming fire and quaking mount. This came on the sweet and tender voice of love, soothing the sorrowing, encouraging the hopeless and rejoicing the humble. Instead of threats there were promises, instead of commandments Jesus uttered beatitudes, instead of rigid statutes there were loving incentives to virtue and truth. No wonder the Sermon on the Mount has been accepted as the great discourse of all human history. Equally simple and profound, it has been the delight of the lisping child and the despair of the longing sage. Borrowing the image of one of the church fathers, it is a great sea whose smiling surface breaks into refreshing ripples at the feet of our little ones, but into whose unfathomable depths the wisest may gaze with the shudder of amazement and the thrill of love. We have but two lessons in this incomparable sermon. The teacher should make the most of these, and try to secure at least a careful and thoughtful reading and study of the entire discourse by every member of the class.

The present lesson has to do with the octave of beatitudes, one of the most beautiful portions of sacred literature. Like the octave in music, they comprise all that is harmonious and lovely in human character. There are no other notes of spiritual beauty. He who attains to these highlands of thought and life is already upon the peaks of the Delectable Mountains. That the ideals of happiness or blessedness here given were different from those of the world was to be expected. That they are beyond those which even Christians have yet realized follows from our acknowledged imperfections. That they shall ultimately become the ideals of the race and be realized in human society, those of us who believe that the kingdom of God is destined to triumph and not defeat most confidentily anticipate. We can give but a brief word to each of them, but they are so simple that their beauty is most exceeding when least adorned by our imperfect comment.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Humility is the first foundation of noble character. He who would build high must begin low. A hut may rest on the surface of the ground. A mighty temple needs deep foundations. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, and he will exalt you in due time, says Peter. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall," is the experience of uncounted thousands.

"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." If their mourning is on account of their sins, they are comforted with pardon. If it is on account of their afflictions, they are comforted by the sympathy of a Father's love, and the assurance that sorrow will sometime be swallowed up in joy. This comfort is a light shining into the dark spots of life; a staff on which we lean in our weakness; an anchor that holds our bark from shipwreck on the rocks of unbelief; a rainbow that o'erspans our pathway through the storm.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Gentle in conduct is the meaning of this grace. The "gentle" man is destined to rule the earth. Savages must lose their savagery or become extinct. The successful man is he who deals with men as the woodchopper does with the tree which he makes into rails. They will "go with the grain." The sun's gentle influence gives earth her spring robe of many colors. The gentle spirits are those which make human life beautiful and happy.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Hunger and happiness are strange companions, yet the one leads to the other, when divine guidance is sought. All civilization arises from felt wants of man. The saddest state in which a soul can be is to desire nothing better than its own native emptiness and nakedness. The first sign of hope in the prodigal was when he began to long for the full table of his father's house. And the sweet assurance of the gospel is that there is enough and to spare for every soul that desires righteousness. Whosoever will may come.

"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." The loveless are not loved. The intolerant need not expect forbearance. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses." As your face is reflected in the water, so your spirit is reflected in those of your neighbors. Hate and you will be hated. Love and you will be loved. Kindness to even the dumb brute will bring an answer in their mute affection and devotion.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The eye that is clouded by worldly ambition, or diseased from sensual lust, cannot behold the invisible world. Truth and love in the heart clarify the vision until one realizes the presence of God and gets glimpses of the glory of the farthest heavens. Blind Milton, cherishing thoughts of God during the years of his affliction, was granted the wondrous spiritual vision of his immortal Paradise Lost, and died with the rapturous words upon his lips, "Still guides the heavenly vision." Heaven's truth in the heart will bring heaven's king down to our very side.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Yes, for our Heavenly Father is called the God of peace; our Savior is entitled the Prince of peace; our gospel is a message of peace, and the Christian life is one in which the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, guards the heart and mind. Too often men honor the peacebreaker rather than the peacemaker. War is never anything better than a horrible necessity. Human strife is abnormal. Men were made to live in harmony. "Peace on earth" was the prophetic song of the angels at the birth of Jesus. They are his truest followers who seek in every possible way to bring strife to an end and unite the whole race in one loving brotherhood.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." We can hardly claim a share in this beatitude to-day, when the name of our dear Lord is at least outwardly honored, and we are called on to suffer in no real sense for his sake. But how bright the crowns of the holy martyrs, who went singing to the sword or stake, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame in his name! If we cannot die for him, however, we can live for him, and this is sometimes the hardest of all duties. Our faithful missionaries in pagan lands can enter largely into the fellowship of these martyr souls, for they suffer many hardships in behalf of the gospel. Let us at least crucify our selfishness, starve our lusts and allow the flame of divine grace to consume from within us the worldly ambitions which have interfered with the best work of the divine Spirit for and through us, and we may yet share in the reward of those who wear the martyr crown.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 1ST.

ALWAYS READY.

(Luke 21:29-36; 12:35-40.)

One of the best of modern statues is that of Daniel French, at Concord, on the battlefield of April, '76, called "The Minute Man." Lithe, muscular, ready stands our composite forefather, with rifle trailing in one hand and with yet undeserted plow-handle in the other—symbol of readiness, a readiness that brought freedom and all good things America knows. If America possesses ought of promise in us, in the sons of the minute man, it is due to that same quality which, in greater or less degree, we have inherited from him—readiness. When a commercial door is opened, ready to enter in; when a bridge is to be built, ready and quick to do it; when a heroic deed is to be performed, ready for the test; when God is to be glorified or life for a noble end to be devoted, ready for the sacrifice and service—such should be the preparedness of our people.

Of Abraham Lincoln it is said that he knew so well how to wait for the proper moment to bring up his reserves. Patience and readiness combined; far-seeing patience and instant preparedness—these qualities win and do things. Lord Roberts might have marched out upon the Veldt and then, like the king of France, have marched back again, unless General Kitchener had made all things ready—ready for quick action and victory. The army went out armed, shod, and with lights trimmed and burning. Shall the children of this world be wiser than the children of light?

The story is told that once our Puritan fathers were in convention assembled, when suddenly the sky was darkened, and though still broad day, a gloom settled down over the land. It seemed as if some storm or earthquake or great catastrophe were impending. One brother, expressing the terror of the rest, arose and said: "Evidently the Lord's coming is nigh at hand. Let us adjourn and betake ourselves to prayer." Then stood up one sturdy and stern old Pilgrim and replied: "Brother Moderator, if the Lord comes I do not know how he could better find us than in planning for his service. I move you that candles be brought and that we proceed with the deliberations." There is one thing better than making ready for the Lord's coming, and that is being ready. There is one thing better than getting into a proper frame of mind for death or worship, and that is being already in a proper frame of mind. Whether he come at night or at the cock-crowing, let him find us unashamed and unafraid.

Foresight is, perhaps, the most necessary prerequsite to readiness. Letting the eyes turn to the future, noting the budding fig tree, studying skies red and lowering, looking out for the rainy day, or the time of storm and stress that may be coming, and laying in a supply of fortitude, faith, devotion, character, to meet the coming time—such is readiness, is it not?

All this is true quite as much of the bright day coming as of the dark day—of the opportunity as of the disaster. To a hundred men in a row the same opportunity may be presented, and yet only one of them have sight so keen as to see the value of it. He it is who is ready. The ninety and nine will stop to ponder and weigh until the opportunity is gone. "Opportunity has a forelock, but no back hair."

The one who seizes every opportunity for self-improvement, for self-equipment, to trim his lamp, to fill it with oil, is the one who will one day turn to account the opportunity. James A. Garfield once was left alone in a farmer's parlor for an odd hour, and some friends returning to him found him, much to their amusement, buried in a book on the care of bees. He met their laughter with a great smile. Years after, when a candidate for office, called upon unexpectedly to address a farmers' gathering, he astonished these bee cultivators with his knowledge of their work. Is it needful to add that he got their votes?

And all that is true in the realm of worldly wisdom is likewise true, is it not, in matters of moment yet more great. He whose heart is ready for the voice that speaks to him from God above, around him, he who replies: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth!" he who opens his heart, gives up his life, stands ready, girded, shod, lighted by inward fires, alert, devoted—he shall, by grasping spiritual opportunities, taste spiritual rewards.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF JESUS' MINISTRY.

By Herbert L. Willett, Director.

In the Gospel records there are very scanty notes of time preserved to us, so that it is exceedingly difficult to construct an adequate plan of our Savior's work. For this reason several different theories of the length as well as of the order of his work have been proposed by various Bible students. We are confronted with two general considerations in dealing with the question.

The first is that in the Synoptic Gospels, almost no references are made to such events as the journeys to Jerusalem to commemorate the great feasts, which would give to us some fixed points from which to judge of the length of the ministry, while at the same time the Synoptic Gospels seem to conform more closely to the chronological order of the life of Christ than does the Gospel of John. This is probably owing to the close agreement of all three with the original oral narrative of our Lord's work, which finds, perhaps, its most concise expression in the Gospel of Mark.

The second consideration is that in John's Gospel much more account is taken of Jesus' visits to the feasts, from which we are able to gather more decisive evidence concerning the length of time he used in his public work. And still, in spite of these facts, the problem is very complicated and its solution is far from certain. So much is this the case that theories ranging all the way from one year to ten have been advocated by various authorities.

The evidence for a ministry of one year only is sought in the lack of formal statement concerning the matter, depends largely upon the Synoptic records, resolves the references to the feasts in John, to the subordinate feasts as well as the passover, which would make possible the assignment of all these feasts to a period compressed within slightly more than a year; and above all quotes the significant words of Jesus used in the synagogue in Nazareth of his Messianic work: "To proclaim the acceptable year of our Lord" (Luke 4:19).

On the other hand, one or two Bible students have asserted that the ministry of Jesus could not have been less than ten years in length, and among other proofs of this call attention to the fact that he must have been upwards of fifty years of age when he held his controversy with the Jews, who said to him: "Thou art not yet fifty years old" (John 8:57).

Between these extremes the truth is evidently to be sought, and the majority of authorities have come to the conclusion that a ministry of about three years and six months meets in a more satisfactory form the facts of both the Synoptic and the Fourth Gospels than any other. However, it must be considered that an absolutely satisfactory chronology of the life of Jesus cannot be constructed. The fact that there are more than thirty different schemes of chronology now extant proves this to be the case. Yet we may decide upon a fairly satisfactory order of events as at least a working basis for our study, and it is believed that the plan presented in the supplementary readings to the chapters in the handbook on the Life and Teachings of Jesus affords such a scheme.

Putting together these facts and remembering that the life of our Lord probably began at least four years before the opening of the Christian era, owing to a mistake in the chronology which was made in the fifth century when the calendar was reconstructed upon the basis of "the year of our Lord," we get the general scheme of the thirty years private life covering the period from 4 B. C., to 26 A. D., and the three years and a half of public ministry from 26 A. D. to the spring of 30 A. D. These three years and a half of publicity may be divided roughly into the period of obscurity, spent largely in Judea and closing with the imprisonment of John; the period of popularity, whose scene lies in Galilee, and in which the three great circuits of the province were made, and the period of opposition, spent in Galilee, Perea and Judea, and closing with the final week of tragedy and triumph. Of the first period, which probably covered only a few months, the Gospel of John is our only source of information. The second is described in the Synoptic Gospels and covers somewhat more than a year the third, by all the Gospels, but especially Luk

Literature.

A new work on the ever interesting and difficult subject of Messianic prophecy is George S. Goodspeed's "Israel's Messianic Hope," which is just now coming from the press of the Macmillan Co.

Mr. E. C. Stedman's "American Anthology" has been delayed in publication by the illness of the editor. A large-paper edition will be issued in the spring, and in the fall an edition uniform with the same author's "Victorian Anthology," to which it is a companion volume. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

"Notes on the Bacon-Shakespeare Question," by Hon. Charles Allen, gives a resume of the chief arguments which have been presented on both sides of the extraordinary controversy over the poems and plays in question. The main line of argument hitherto in support of the Shakespearean origin is that the works show powers, poetical and dramatic, which Bacon did not possess. Judge Allen shows in addition to this that the plays show weaknesses just at the point at which Bacon was strong, i. e., in law. The author maintains that whoever wrote the plays knew very little about law, which is exactly the subject about which Bacon, an eminent jurist, knew a great deal. This is a strong reinforcement of the former arguments and a good summary of them as well. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

It is very unfortunate that anything like an acrimonious discussion should arise between various publishers as to their rights to issue the "authorized" life of Mr. Moody. It reminds one of the unseemly contests which occur over wills before the testators are buried; nevertheless, one sometimes has to go to law to protect his rights, and in this case it appears to us that the Revell Company is justified in issuing statements to prove that the life of Mr. Moody by his son, which is to be published by them, is really the work which is authorized by the family of Mr. Moody. To be sure, anyone who knows anything of interest about Mr. Moody's life has a perfect right to give it to the public with or without authority, but it appears on the surface absurd that, when the man's own son is preparing a biography, three or four other works should claim to be "the only life authorized by the family." Certain correspondence which has been made public by the Revell Company makes it clear to us that that firm's course in the matter has been entirely straightforward and honorable, which is more than can be said of at least one other publisher and distinguished author.

The first of the lives of Moody to come from the press is the one issued by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, called "The Shorter Life of D. L. Moody," by P. D. Moody and A. P. Fitt. It is in two small volumes and gives in concise and attractive fashion an outline of the events of his career and the enterprises with which he was connected. (Two volumes, paper, 25 cents. Address orders to Thomas P. Ullum, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

Christian Endeavorers will be especially interested in a story entitled "Doings in Derryville," by Lewis V. Price. It is the story of the regeneration of a New England country town under the influence of a noble young woman who organized an Endeavor Society for the exhibition of practical Christianity and to destroy the evil effects of sectarian squabbles with which the village had been cursed. The teaching of the story is wholesome at every point and the kind of Christianity which it recommends is the kind the world needs. The book will do a vast amount of good, in spite of its lack of literary merit. (United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston. 60 cents.)

We are in receipt of a little paper covered volume of 85 pages, bearing the title, "A Complete Course in Suggestive Therapeutics," which is a course of lessons by mail in the subtle art of healing by suggestion. It is interesting to read, whether one believes the doctrines here set forth or considers them a noxious humbug. At any rate, the authors do not claim that medicines are not useful in treating some diseases, or that they can cure a broken leg by suggesting to the patient's "subjective mind" that his leg was never broken. (Parson's School of Suggestive Therapeutics, Parsons, Kansas. $5.00.)

There is much sound sense, practical suggestion and religion for the home in the little book called "Sunday Afternoons for the Children: A Mother Book," by E. Frances Soule." It might be called an application of kindergarten methods to Sunday-school work for the home. The plan is a good one and it is worked out with admirable ability and in a charming spirit. Many a perplexed mother will have reason to be grateful for its assistance. (Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York. $.75.)

Obituaries.

BISHOP.

The old guard is melting away. On Dec. 26, 1899, Bro. George D. Bishop dropped from the ranks of the church militant to answer the roll call on high. He was born in Fleming county, Ky., Dec. 7, 1835, where he lived until he grew to manhood. In his boyhood he attended the old Popular Run Church, where he received his first religious impressions, from John I. Rogers, John T. Johnson and John Smith, who was an uncle of his mother. At the age of 20 years he moved to Illinois, where he became a Christian. He was married to Miss Lucia J. Smith at Mendota, Ill., March 11, 1873. For the past twelve years he has been an invalid, an intense sufferer. In it all he never complained, and when the end approached he expressed himself as ready to go. I have never known a truer or sweeter life.

W. B. TAYLOR.

JOHN D. DAWSON.

[BRO GARRISON:—I find the following MS. among some old papers. It was intended for publication at the time it was written, but neglected. As it refers to one of the best men I ever knew, "an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile," I hope you may find room for its publication, especially so as there was no notice of his death in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at the time, as I remember. He had been an elder in the church here for 25 years and was well known to our older class of ministers, among whom I may mention, L. B. Wilkes, A. B. Jones, B. H. Smith, T. P. Haley and others.—CLAYTON KEITH]

Died, at his home near Louisiana, Mo., on Sept. 10, 1885, in the 77th year of his age, Elder John D. Dawson, of femoral abscess. Father Dawson was born near Lynchburg, Va., October 20, 1808. When a youth his parents moved to Kentucky, where he was educated, attending Center College, Danville, Ky., and afterward Transylvania University at Lexington. Soon after graduation he married Miss May Bell, of Lexington, and at the age of 23 years was elected principal of Midway Orphan School at Midway, Ky., which position he held for several years to the satisfaction of all. A few years later he became principal of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. Still later he removed to Louisiana, Mo., where he was associated with Elder Virgil Rice in the management of a female seminary for three years during the Civil War. Since which time he has spent his life in retirement from the schoolroom, in the seclusion of his quiet country home, gardening and devoting his time to fruit-raising. For many years he had been meteorological observer at this station and reporter for Washington University. He was a gentleman of extraordinary refinement—intelligent and scholarly—blending the simplicity of the child, the modesty of the girl and the erudition of the scholar. He was a man of decided convictions on all matters religious, moral, social or political. Reserved exceedingly in manner, by no means aggressive, and yet positive on all matters affecting the welfare of church or state. He was constantly abreast of the age on all current topics of the day, in literature, science and art. He was a man pure in spirit, chaste in thought, elegant in all his expressions, yet modest and diffident as a child. A man of blameless character, spotless reputation, unquestioned piety, wise in counsel and faithful in the discharge of all his religious duties for more than half a century.

DEWITT.

James Andrew Dewitt, 59 years, 10 months and 13 days old. He was born in Monroe County, Ky., April 17, 1840. Obeyed the gospel in his young manhood; was married, raised a family, came to this state 12 years ago and since that time he has buried his companion and three of his children. On Feb. 28, at 5 P. M., he died, leaving four children besides relatives and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services from the Christian Church Friday, March 2, at 2:30 P. M., conducted by his nephew, Mark Dewitt, and the writer.

EYMAN.

Daniel Eyman, who was born Oct. 15, 1827, and who united with the Disciples of Christ in 1888, was on the 2nd day of March, 1900, called home. He was a faithful, yet meek and lowly Christian. The greatest praise that he can receive is that he leaves not an enemy behind, but that all who knew him with one voice say he was like his Master. He leaves three children to mourn his loss. Funeral services were conducted in the Christian Church Sunday, March 4. G. E. WILLIAMS.

GRIMES.

Susannah Raddle was born Dec. 21st, 1834 and married to James T. Grimes Sept. 6th, 1854. To this union were born six children, three of whom are in heaven and three, Stephen, Rachel and Ruddle, are left to mourn the loss of their mother. Her husband preceded her in death last April. Sister Grimes departed this life the 2nd of March, 1900, aged 65 years, two months and nine days. She made the good confession at the age of 14 years and united with the Church of Christ in Adams County, Ill., and for 51 years has been a faithful Christian. The funeral was preached by the writer at the Christian Church in Dixie.

LEWIS.

Mary Wilda Lewis, the six-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sister Lewis, died at their home in Maitland, Mo., Sunday, February 18, 1900. Wilda was the pride of the household, a favorite in Sunday-school and Junior, and loved by all who knew her. It is sweet to know that she has only gone before; that she is with Jesus. There shall we meet her if we are true and faithful. May the God of all love comfort the bereaved ones. T. M.

STERLING.

Died, in Schell City, Mo., March 5, 1900, Delilah J. Sterling. Her maiden name was Murphy. She was born in Anderson county, Ky., Jan. 17, 1827. Was married to Louis Sterling in 1848. Ten children were born of this union and six are still living. A. Sterling, the pastor of the Christian Church at Schell City, is her youngest son. She had been a Christian for 55 years. Funeral services by the writer and Eld. Compton. We buried her beside her husband, who died four years ago last January. H. R. PRICE.

STOUT.

Entered into rest at Pekin, Ill., Thursday, March 1st, 1900, Isaac Stout, aged 77 years. He was born In Ohio Sept. 7th, 1822. He came with his parents to Illinois in 1827. He was a pioneer settler and also a pioneer preacher in this part of the state. When a boy he gove his heart to God, and while yet a young man was ordained to preach by the Church of Christ at Antioch, in this county. His was a busy and strenuous life. He tilled his farm during the week and preached the gospel on Sunday. He constituted a number of churches and added many converts to others. At the time of his death he was making his home with his son, Bro. John E. Stout, who is a deacon in the church here. His death resulted from a general breaking down. His last illness was not protracted. He just grew weaker day by day and death came as a gentle sleep, so peacefully did he pass away. We shall sadly miss him at the prayer-meeting and wherever the church meets to plan work for the glory of God and the advancement of his kingdom. He fell asleep with the utmost confidence that he would open his eyes in heaven, and so we believe. Our loss is his gain.

VAN DYNE.

Seldom has a church lost more than did the North Side Christion Church, Chicago, when Jacob Van Dyne, her junior elder, ceased from his labors. He was born in Lancaster, N. Y., Jan. 24, 1864, of sturdy Dutch stock. Before he was one year old his parents moved to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he became a Christian January 4, 1887. In 1893 he went to Omaha, but after a few months he returned to Chicago. He literally began life in Chicago on his knees, being a proficient carpet man. By that energy and devotion to duty which characterized his life he rapidly rose to the head of his department. He became a member of the North Side Church soon after the beginning of my ministry. In a few months he was called to the eldership, and never did a pastor have a nobler yokefellow. His life's faith and service has left a lasting impression on this growing congregation. For months we noticed with pain his failing health. In October he went to Denver, but after a few weeks he returned to Grand Rapids, where he fell asleep Jan. 13, 1900. On May 8, 1888, he was married to Mrs. Isabella Clark, a worthy companion of his prevailing life, who with his aged parents awaits the reward of the faithful.

Fried Onions

Indirectly Caused the Death of the World's Greatest General.

It is a matter of history that Napoleon was a gourmand, an inordinate lover of the good things of the table, and history further records that his favorite dish was fried onions; his death from cancer of stomach it is claimed also was probably caused from his excessive indulgence of this fondness for the odorous vegetable.

The onion is undoubtedly a wholesome article of food, in fact has many medicinal qualities of value, but it would be difficult to find a more indigestible article than fried onions, and to many people they are simply poison, but the onion does not stand alone in this respect. Any article of food that is uot thoroughly digested becomes a source of disease and discomfort whether it be fried onions or beefsteak.

The reason why any wholesome food is not promptly digested is because the stomach lacks some important element of digestion. Some stomachs lack peptone, others are deficient in gastric juice, still others lack Hydro chloric acid.

The one thing necessary to do in any case of poor digestion is to supply those elements of digestion which the stomach lacks, and nothing does this so thoroughly and safely as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dr. Richardson, in writing a thesis on treatment of dyspepsia and indigestion, closes his remarks by saying: "For those suffering from acid dyspepsia, shown by sour, watery risings, or for flatulent dyspepsia, shown by gas on stomach, causing heart trouble and difficult breathing, as well as for all other forms of treatment, is to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. I advise them because they contain no harmful drugs, but are composed of valuable digestives, which act promptly upon the food eaten. I never knew a case of indigestion or even chronic dyspepsia which Stuart's Tablets would not reach."

Cheap cathartic medicines claiming to cure dyspepsia and indigestion can have no effect whatever in actively digesting the food, and to call any cathartic medicine a cure for indigestion is a misnomer.

Every druggist in the United States and Canada sells Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and they are not only the safest and most successful but the most scientific of any treatment for indigestion and stomach troubles.

"HE THAT SEEKS FINDS." He that takes Hood's Sarsaparilla finds in its use pure blood, good appetite, good digestion and perfect health. It cures dyspepsia, scrofula, salt rheum, boils, pimples and all blood humors.

The favorite cathartic is Hood's Pills. 25c.

Government and Missionary Famine Relief.

The Christian Herald of March 7th contains the following cablegram from Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India:

India Government deeply grateful for renewed American sympathy and agrees to pay transport, provided the cargo is placed at the disposal of the Central Committee of Famine Relief.

This will meet with a hearty response from the American people. I think it a little unfortunate that the Christian Herald did not explain that there are two channels through which India's starving may be helped.

1st. Government. By the "Central Famine Relief Committee" in Lord Curzon's cablegram is meant, not a missionary or Christian committee, but a British Government Committee composed of English officials. These officers will have entire control of food stuffs, money, etc., and will necessarily make distribution through non-Christian natives—Hindoos and Mohammedans—in the name of the British Government. This will have no connection with missionaries or Christian work in India. This is praiseworthy in the British Government, and many will prefer to give in this way.

2nd. Missionary. Various missionary societies are receiving aid and sending it direct to their missionaries in India. They are not as yet sending any ship loads of grain. It is doubtful whether it is not better to send the cash. In the famine of '97 it was found that the market value of grain, added to the cost of transportation, would more than purchase an equal amount of Indian food stuff better adapted to their needs than our Western food stuffs are. Car loads of provision may be given and sold, and the money sent by cable. It will be controlled by missionaries and Christians, distributed through native Christians to the starving, in the name of Christ. Even in England good Christian people, like Lord Radstock, prefer to send help through missionary and Christian rather than through government and non-Christian channels.

I write the above in no spirit of opposition to the praiseworthy efforts of the British Government to save the starving in India, a Christian act in itself, but that all may know that there are two administrations in this beneficent work; and surely, it is cause of rejoicing when state and church unite in showing pity for and giving aid to the starving Hindoos. There is no doubting that, as far as able, the British officials will spare no pains to render aid in the name of the British Government or that missionaries will also be faithful in feeding the multitudes in the name of Christ.

During the last week I have received letters from Hurda, Bilaspur, Bina and Mungeli in central provinces, all telling of the famine-stricken millions around them. Bro. Ben Mitchell says: "We are all so very thankful to know something is to be done to help us fight another famine." Our missionaries beg for help as if they were themselves in danger of starvation. Some want to open relief works; some want to buy seed-grain for sowing time. Now is the time to help—now.

Moses, The Man of God.

Almost three decades ago D. R. Dungan wrote "On The Rock." Since then thirty-two editions have been sold, and the demand for it still continues and increases. It is the most popular book ever published by any of our houses.

Only recently the same author has written another book--MOSES. It is already having a large sale. It is as fascinating as a work of fiction. It is a valuable aid for the student of the Old Testament. It is a book which every teacher of the young, and especially every Sunday-school teacher should have. It gives the reader a new and more adequate conception of the great law-giver, prophet and chieftain.

D. R. DUNGAN.

In the preparation of this book the writer has drawn from the Bible, the works of Josephus, and tradition. The facts of this great man's life have been put into attractive form. Most persons will say as they conclude a reading of the work, "I did not know there was so much in the wonderful life of Moses." The author gives the Antecedents, the Birth, the Finding in the Waters, the Home Training, the Faith of the Child, His Early Manhood, His Education, His Campaign into Ethiopia, His Marriage to a Princess (Num. 12:1); His Association with the Rulers, such as Aames, Amenhotep; Tolmes I., and Tolmes II., who was drowned in the sea. The Troubles of Moses in the Court, Killing the Egyptian and Flight are Features of Interest. His stay in Midian and Lessons from the Hills and Flocks; His Return to Egypt and all the Struggles to Free the People of Israel; the Crossing of the Red Sea; Forty Years in the Wilderness, with all the Incidents, and Passing Edom, Moab and Ammon, and at last Camping on the Jordan Valley, make a Story Wild, but Awfully Grand. At last, when the Man of God has done his work and bidden farewell to the people, and lain down in the vale, once to be called to the Hill of Transfiguration, he then steps aside to be seen no more till we come to him on the other side.

ADDRESS, CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
1522 Locust St. St. Louis, Mo.

Last week of our club offer.

You cannot afford to miss reading "In His Steps;" especially when you can secure a cloth-bound copy free. See ad. below.

If you would really like to see a Christian daily paper as a permanent institution, help to make the Christian weekly a growing success, and the former is apt to follow.

Fort Smith, Ark., joins the ranks of club-raising churches. Twenty five families in that enterprising city will now enjoy the weekly visits of the Great National Journal of our brotherhood.

We are pleased to be able to report that the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST continues to grow rapidly. The brethren unquestionably know a good thing when they see it. Such a paper at one dollar and fifty cents a year is a very decided bargain in itself, and when we "throw in" a cloth-bound copy of "In His Steps" it becomes an opportunity unprecedented.

Leon, Ia., not to be left in the cold, joins the procession of Iowa churches and sends us twenty-seven subscribers.

St. Louis adds fifty subscribers to our list.

Don't stop to ask how we can afford to give you a cloth-bound copy of Chas. M. Sheldon's celebrated book, "In His Steps," with one year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for only one dollar and fifty cents, but order at once. We are expecting this offer to materially assist us in our efforts to double our list. If we succeed, we can afford it. If we do not———well, we will promise not to do so any more.

In these days, when the prices of paper, ink and type are flying upwards it is only reasonable to expect publishers to do one of two things, viz., to raise the subscription price of their publication or reduce the quality of its material or contents. We will be pardoned, we know, for calling attention to the fact that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is doing none of these things. The material used in the mechanical department was never better, the contents are greatly improved and the subscription price is the lowest in its history. Is it any wonder, then, that our subscription list is growing? Rather is it not strange that every family in the church does not take interest enough in good literature to subscribe?

New subscribers to the "Christian-Evangelist" sending $1.50 for one year's subscription will receive a cloth-bound copy of "IN HIS STEPS," Chas. M. Sheldon's celebrated book.

Old Subscribers may secure a copy of the book by paying subscription to April 1st, 1900, and $1.50 for a year in advance. If subscription is already paid in advance send $1.50 for an additional year's subscription and the book.

JUST FROM THE PRESS!

"Leaves From Mission Fields."

Issued Saturday, March 17, 1900.

One of the most charming volumes ever issued by the Christian Publishing Company is just off the press. It is "Leaves From Mission Fields," from the pen of N. M. Ragland. The book is in five parts, each part devoted to the life and work of a missionary. The five missionaries of whom the author has written are Mrs. Harriett Newell, who went as a young bride to India in 1812 and died after a few months; Mrs. Ann Judson, wife of Adoniram Judson; Miss Hattie L. Judson, Mrs. Josephine Smith and Charles E. Garst, the last three being some of our own missionaries, who gave up their lives in the foreign field.

N. M. Ragland is a master of beautiful and classic English. This present volume contains 273 pages. Every page is delightful. Every paragraph is a gem. Every sentence says something. The author has written with a purpose. He has aimed to hold up the lives and achievements of those who have gone before to the view of those who yet abide, that missionary zeal may be kindled anew, that fresh interest may be awakened in the evangelization of the world, and that other heroes and heroines may volunteer to take the places of those who have fallen.

Mechanically, "Leaves From Mission Fields" is equal, or superior, to anything ever issued from our press. In paper, type, printing and binding the book is above criticism. The volume is illustrated with seven half-tone cuts.

The price of this volume is One Dollar, postpaid. No preacher, no lover of missions, no admirer of the courage, faith and sacrifice of the pioneers of the cross should be without this book. It is a most valuable addition to our missionary literature, being both a memorial to the dead and an inspiration and appeal to the living.

OUR FIRST CONGRESS.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxvii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, March 29, 1900. No. 13.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Kentucky situation has been growing steadily more threatening since the Democrats began their attempt to prove that the assassination of Goebel was the result of a Republican conspiracy. The passage of a bill by the (Democratic) legislature offering a reward of $100,000 for the conviction of Goebel's murderer, which could not fail to arouse the cupidity of some, and the political advantage to be gained by proving that the other party had been guilty of so black a deed, give ground, in the mind of the dispassionate observer, for a suspicion that the trial of Caleb Powers, Republican Secretary of State, on the charge of conspiracy, is not being conducted in good faith and with an eye single to the triumph of law and justice. There is, perhaps, room for nothing more positive than suspicion, but at any rate there is fully as much evidence of a party conspiracy against Powers as there is of a party conspiracy against Goebel. The sensational testimony which has been given by Wharton Golden, a Republican mountaineer, who claims that he was in the plot and has turned state's evidence, was weakened very materially by ex-Gov. Brown's cross-examination of the witness. The scenes of excitement in the court room do not give evidence of the judicial calm which should prevail in the trial of so important a matter, and how it can be possible in Kentucky to find twelve men who can claim to be disinterested in this matter, it is rather hard to see. Meanwhile, the matter of the contest is before the highest state court, which will undoubtedly decide in favor of the Democrats. An appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court. The element of most immediate danger lies in the fact that the Democrats threaten to disregard this appeal and attempt to take possession of the offices by force as soon as the final decision of the state courts is pronounced. If the provision of the Constitution, which guarantees to every state a republican form of government, means anything, it seems to us about time for the Federal government to interfere in this matter, not in the interest of any one party against another, but for the preservation of a republican form of government.

The St. Louis municipal government is in a bad way. For a long time it has been generally known that it was virtually in the hands of a City Hall gang with whom no consideration was so unimportant as the general welfare of the city and no motive so potent as the desire for personal gain. A report which has just been made by the grand jury recognizes these facts and points the way to some remedial measures. With regard to the police department, against which charges of inefficiency have been made, the grand jury reports that the conspicuous failure of that department to reduce crime in the city and especially to stamp out the wine-room evil, is due to a want of co-operation between the police department, the police courts and the excise commissioner. In connection with the investigation of the bribery charges with reference to the city lighting contract, the jury gives us some uncommonly frank and accurate words about the House of Delegates: "We find from the evidence submitted to us that the proceedings in the House of Delegates are not conducted in a manner such as usually does and should prevail in legislative or parliamentary bodies. We find that the customs there prevailing and the language used were characterized by the evidence before us as the customs and language of the slums. All of this, however, was not a subject-matter for indictment, and it is with great regret that we are obliged to state that our efforts in the direction of proving fraud or bribery have been in vain." Evidently the jury believes that the bribery exists, though it cannot be proved on the available evidence. But in the investigation of the supply commissioner's office, there were discovered irregularities which can be proved. Thousands of dollars are expended for supplies for the various city institutions without competition, prices are paid far in excess of the current market prices for similar goods, orders are given to the favored firms with no specification as to price, large quantities of goods are received and paid for with no precaution to prevent short weight and count, and it has been proved that the city has paid for large quantities of supplies which have never been received. In view of these facts, the grand jury recommends that the supply commissioner be removed from office and that civil proceedings be instituted against him for the losses sustained by the city.

The Ohio Legislature has signalized its devotion to the liquor interests by defeating the Local Option Bill, which aimed to permit single wards, as well as entire cities and towns, to exclude saloons from their limits. The bill passed the House by a majority of about twenty and a majority of the Senate were pledged to support it, but at the last moment three of those who were pledged yielded to the influence of the powerful lobby which the brewers were sustaining and voted against the bill, securing its defeat by a single vote. It was a plain choice between the influence and support of the Anti-saloon League, backed by the solid sentiment of the church members in the state, and the influence and support of the brewers. The legislators chose the latter. As we look at it, this choice was not more flagrantly bad morals than it was bad politics. The temperance forces are organized in Ohio in an unusually effective manner, and they are an element to be reckoned with in politics. They played an important part in the last gubernatorial election and, although they did not succeed in changing the outcome, they affected the majorities in a significant manner. There are a good many people who have not yet forgotten about the administration's executive nullification of the army canteen law and have never been able to see any justification for that act. The defeat of this local option bill by a Republican legislature is unpleasantly suggestive of that event and the memory of these circumstances may rankle in the minds of some Ohioans, and perhaps some others, even until November.

The New York Legislature has, with every sign of reluctance and after inexcusable delay, passed a bill which was called forth by the Ramapo Water Company scandal a few months ago. To understand the situation it must be remembered that the charter of Greater New York deprives the city of the right of eminent domain to condemn for its own use water supplies anywhere within the state, which right the city had enjoyed under its old charter. The same influence which moved the Legislature to eliminate this provision from the charter also moved it to pass an act giving to a private corporation, the Ramapo Water Company, the right to condemn water supplies in any part of the state provided it could make a contract with the city of New York. When access to the water supplies had thus, by the act of the Legislature, been taken from the city and given to a private company, the time was ripe for a scheme which may almost be called a conspiracy, to lure or threaten the city into making a contract with the company. The contract which was proposed provided for the payment of $5,000,000 a year by the city to the company for the use of water rights upon which the latter had secured an option. The plot was exposed and the closing of the contract prevented by Comptroller Coler. What is really demanded by the practically unanimous voice of all who are not financially interested in the Ramapo Company, is an amendment to the charter which will put the city in a position to control her own water supply without the agency of the company. The measure which has been passed does not do this, but only places certain limitations upon the manner in which the company is to make its contract with the city, to prevent the city being taken by surprise, as it was before. The reluctance of the New York Legislature to pass any act to meet this demand and its refusal to pass the only act which can be really effective, reflects seriously upon the disinterestedness of that body of law-makers.

It may easily pass as an axiom that if it is worth while to have an army and a navy, it is worth while to have them organized to secure the highest degree of efficiency. Our experience in the late war revealed some startling defects in the management of both these departments, and the outcome of the investigation of the so-called scandals left a conviction in the minds of a good many people that the trouble lay rather in inefficiency of organization than in individual incompetency. Although the navy made an uncommonly good showing, it has been evident that there is need of some sort of centralized control of its various departments other than that which the Secretary of the Navy can give. Accordingly, Secretary Long has issued an order creating a board the general function of which is to insure the instant efficiency of the navy in case of need, and to provide for the coast defense, so far as that falls within the scope of the navy. Admiral Dewey is at the head of the board, and among its other members are the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, the Chief of the Bureau of Intelligence, the President of the Naval War College. The other members are naval officers of high rank, making nine members in all. This plan is in agreement with the method employed in the navies of most of the great powers, and it is certain to add to the efficiency of the department. Secretary Root favors a similar arrangement in the War Department, where reorganization is even more sorely needed.

The General Quadrennial Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church is far the largest of the ecclesiastical assemblies of Protestantism in this country. Its twenty-third session will be held in Chicago beginning May 2 and continuing about three weeks. This is the high court of Methodism, which has charge of the organization of the machinery of the denomination and the administration of the most important matters. The numerical growth of Methodism during the present century has brought its membership from 64,894 up to 2,871,949. During the past four years there has been an increase of more than a hundred thousand in membership, but the statistics for last year were unique in that they showed a loss of almost 24,000 members. This has given rise to serious questionings, both within and without the denomination, as to the reason for this falling off. The consideration of this question will doubtless occupy some of the time of the conference. Among the topics which are to come up for discussion or action is the equalization of lay and clerical representation. It is now little more than a quarter of a century since the lay element in the church was given representation at all. The annual conferences have already voted to make the number of lay representatives equal to those of the clergy, and the delegates have been elected on this basis. There is little doubt but that the Conference will ratify this action and admit the extra lay delegates. The admission of women to sit as delegates has not yet been granted. There has been, and always will be,so long as the occasion for it remains, much complaint against the limitation of the length of pastorates to three years. The disadvantage of this arrangement has been especially felt by the city preachers, and the subject may come up again for discussion. There are many who believe that the rigid prohibitory rule in regard to certain popular amusements is not the wisest possible measure for dealing with this problem, and discussion upon the topic is always liable to arise in the body which has power to change the regulation.

IS IT FORTUNATE?

The editor of the Independent is quoted as saying, recently: "Now-a-days, that church is most fortunate that has no creed." It is only when we use the term "creed" in the sense of an authoritative formulation of theological opinions that the above statement can be accepted. This is a common but incorrect use of the word. A creed should signify what is believed, and what is fundamental in religious faith. In that sense we should esteem a church that had no creed to be most *un*fortunate. It would be a building without a foundation; a super-structure without a sub-structure. Or, changing the figure, it would be an engine without steam and without capacity to draw the burden of the world's need.

Is it not high time that we had come to a clear understanding as to what a creed is, and what its true place is in Christianity? When Christ said to Peter, "On this rock I will build my church," He evidently stated what was the foundation truth of the church which He was to build, and which he was to use as a divine organism in the extension of His kingdom in the world. The connection shows clearly to what He refers. It was the truth which Peter confessed, the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus. Hence it became a clearly recognized principle in the early church that whoever confessed Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God, was to be received by baptism into the fellowship of the church, and was to retain his fellowship with the church as long as he was obedient to the teaching of Christ and manifested the Christian spirit. It was a sad day for the church when it departed from the simplicity of the gospel and began to multiply its so-called articles of faith, which were only speculative opinions which had little or nothing to do with Christian life and character. Now if the Independent means that that church is most fortunate which is content with the original, divinely given creed, which Peter confessed, and on which Christ said He would build His church, and discards all others, we are in entire accord with the sentiment.

There is a vast difference, however, between this position and that of a creedless church, which is adrift upon the wide sea of human speculation without compass, rudder or definite port. There are churches of that kind. They have accomplished very little for the world. They lack the dynamic power of a great creed, a divine creed. But the church that accepts Jesus Christ as the revelation of God's love and truth, as One whom God has sent into the world to lead humanity out of its sin and ignorance into the kingdom of truth and righteousness, accepts, also, all the truth Jesus taught, directly, or indirectly through those whom he qualified and empowered to communicate His will to the world. The Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, God's love for the world, His willingness to forgive all who come to Him, His providence over the race and all His great purposes concerning humanity—all this and more is involved in the creed upon which Christ said He would build His church.

While writing this article, we opened a copy of the Universalist Leader, of Boston, and find in it an account of the resignation of a Methodist minister in Wisconsin and his retirement from the Methodist Church as a minister, together with the reasons which led to that action. The dogmas which he, the Rev. Mr. Forkell, finds himself unable longer to accept are (1) the deity of Jesus, as distinguished from the divinity of Christ; (2) that theory of the atonement which regards it as the payment of a penalty to "reconcile the Father to us;" (3) original guilt; (4) substituted righteousness, and (5) the doctrine of endless punishment as taught in the Methodist Church. On this last point he claimed that he was required to suppress his convictions, which he feels unable to do longer.

With the exception, perhaps, of the first item mentioned, there is nothing in the New Testament creed that would be in the way of Mr. Forkell. In all probability his objection to the first grows out of metaphysical definitions and distinctions, which are purely human in their form, and which any disciple of Jesus ought to have the liberty to reject. If he is willing to accept the truth which Peter confessed, in the words in which he confessed it, interpreted according to their most natural meaning, and accepts Christ as the supreme authority in religious faith and conduct, he would not be disturbed in any church that was content to abide by the original confession of faith, unless he used his liberty in a way to disrupt the unity of the church.

Fortunate, indeed, is the church which, holding fast to the old creed, confessed by Simon Peter, discards all human formulations of doctrine as authoritative, or binding on the conscience, or as tests of fellowship, and makes the New Testament its only rule of faith and practice. No doubt our readers congratulate themselves that they belong to churches which recognize no other creed and no other rule of faith and practice. But while rejoicing in this liberty which we have in Christ, let us see to it that we illustrate in our individual lives and in our church life the sufficiency of that creed and rule of faith to conserve the unity of disciples, to promote their spiritual growth, and to inspire activity in carrying out Christ's plans for the conquest of the world.

THE UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THE PHILIPPINES.

In an editorial on "Protestantism in the Philippines," our esteemed neighbor, the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has the following comment on the recent recommendation of Prof. Schurman:

The recommendation of Prof. Schurman, in his report on the subject, is that missionaries of Protestant faith should be sent, but he also adds certain suggestions that will probably by most persons be considered impractical. He says, for instance, that among the Filipinos, Chinese and other peoples of heathen countries, the various forms of Protestantism are regarded as so many different religions, and that the minds of the people are thereby confused and the good results of missionary teaching in a large degree nullified. He urges, therefore, that the Protestant denominations shall unite their efforts, and when sending missionaries to the islands shall send clergymen of only one denomination, and thus Protestantism shall be represented as a unit in opposition to Romanism. It is not at all probable that a suggestion of this kind will be received with favor by any church, for, unfortunately, while Protestantism is in one sense a unit, in another it is divided, and the various branches are competing in friendly rivalry which shall accomplish the most and the best work. Suppose, for instance, that in some way the conclusion should be reached that only Methodist missionaries should be sent to the Filipinos: the attempt to induce Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians and other denominations to aid in support of the movement would be quite vain, for it is not likely they would see their way clear to assist the growth of the Methodists.

Our neighbor is probably right from his point of view. But is there not a more excellent way than having one denomination represent all Protestants, or having our Protestant divisions transferred to those islands? Why not establish "The United Church of Christ in the Philippines," in which all evangelical bodies might have a hand, but in which no denominational names or creeds should have any place? In this united church there should be no authority but Christ's, and no guide but the Word of God. All religious bodies agree that faith in Christ and obedience to Him makes Christians, and that a church composed of such people would be simply a church of Christ. By adding some additional peculiarities in the way of doctrines and forms of church government we may make them something else in addition to being Christians, and it is this something else that divides Christians. Our suggestion is that, in the Philippines, where civilization has not reached the development which it has in Protestant lands, and where the untutored minds of the Fillipinos might be confused by these nice distinctions, we leave them off and content ourselves with promoting "The United Church of Christ in the Philippines."

If this were done it might be years before these simple-minded people would feel the need of those extra features which, when faithfully taught, would make some of them "Methodists," some "Baptists," some "Presbyterians" and some, perchance, "Campbellites," etc. Indeed, if it should so happen that they really never should advance far enough in theological and ecclesiastical refinements as to realize their need of such denominational features, we believe there is good ground for thinking that their salvation would not be imperiled or their usefulness seriously marred. It would have the benefit of saving towns and communities from building an unnecessary number of church buildings, would vastly cut down the expenses of our missionary societies in this country and would prevent no little unprofitable controversy and party spirit among them. All they would have to do would be to study to be faithful followers of Christ, and this would perhaps be enough for these undeveloped children of the Orient. We favor the union church in the Philippines.

COMPARATIVE RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.

The American Christian Missionary Society has printed a leaflet containing a comparative statement of various religious bodies, showing their missionary work and its results. These statistics contain a lesson too important to be overlooked. We call attention to a few facts and figures:

The Baptists, with 2,925,667 members, 42,893 churches and 28,409 ministers, raised for Home Missions last year $461,831.77; employed 1,092 missionaries and organized 57 churches, adding 7,355 members.

The Congregationalists, with 625,864 members, 10,088 churches and 5,922 ministers, raised $516,245.17; employed 1,848 missionaries, organized 34 new churches and added 7,794 members.

The Presbyterians (North), with 954,942 members, 7,369 churches and 7,062 ministers, raised $582,251.27; employed 1,380 missionaries, organized 47 churches and added 11,683 members.

The Disciples of Christ, with 1,085,615 members, 9,640 churches and 6,054 ministers, raised $100,550.99; employed 129 missionaries, organized 63 churches and added 9,996 members.

The statistics of the Methodists do not contain the number of churches organized and additions made, and are omitted from this comparison.

From the above statistics it appears that the Congregationalists lead in the amount of money contributed per capita, viz., 82½ cents; they are followed by the Presbyterians, whose per capita was just under 61 cents. The Disciples of Christ gave, per capita, for Home Missions, less than 10 cents, the Southern Baptists being the only body giving less per capita. There is evidently room for growth in liberality among us.

The striking fact brought out in these statistics, however, is that with far less than one-half the number of members, one-fourth the number of churches and ministers, and with one-fourth the amount raised, and with one-eighth the number of missionaries, the Disciples of Christ organized more churches than the Baptists by six, and added more members by 2,641. In other words, while the Baptists added 6½ members per missionary, the Disciples added 77½.

If we make comparison with the Congregationalists we find that with twice the membership which they possess, we only raised one-fifth the amount of money, employed about one-fifteenth the number of missionaries; and yet, we organized nearly twice as many churches and added almost one-third more members. In other words, while the home missionary among the Congregationalists adds 4 1-6 members, a home missionary among the Disciples adds 77½. The Presbyterian home missionary adds 9.

The ability of the Disciples of Christ, therefore, to win converts in proportion to the amount of money raised and missionaries employed, over and above their brethren of other religious bodies, is a most striking fact, that should and perhaps will challenge their investigation. It is certainly not to be accounted for by the greater ability of our missionaries in the way of natural talent, for in that respect we only average with other people, nor is it to be found in superior education or mental culture, for our ministry is excelled in that respect by those of some of the religious bodies mentioned. The explanation is to be found in the plea we are making for Christian union, and in our method of presenting the gospel so as to make it clear and intelligible to people who desire to accept it.

As the writer of this once said in an address at Springfield, Ill., in our National Convention: "There is no religious body on earth that, with the same amount of money and the same number of men, can win as many converts to Christ as the people known as Christians or Disciples of Christ." This was said in no spirit of boasting then, nor is it repeated in any such spirit now. On the contrary, it places upon us a very grave responsibility. If God has given us a dispensation of truth that commends itself to the people of this generation, we are under the most sacred obligation to consecrate our means, our talents, our energies to the presentation of this truth to the people of our own and other lands.

This fact has special significance just now in connection with the preparation which is being made in the churches for the May offering to Home Missions. "To whom much is given much will be required." It is in the light of this truth that we must seek to understand and discharge our responsibilities to God and to our fellowmen in pushing forward the work He has committed to our hands.

Whoever considers the study of anatomy I believe will never be an atheist; the frame of a man's body and the coherence of his parts being so strange and paradoxical that I hold it to be the greatest miracle of nature.—LORD HERBERT.

Hour of Prayer.

POSSESSING THE LAND.

(Num. 13:26-33; Num. 14:6-9.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic for April 4.*

CENTRAL TRUTH: The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and He expects His people to take possession of it in His name and for His use.

It was a critical time in the history of the Israelites when, having pitched their tents in the wilderness of Paran, the Lord directed Moses to send spies into Canaan to ascertain and report the character and condition of the country and its inhabitants. Moses selected twelve men, heads of their families and princes in their tribes, for this important duty. He gave them instructions as to how they were to go and the information they were to seek. On their return they submitted a majority and minority report. Ten of the number reported that it was a very fine country, flowing with milk and honey, but that the people who dwelt in the land were strong, that the cities were fenced and were very great, and that the children of Anak were there, in comparison with whom the Israelites were as grasshoppers. They advised against going up. Caleb and Joshua, however, submitted a different report. They said: "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." The majority report prevailed, however, in the long run, and the consequences are known.

What was the radical defect in this action of the Israelites? It was all right to send up the spies to secure the necessary information, in order that intelligent plans might be made for taking possession of it. The mistake was—and it was a mistake that amounted to disloyalty—to doubt God's ability to give them the land which He had promised them. They magnified the difficulties and underestimated their resources, including the promises of God.

Caleb and Joshua had the right view of the situation when they said: "If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land and give it unto us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. Only rebel not against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land, for they are bread for us; their defense is removed from over them and the Lord is with us; fear them not." These two men alone seemed to understand the truth that their safety lay in obeying God and in thereby securing his protection and defense. But for their brave testimony they suffered the fate which many another man since then has suffered for telling the truth. They were stoned, maligned and their counsel rejected. This marked a turning-point in the history of Israel and made them wanderers in the wilderness until all the men of that generation, except Caleb and Joshua, had perished.

The Christian warfare is different in many respects, but our Lord has given instructions to extend his reign over all the earth. He has laid this mission on the church. The Calebs and Joshuas who believe it is possible to capture the walled cities of our own country for Christ and extend His dominion over pagan lands are still in the minority. It is indeed a momentous undertaking to overcome the obstacles in the way of the extension of Christ's kingdom, even in our own highly favored land. Vast amounts of money are invested in callings which are directly antagonistic to the reign of the Prince of Peace. The liquor traffic, the gambling hells, the brothels, municipal corruption, the inordinate greed for wealth, a vile literature—these are some of the giants that defy the armies of the living God and obstruct the progress of Christ's kingdom. Can we overcome them? The Calebs and Joshuas say: "If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land and give it unto us," and as for these gigantic evils mentioned, "their defense is removed from over them and the Lord is with us; fear them not."

But the army that captures these strongholds of Satan must be a disciplined army, a courageous army, a well-equipped army and a loyal army, that will follow its great Commander against whatever foe he may lead them. It must be a united army, too, before there can be that co-operation that is essential to success. There is much work to be done, therefore, before the church is prepared for a successful aggressive movement against the enemies of our King.

This land of ours is indeed a goodly land, a highly favored land, but we have not yet fully taken possession of it. There remains a tremendous work to be done in the cities, and there are yet vast regions of country to be evangelized. Nothing short of a faith that links hands with omnipotence is capable of coping with the difficulties that confront us.

But "with God all things are possible." We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us. We are able with divine assistance to go up and possess the land. If the Christians of this country, putting aside all questions which gender strife and perpetuate divisions, should unite their forces and energies against the powers of darkness, and should send forth an army of missionaries commensurate with its wealth and its numbers to preach only Christ and Him crucified to a perishing world, we should witness such a moral miracle as has not been witnessed since the first century.

There is need, therefore, for those of us who plead for a pure gospel and a united church, under the leadership of Christ, to be very zealous in pushing this plea throughout all this great country, which must be the base of operations for the great missionary movements of the future. If the Lord delight in us, and in the truth which we hold from Him in trust for the world, we can make this a victorious and triumphant plea in the church of the living God. May He give us the zeal and the consecration, the faith and the wisdom to accomplish the work whereunto we have been called.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven! We thank Thee that it is a part of Thy great plan and purpose to bring this whole earth in subjection to the reign of Thy Son, our Savior. We thank Thee for a place in the mighty army which He has called out and is leading forth to conquest and to victory. Wilt Thou so enlarge our vision, so quicken our zeal and increase our faith, that we may go forth, with holy enthusiasm and undaunted courage, to take possession of this land with the simple but sublime and all-conquering power of the gospel of Thy grace. And wilt Thou hasten the time, we beseech Thee, when all the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. In His name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is not the policy of the Easy Chair to announce too many new discoveries, or urge too many reforms at once, before the people are ready to receive them. Occasionally, however, we rediscover a fact that many a man before has discovered for himself, and believing it to have value for others we let our readers into the secret. The one we are about to mention will be sure to awaken opposition on the part of some and cause disappointment and pain to many others. But the truth—saving truth—must be told at all hazards, no matter what sacrifices it may involve. Why should a man, even an editor, shrink from martyrdom in these degenerate times? And so, with something of a martyr's courage we nerve ourselves for the unwelcome but wholesome deliverance: The Easy Chair has found out by observation and experience that preachers, editors and other people of sedentary habits, eat too much and too often! This has been a theory of ours for a good while, but a few weeks ago we decided to make a practical test of the matter. Mark with what result.

For a long time we found the midday down-town lunch to be most unsatisfactory. We dreaded the noon hour, because it imposed the difficult task of selecting something from the bill of fare we could relish. The selection was often made in desperation and proved to be wholly unpalatable. Finally, it dawned upon us: Why eat at noon? There is no law to compel it. The system does not seem to require it. We decided to drop the noon lunch. It has worked like a charm. We have found it to be wholly unnecessary. The head is clearer and the whole body is in better condition for the afternoon work by omitting it. The stomach has a little vacation and is in prime condition for the evening meal, which is taken long enough before bedtime to give time for digestion, and with a relish which makes eating a pleasure. A little fruit prevents the feeling of goneness which may be felt at first until the stomach has time to adjust itself to the new regime. Our only regret now is that we did not discover sooner that three meals a day are unnecessary and really harmful to many people. It would have saved us from many a headache, and perhaps our readers from many a stupid editorial! Go thou and do likewise.

We do not say that the two-meal system is good for all classes of people engaged in all kinds of work. We are fully persuaded, however, that with a very large number of people it would prove most beneficial. Excessive eating is a prevalent sin. There is no use calling it by a milder name. Why should a preacher cloud his intellect and dwarf his mental powers by gormandizing? Yet, many do it. The dear sisters—God bless them!—present the temptation and it is only the minority that have the strength of will and the power of self-control to resist the temptation to over-eating. Many a preacher has shortened his life and impaired his power for usefulness while living by eating too much and too often. Less time at the table and more time in the study would help to solve the "dead-line" problem among preachers. It would make an optimist of many a dyspeptic pessimist. And there are others besides preachers, editors and other indoor brain-workers, who need to feed the body less and the mind and heart more. Their names are legion. The kind of people "whose god is the belly" is not yet extinct. There are plenty of sacrifices offered at that shrine yet.

Some brother, who will call this nonsense, will probably be heard to say in response to some friendly inquiry as to his health, "I am not well; I have no appetite." Terrible disease, that! Quit eating, brother, until your appetite returns, and then do not eat so often. If you are "out of fix," skip a meal or two, and it will work wonders. Study the food question a little. Find out what agrees with you and let everything else alone. Eat to live, and do not live to eat. One of the revivals most needed in this country is a revival in the gospel of cooking and eating hygienically, and living simply and temperately—the gospel of good health. The doctors may not be helped by these observations, but they will tell you, nevertheless, that we have spoken the truth. If this be heresy, make the most of it!

Questions and Answers.

Must a person believe in the miraculous conception of Jesus in order to be saved? ***

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." While we believe that the divinity of Christ involves the miraculous conception, we do not believe that any one has a right to make the miraculous conception of Jesus an article of faith or a test of fellowship. There are some who may see their way clear to accept the divinity or unique Sonship of Christ without being able to accept the miraculous conception. This may be an error of intellect, but if the heart accepts Jesus as both Savior and Lord, loving and obeying Him, that is the faith which justifies and saves. On the other hand, one might accept the dogma of the miraculous conception and be destitute of the faith which brings deliverance from sin. We cannot keep too prominently before the people that the sole object of faith is Jesus Christ Himself, and not any theory or philosophy or metaphysics concerning Him

In examining the notes on "The Peoples' New Testament," by B. W. Johnson, I see that the manner of scripturally setting apart elders, deacons and preachers is by fasting, prayer and laying on of hands. Now, if this is the only way, is it scriptural for a man to preach and baptize who has never been set apart in the above manner? Would the baptism administered by such an one be scriptural? There are many who deny that these things are necessary. G. W. Santee.

Burton, W. Va.

There must be a distinction made here, as is necessary in so many other cases, between what is orderly and proper, in a formal way, and what is essential. Bro. Johnson is right in saying that, according to the New Testament, elders, deacons and preachers were set apart by fasting, prayer and the imposition of hands. He did not, however, deny the validity of baptism performed by one who had not been thus ordained. The validity of baptism does not depend upon the regularity with which one has been appointed to the ministerial office, nor even upon the character of the administrator, but upon the fitness of the candidate who submits to the ordinance. We believe, however, it would be in the direction of good order and decorum if the New Testament custom were adhered to by officers in the church and preachers of the gospel. Ordination is the formal and solemn setting apart of one to a certain religious work, and confers upon him no supernatural power or grace. Preachers of the gospel, especially, would do well to insist on a formal ordination, not only because of their religious duties, but because they are often called upon to solemnize marriage, which is a civil as well as a religious contract, and must therefore conform to the law. While the law does not require any special form of ordination, it does require that a preacher shall be recognized as such among his people and in the community, and the most authentic way of extending this recognition is by ordination.

What is the "spirit of man within him"? (Zech. 12:1). When is it "formed," when does it enter man and what is its destiny? If it survive the body, is it an intelligent and conscious entity which acts independently of the body? Chas. E. Dunlap.

Hancock, Mo.

The questions as to when the spirit of man is formed, and when it enters man, have not been answered, so far as we know, by any inspired writer. We can only give our opinion. We should say that the spirit of man was formed within him, and not outside of him, to enter later, and that the time of the formation of the spirit corresponds with the beginnings of life and consciousness. God is the 'Father of our spirits," but it does not follow from this that he does not work through the laws which govern man's physical and mental development in forming the spirit of man within him. Of the first man it was said that God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." This states a fact, after the manner of the Bible, without entering into any explanation or philosophy of the fact. As to the destiny of the spirit, it is the immortal part of man, and, coming from God, is to return to Him. It does survive the body, and that, too, as an intelligent, conscious entity, acting independently of the body. Death does not break the continuity of our conscious existence. Moses and Elijah conversed with Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration, without the aid or co-operation of mortal bodies. All the New Testament representations concerning the spirits of the departed represent them as conscious and intelligent beings. Some are represented as being happy and others as unhappy, owing to their lives in this world, but all are conscious. The body is only the "earthly house" in which the spirit lives during its earth-life, and from which it departs at death. It is this separation between body and spirit that constitutes death in its physical sense. In its moral sense, death is separation between the spirit and God, and is caused by sin.

Current Religious Thought.

Dr. W. C. Bitting, of New York, writing in the Standard (Baptist), speaks of an evil of which we all have some personal knowledge, under the title, "The Mongrel Church Year." It is his belief that the church has more to gain by the observance of the "Christian year" than by keeping the multifarious "special days" in the interests of all sorts of societies.

Many of our Baptist Churches decidedly object to an ecclesiastical church year. The latter is made by first trying to locate the principal events in the life of Christ in the calendar months, and when this has been done for the three years of his ministry, to project upon our calendar year the results. In spite of the disadvantages of formalism which this produced, there is a great and rich thought that in the church year one is brought into frequent contact with the earthly life of our Lord, and this is no small advantage to the religious temperament. For ourselves we are free to confess that we would much rather have an ecclesiastical year constructed upon this basis than the confused, egotistic, hybrid affair which is sought to be thrust upon us by all sorts of organizations within and without the church.

To begin with, our regular denominational organizations, each one, claim a Sunday. Then there come the celebrations of anniversaries of local organizations within the church itself. In addition to these we are desired to give a special sermon, suitable to "Prisoners' Sunday," "Hospital Sunday," "Young Men's Christian Association Sunday," "Young Women's Christian Association Sunday," "Sunday nearest to the Day of Prayer for Schools and Colleges," a Sunday to the discussion of organized charity, a temperance Sunday. In addition to all these we are besought by non-Christian organizations to preach a special sermon, by the Grand Army posts on Memorial Sunday, by the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution on the Sunday nearest to the Fourth of July, appropriate to the Declaration of Independence. The Patria Club asks us for a Sunday in connection with Washington's birthday. We are also asked to preach a sermon appropriate to the birthday of Lincoln. Christian Endeavor desires to have its anniversary observed, and there is a multitude of other things which are to-day laying siege to the utterances of the pulpit and almost demanding that they be heard. I have not mentioned "Bible Day," nor "Chapel Day," nor "Children's Day," nor a score of other special days for which the modern pulpit is besought.

All this means that we are constructing a mongrel church year. Many of these supplicants petition for some special Sunday in the year and seek to have a universal observance of its objects and presentation of its claims. No wonder that the gospel is largely crowded out. If, in addition to these, the minister himself be disposed to preach upon the current topics of the day, upon "the moral meanings of great happenings," it means that the presentation of Jesus Christ and him crucified must be exceptional if one yields to these varied importunities.

DEMOCRACY AGAINST ABSOLUTISM.

Christianity and Democracy.

THEO. A. JOHNSON.

It is not my purpose to attempt to show that Christ laid down in his gospel any definite system of government which we ought to adopt. My aim shall be to show that Christianity has a political significance (which is generally perverted or ignored), and that it has been one of the strongest forces arrayed on the side of freedom. Now, dear reader, keep your seat. Do not rise up and shout: "I don't believe in mixing politics with religion," or we shall agree with you and contend that the formula should run: "Mix sufficient religion with your politics to sanctify your ballot and insure a government founded on the teachings of Christ Jesus." We believe that it is Satan who prompts one to separate his religion and politics.

If Christianity expects to save the world and leave politics to chance and the devil, will not the world remain a long time unsaved? If the followers of Christ are not a "voice of righteousness" in every sphere of life, where can we hope to find such a voice? If Christianity does not permeate our political life, will there not befall us what befell that ancient nation when "where there is no open vision the people perish?" Is not the oft-repeated statement that Christ had nothing to do with politics based on the fact that many people are very anxious to keep him out of politics? Is not he who attempts to separate his religion and politics a betrayer of our Lord and his cause? Let us have your answer.

Space permits the mention of only a few things which discover the political significance of Christianity. It is inconceivable that something which had nothing to do with politics should lead its adherents to persecution and death by the authorities of the state, overthrow pagan governments as rapidly as it became predominant, and make history as we know it to-day. Yet, we affirm that these things occurred wherever our religion spread. The persecution of the early Christians and the crucifixion of Christ were due chiefly to political influences. The Romans looked upon them as especially dangerous to the state. They saw in Christianity a foe which, left to itself, would quickly undermine their government and set up in its stead a government in which all would be free. The historian Pliny believed that they who refused to sacrifice to the statues could not be loyal to the emperor, and should therefore be condemned to die as traitors. And the contest has ever been the same. On one side is the doctrine of natural rights and Christianity, tolerating caste of no kind and preaching freedom and equality; on the other we find absolutism, upholding aristocracy, "vested wrongs" and the "divine right," and persecuting those who are trying, either wisely or unwisely, to bring on earth the kingdom of God. Some of the worst enemies of good government, monopolists and bribers, like to be styled "defenders of the faith," and be held up as "model patriots." Christianity is primarily a religion of this world, and he who would wear a cocked hat, or he who monopolizes more of this world's goods than he can earn or use, is the real enemy of society.

When Christ came to Jerusalem and cleaned out the Capitol, he gave us a lesson in the politics of his ministry, which we have too long evaded and which we must learn if we would be true to him. The Capitol of the Jewish nation was the temple which Jesus purged. If the Christians of America were to clean out our national Capitol and drive (with their ballots) from its halls the "money changers," the lobbyists, the corporation attorneys, the representatives of the rum traffic, the tools of the trusts, the bribe-takers and the bribe-givers; and all those who betray the people, they shall have done exactly what Christ did when in the Jewish temple. Nay, more: the command to preach the gospel to all nations closed with the phrase, "beginning at Jerusalem." It is the first duty of Christians in all lands to do all they can to secure wise governments, for the state wields a greater influence for good or evil than any other institution on earth. Nothing can long withstand bad government. No civilization can long endure under laws and institutions which are the expression of injustice and oppression. And in our country the Christians have it in their power to save the good laws and abolish the bad ones, cleanse our politics and purify our institutions, and erect on the remains a society which to call Christian would do no violence to the word. The proper place to begin is at Jerusalem.

Christianity has ever been a strong antagonist to undue authority, though a perversion of it has often supported forms of absolutism. James and John were taught when they requested that "we may sit, one on thy right hand, and one on thy left hand, in thy glory," that the rulers of the Gentiles "exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so it shall not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister, and whosoever of you will be chiefest shall be the servant of all." This gave caste a stunning blow and left no foundation for aristocracy. It made servants of all rulers and only him great who gives his life to humanity. Such is the theory of democracy, but the practice of it by any government is unknown to-day. Perhaps the nearest approach is Switzerland, where direct legislation has been adopted. But as the ten were dissatisfied with the conduct of the two, so now the many are dissatisfied with the conduct of the few and are endeavoring to construct governments in which the rulers will be servants and not masters.

The gospel of Jesus has had a prodigious effect on the political systems of the world. It not only aided in destroying the chief claim of absolutism, but arrayed itself on the side of justice and freedom, and against every institution which contained evil. It emphasized the higher aims of life. It exalted the view of social relations. It heightened the dignity of labor, Christ himself being a toiler. It preached with great power the obligations of love and the claims of the poor. And it laid much stress on individual responsibility. As these precepts were learned by the people, slavery and kindred evils were forced to weaken and then vanish.

It is sometimes charged with reproach that the church recognized slavery as an institution. This is true, especially of the church in Rome. But it is equally true that the sentiments which Christianity created were favorable to the humane treatment of slaves, and contained the germs out of which their entire liberation finally arose. We must remember that slavery was a fundamental element of the Roman constitution. It was incorporated with the laws. It was essential to the military system of the empire; for a nation of soldiers or any other class of non-producers must have a slave class to support them. It was bound up with the existing order of things. Had the church openly denounced slavery, conflicts with the civil authorities would have been more frequent. The church did preach equality and required master and slave to meet on equal terms at communion services. It advocated the emancipation of individual slaves and the redemption of captives. It influenced legislation in favor of the oppressed of all classes. And thus it sowed seed the fruit of which was poison to servitude.

Again, there is in Christianity a spirit of love and brotherhood from which certain movements looking to political and industrial freedom, or pure democracy, have drawn inspiration. Prof. Mackenzie says in his Introduction to Social Philosophy that early communism and the craft guilds were pervaded with a religious spirit which gave them their strength. And socialists point with pride to Acts 2:41-47 and declare that as the Spirit of our Lord enters the hearts of mankind, Christianity will become an actuality and society take on a socialistic form. They hold that the ethics of socialism are almost identical with the ethics of Christianity. As the limits of this article forbid me tracing the influence these movements have had on history and legislation, the best service I can render is to point you to Brentano's "History and Development of Guilds," Toynbee's "Industrial Revolution," Benham's "History of the Paris Commune" and Ely's "Socialism and Social Reform."

Then, too, it is more than a coincidence that Protestantism, which encourages the study of the Bible and advocates intelligence and liberty, should shape the policy of the most democratic governments. It practically fixes the destinies of all the leading nations. England, Germany, the Netherlands and the United States are Protestant. These countries, with their colonial possessions, control the freest part of the world and almost half of the inhabitable land of the earth. Is it only a coincidence that the spirit of the Reformation and democracy should dwell together?

The desire for religious freedom almost wholly determined the early history of America, and gave to democracy a support without which monarchy would still be ruling this continent. The colonists left England when dissent was strongest. They were men whose minds revolted at the idea of absolutism in any form. They were not always tolerant, but they aimed at liberty and laid the foundation of a democracy which we should complete and enjoy. It is true that the Puritans were Calvinists of the stricter sort, but bear in mind that Calvin, despite his aristocratic tendency and exclusiveness, was one of the greatest political reformers the church has produced. He thought that government should proceed from the individual man, and taught the equality of baron and shoemaker, doctrines which lie at the base of democratic society, but are really incompatible with monarchy. Indeed, Calvin's attempt to remodel society so that it would resemble the society outlined in the Bible was a long stride towards democracy.

Christians have preached religious equality, and as a consequence the masses have demanded political equality. Christians preach that men have equal birthrights in heaven, and the so-called common people cannot understand why inequality should here be so pronounced. Christians preach equality at the table of our Lord, and it is not far to a common ballot and common schools. And so preaching Christianity aids to prepare the way to democracy.

WILLIAM HENRY GREEN.

H. L. WILLETT.

The death of Professor Green removes from American biblical scholarship one of its most notable figures, who for more than half a century has held an honored place. His whole career was identified with Princeton, both in residence and in attitude of mind, for like most men of the Princeton school he was a conservative. He graduated from college in 1840 and finished the Princeton Seminary course in 1842, becoming immediately thereafter instructor in Hebrew. From this time on, his place in the institution was established and he was finally made professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature. He was looked upon by the entire Presbyterian denomination as one of its most conspicuous lights in the biblical field, and perhaps during the best years of his life the most notable figure in the denomination after President McCosh. In 1891 he was moderator of the General Assembly, which is the highest office possible to a Presbyterian. He also held a distinguished position as chairman of the Old Testament committee of the General Committee, which brought out the Revised Version of the English Bible from 1881 to 1885.

His contributions to the literature of biblical study and Presbyterianism were voluminous. Perhaps he was best known in former years as the author of the most widely used Hebrew Grammar and Chrestomathy known in America. Nearly all students of Hebrew who remember back of the last fifteen years will have distinct recollections of working with Professor Green's text-books on the language of the Old Testament; but in more recent years these books were superseded by much more usable volumes pursuing the inductive method, and it is rather as a defender of the conservative views of Old Testament criticism that Professor Green is known to-day. Among the works which he contributed to this subject are "Moses and the Prophets," a reply to William Robertson Smith's "Old Testament in the Jewish Church," the "Prophets and Prophecy in Israel," by Dr. A. Kuenen, and the "Prophets of Israel," by W. Robertson Smith. A second volume on the "Hebrew Feasts" maintained the Mosaic authorship of the three codes of the Pentatuch as against the arguments of the more progressive critics whose work was just becoming known on this side of the Atlantic in those days. More recently he has written "The Unity of the Book of Genesis," the "Higher Criticism of the Pentatuch" and the "General Introduction to the Old Testament," in two parts. He spent his entire time in the laborious duties of the classroom and the study, and received distinguished honors from American and Scottish universities. So strong was his hold upon his own institution that he was offered its presidency, but declined in order that he might continue his work as a biblical teacher and writer.

Dr. Green has for many years stood as the leader of the conservative school in America. With his death it may be said that almost the last of his type of conservative scholars has disappeared. Edward Cone Bissell, of Chicago, whose scholarly work on the Pentatuch entitled him to a place in the front rank of biblical scholars, was a close associate with Professor Green in the work of conservative criticism, but there is hardly another name which can be associated with him on either side of the Atlantic; for almost the entire list of biblical scholars occupies ground more or less in harmony with the views from which Dr. Green maintained a lifelong dissent.

An interesting episode occurred in 1888, when Dr. Green and Dr. Harper began a presentation of the critical and conservative views respectively in the pages of "Hebraica," a journal devoted to the interest of Semitic study, published by Dr. Harper at New Haven, Conn., and afterwards merged into the American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures. In this discussion, which continued for several months, the arguments on opposite sides of the Pentateuch question were given at great length and occasioned widespread interest. It was a discussion, conducted in the most painstaking fashion, and yet without a trace of those personalities which seem incapable of exclusion from so much discussion of this kind. Those who wish to find an adequate review of the whole question presented in its different aspects can find no better summing up of the critical and conservative arguments than that found in the pages of "Hebraica." Dr. Green's style was clear and his manner earnest and candid. There was perfect fairness in his treatment of opposing arguments, and he left the impression upon the reader of a sincere desire to come at the exact facts involved in the discussion. That his view of biblical criticism is shared by so few among the scholars of America, and indeed by almost none except those who have come out from the Princeton atmosphere itself, is due, not to the weakness of the championship which Dr. Green gave it, but to defects inherent in the position assumed by the conservatives with reference to biblical criticism, and especially in the presuppositions upon which nearly all protests against criticism as a system have rested.

There is a striking parallel between the position of Dr. Green, the last representative of the older type of biblical critics, and Professor Shedd, also a Presbyterian, the last of the conservatives of the thoroughgoing kind in theology. Both of these men were clear thinkers and admirable reasoners. Dr. Shedd's work on "Systematic Theology" is one of the most logical and convincing works ever presented—if logic alone could be convincing—and a smaller work of his on "Calvinism" is the very apotheosis of the argumentative method, in which the most ultra-conservative statements regarding election, predestination, the wrath of God upon the wicked, the divine decrees and similar themes which find such emphasis in the extremer types of Calvinism, are set down with a frankness and unflinching candor that commands admiration,even where it compels indignant dissent. Dr. Green's place is a similar one. Unconvinced by the results of modern scholarship, which have revolutionized the science of biblical study within the past century and have vindicated for themselves a rightful place in the thought of the vast majority of those who teach the Bible in institutions of learning on both sides of the Atlantic, Dr. Green maintained to the very close of his life the same views of unity and inspiration of the various parts of Scripture with which he started, and was able to pass over arguments which seem to most Bible students incapable of refutation with a quiet and imperturbable composure, which was the proof of his absolute convictions in the case. He wrote much for such journals as the Presbyterian Review, but never descended to controversy in the weekly journals of his denomination, fully aware that questions of criticism cannot be decided in the small compass of the family newspapers, and that those who really wish to understand the merits of the case must go to the sources and the authorities where the question can be found discussed in fuller measure.

The views which Dr. Green held with reference to Scripture are destined to pass away. Indeed, they have passed away in most circles of biblical scholarship. There are still some teachers who are followers of Dr. Green, whose scholarship has commanded their admiration and approval; and it is a conspicuous fact that not an argument has been presented on the conservative side in the journalism of America which had not already made its appearance in one or the other of the various works written by him, save those alleged arguments so flippant and transparently captious as to have been entirely beneath the dignity of a man of Dr. Green's nature. His works are the arsenal which furnished the weapons of conservative biblical criticism, and no one need feel ashamed to go to so strong and wise a teacher for his materials.

But the passing of Dr. Green is one of those events which point out the steps of progress, and it may well be hoped that in the near future those matters which lent themselves to such strong and vigorous treatment by the leaders of the respective schools, and which in shallower waters became themes of bitter and partisan invective, will give place to such an apprehension of the actual results of biblical criticism—as it has already obtained a certain and assured hold both in Europe and America and is gradually and as surely winning its way to general acceptance among Bible students—that the conclusions reached by scholars of the present generation may serve as the firm foundation for a new biblical theology, which is indeed already making its appearance to-day; and thus the Bible may be restored to the true place which it is fitted to occupy in the knowledge and affections of all the people of God, from whose interest it has been too frequently removed by theories that made it incapable of intelligent apprehension.

WHAT MEASURES OUR GIVING?

GEORGE DARSIE.

Is it ability? I think not. Certainly not ability alone. Though God urges us to give as we may "prosper," "according as a man hath," "that there may be equality," we are far from doing so. The rich are not the largest givers. The poor are not the smallest givers. A church's financial ability alone is never the standard of its giving. I know scores of churches of very moderate means which greatly outgive scores of other churches of very large and abundant means. The apportionments of our missionary secretaries, though of course never binding, but only suggestive, are an exceedingly interesting study, from this point of view. They sometimes call on one church for four times as much as they do another, although it may not have any greater ability, nor even as great. They are accustomed, if I mistake not, to ask a church, not for what it is able to give, but for what it is likely to give. And that is perfectly proper and right. Any other course would insure failure. They hope that the church will gradually work up to the full measure of its ability, after while. But they are far from it now. Of course, financial ability cuts some figure in every one's giving, but the trouble is that while it ought to cut the largest figure in all our giving,it too often cuts the very smallest.

What, then, does measure our giving? Is it interest and obligation? They certainly do to a large extent,and ought. There is no generous giving without them. It is folly to expect men to let their money go where their interest and sense of obligation do not go. The first thing needful in order to genuine liberality is to kindle fires like these in the human heart. A gentleman said to me, the other day, that although his great business is to get people to give money to a benevolent cause which he represents, he never asks any one for money. He aims at giving information and presenting the needs of his cause with a view to the enlisting of sympathy and interest, well knowing that the sense of obligation thereby awakened will do the rest. And it is the true idea.

It is the people who never hear or know anything about missions, who never pray for missions or hear a prayer for missions, who never had their hearts touched or their consciences stirred on the subject, who never felt the obligation to evangelize America resting as a crushing burden on their souls—these are they who never open wide their purses to give to missions.

The internal work must always precede the external. The man who prays: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and does it sincerely, knowing the meaning of his own language, will always suit the action to the word by a generous offering. A missionary prayer that costs a man nothing is an abomination to God. He who refuses to give to that for which he prays is a hypocrite. The only churches on record that ever gave "to their power, yea, and beyond their power," were churches in which the internal work was so thoroughly done that the great apostle says of them:"They first gave their own selves to the Lord and [then] to us by the will of God." They were poor, but the grace of God made even "their deep poverty" to abound "unto the riches of their liberality." And so will it always be.

But there is still another thing that measures giving, and that is the giving habit; and that, perhaps, better than anything else. The habitual giver develops into the liberal giver. Habit grows on us and becomes constantly harder to resist. The more we give the more we want to give and the easier it is to give according to our ability. It is the untrained giver on whom you cannot count. It is the untrained church that makes the offering this year and omits it next. It has been my privilege to minister to the same church now for nearly a quarter of a century. I am free to say that nothing in all these years has been more gratifying to me than the growth of the giving habit among my people. My first suggestion of a missionary collection met this discouraging response: "We must be just before we can be generous;" that is to say, we must pay our expenses at home before we can send money away from home. But the collection was taken and others after it, with due regularity, missionary sermons abounding, missionary literature circulating, missionary sentiment growing, missionary zeal deepening, missionary spirit spreading, missionary giving increasing more and more in liberality and spontaneity, the missionary habit getting a stronger and stronger grip, till yearly aggregates doubled on us,and then trebled, and quadrupled, and quintupled, and we, at first astonished at such unexpected results, have now settled down in the belief that an earnest enlisting of the interest and sense of obligation, coupled with a diligent cultivation of the giving habit, will speedily demonstrate that a church's financial ability is always far greater than it has any conception of. I mention my own church because I know about it, and because I believe it is a fair type of all our churches. What it has done all can do.

These three things, then, measure our giving. The first at present measures it least. The other two at present measure it best. But I feel sure that they are only operating as the means by which we shall one day attain unto that just and equitable condition when ability shall be our chief standard of giving, when all shall give "as God has prospered" them, "according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

CAN PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY BE RESTORED?

F. M. CUMMINGS.

Primitive Christianity was a great affection. Great waves of love, joy and desire for holiness flowed into the hearts of men, entirely transforming their lives. God the Savior had come into men. There were historic facts connected with this passion. Men of thought could not do otherwise than form intellectual concepts of this religion which they felt to be the power of God. There were duties growing out of man's necessary relations to God, to his neighbor and to himself.

Hence primitive Christianity had associated with its characteristic divine passion facts which were believed, doctrines which were held and organic relations which were maintained. It is possible approximately to restore these facts, doctrines and organic relations, but that does not restore primitive Christianity. The life, the passion, the spirit of primitive Christianity is the essential element to be restored. It is possible that this element may exist without an accompaniment of the identical facts, doctrines and forms of the earliest Christianity. It may be important that they should be restored; it is a great mistake to regard them as the principal thing.

We need the divine life re-formed within us. Oh, that there might be aroused in the contented religionist of to-day a divine dissatisfaction with our spiritual deadness! If there were the hungering after God which stirred the souls of the early Christians, what meetings for prayer and exhortation there would be! Oh, that it might be said again: "Behold how these Christians love one another!" How vain the attempt to restore this spirit of the first church by bringing together the bones of its historic existence.

There is urgent need of a re-birth of religious life in modern society. It has more than once been necessary to renew the spiritual life in a decadent Christianity. That necessity is again present. The revival will begin with the few; many more than twelve disciples, no doubt, but few a compared with the multitude of religionists. Just what may be its intellectual concepts of Christianity we may not now know, nor does it matter. It will possess the divine life which will drive out indifference, overcome worldy absorption and restore that divine desire and passion of love which was the essential element in the religion of Jesus. In this highest and best sense primitive Christianity may be restored, and will be restored.

AN APPEAL FOR THE FILIPINOS.

The spirit of Bible liberty brought our forefathers to these shores and shaped our government and institutions. The millions now looking for the first time to the Stars and Stripes for protection can be civilized most thoroughly and most in harmony with our ideas by giving them the same Bible. Schools, churches, trade and self government follow its lead.

The American Bible Society has promptly undertaken the new duty of sending experienced agents to Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines. The work can naturally best be done through this great national society, whose object is the translation, manufacture and distribution of the Scriptures, and which in eighty-two years has placed in this and other lands over sixty-four million volumes in one hundred languages.

We have given our bullets to free Cuba and Porto Rico from Spanish tyranny. Let us now give them our Bibles that they may be free indeed. The Bible Society appeals for special gifts to meet this new, sacred and patriotic duty at our doors, as well as in the distant Philippines. The Bible is practically an unknown book in the Philippine Islands. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, sent to Manila in 1889, was promptly poisoned and the work stopped.

Dr. Hykes, the agent for China, visited the Philippines in 1899 and made a careful report:

"I feel safe in saying that priestly despotism and official rapacity are alone responsible for the present rebellion. The exactions and iniquities of the friars are the subjects of common conversation. The desecration of the Cavite churches was suggestive of a a changed attitude toward the church. I visited one of the churches and found that the insurgent soldiers had destroyed the altar and cut up the images of the saints. The feeling against them is so strong that the Filipinos don't want even their language. The cry on every hand, from natives and Chinese, is for books to learn English and some one to teach it. They have had more than three centuries of Catholic Christianity; commodious churches are to be found all over the islands, and these are well attended, but practically nothing has been done to educate and enlighten them. They have nothing but the outward form of religion, and know nothing of its inward and spiritual grace. Roman Catholicism has not purified their lives. Pious and devout Catholics would be scarcely ready to acknowledge them Catholics in more than name.

"It would be difficult indeed to find a more needy field, and the call that comes to the Protestant Churches of America is loud and urgent. The people are and have been without the Bible. They know there is such a book, and that is about all. A Christian man, long resident in Manila, said to me in all reverence: 'If the United States turns these islands back to Spain, they will become a veritable hell.' We have, in the providence of God, assumed a responsibility in regard to the Philippines which we cannot shirk. Admiral Dewey received me most cordially, and spoke very freely and enthusiastically about opening mission work. He said he was anxious for the churches and the Bible Society to come in and begin work at once. We could not come too soon. Gen. Otis, the military and civil governor, said there can be no doubt of the great need of our work. The society has just sent Rev. J. C. Goodrich as an agent to this interesting field."

This society has just completed an accurate translation of the Scriptures into the Spanish language, with English and Spanish in parallel columns, a work requiring wise, unsectarian supervision. For each denomination of Christians to make its own translation would mean great extravagance and increase of the scandal of divided Christendom. A large portion of Filipinos can read, and they wish two things: the Bible and English.

For three cents you can place a Spanish gospel, or what is better, for twenty-five cents a Testament, English and Spanish parallel, in their hands.

Of this society Hon. Enoch L. Faucher, LL. D., of New York, is president, and Hon. Frank M. Cockrell, vice-president for Missouri; ex-President Benj. Harrison, vice-president for Indiana; ex-Govenor Francis M. Drake, vice-president for Iowa; Justice David J. Brewer, vice-president for D. C.

WM. FOULKE,
Treasurer American Bible Society.

CASTE IN THE CHURCHES.

JOHN G. FEE.

In a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I see an article from a brother in Virginia on the subject of "Caste in the Church"—the spirit and practice that consigns the man with "horny hands and plain dress" to a separate and inferior place in the church. This, our brother says, is contrary to the spirit and letter of the gospel. He fortifies his position by a pertinent quotation from James 2:1-9, showing that this "respect of persons" because of dress or position in society is plainly forbidden by the spirit and letter of the gospel, and is a great hindrance to the multitudes who would otherwise come into the churches and hear the Word of Life.

He might have added that this spirit and practice of caste is not only contrary to the teaching of the gospel, but a great sin against humanity, and is the great crime of heathenism. Perhaps no one thing in heathendom is productive of so much misery and wretchedness as consigning widows, notably child-widows, by the millions, to lifelong degradation and wretchedness because of the mere incident of being a widow; in which there is no crime—a mere incident. But now, in faithfulness to humanity and to the gospel of Christ, let me in kindness ask, Is there not in the schools and churches of our land this same spirit and practice of caste seen, in heathendom? Is it not, in the sight of God, as great a crime to consign an unoffending, meritorious young man or woman to a separate or inferior place in the schoolroom or church house because of the mere incident of "color"—"a drop of African blood in their veins"—as to consign a meritorious man or woman to a different or inferior place in the churches because of the incident of "horny hands or plain dress?"

Again, let me ask, Is not this spirit and practice of caste small, even silly, as seen in the eye of an assembled world? Let us amplify the thought by supposing a Mongolian, with his "gold ring and gay clothing," saying: "I will not extend social kindness or civil courtesy to a man or woman, however meritorious, if he or she has a drop of Caucasian, Indian or Malay blood in his or her veins"—how small, how silly!

Again, how unfraternal in the light of God's Word, which says: "God has made of one blood all nations of men;" "Eve is the mother of us all."

Again, this spirit of caste is not only vain, silly, unfraternal, but is intensely cruel. For me to lacerate the body of an unoffending man or women would be cruel—wicked. But to act so as to lacerate the spirit, crush the aspirations of a noble young man or young woman seeking to fit himself or herself for some post of usefulness in civil society or in the church, the body of Christ, would be far more cruel and wicked; for what we do to one member of the body of Christ we do to him.

Once more, let me say, and what is true, the "Jim Crow" car finds much of its sanction in the proscription of the caste schools and churches. Yea, more, much of the lynching and many other forms of lawlessness in our land have their animus in the proscription of the schools and churches—the latter are generators of public sentiment. Our Lord came to save, and that, too, by the law of love,—that love that saves from the last remains of selfishness. To this end he gave his life, a continuous offering of love and social kindness. On one occasion he sat down and ate with publicans and sinners. The Pharisees found fault with him for so doing. Quoting from one of the prophets, he said. "Go learn what that meaneth: I will have mercy and not sacrifice." As seen in the context the mercy referred to is social kindness to a proscribed class. This is the lesson which all true disciples need to learn and practice. Such disciples will be true lights in the world—Christlike.

Our Budget.

—One task well done fits us for another.

—The Foreign Mission offering was excellent.

—Now prepare for Home Missions in May.

—Some predicted a falling backward from the high tide of jubilee enthusiasm.

—The March offering shows this is not the case. The May offering will confirm this verdict.

—The fact is, the mission tide is just beginning to come in, and it will continue to rise until all our churches are inundated by it.

—Missouri had a splendid Lectureship and Ministerial Association last week at Palmyra. See report elsewhere, by Assistant Editor Hopkins, who was there.

—Indianapolis Congress is in session this week, and a report of same will appear in our next. A good attendance and a profitable meeting are anticipated.

—We call attention to the important announcements and other matter this week relating to the May offering for Home Missions. By the way, read the editorial on "Comparative Religious Statistics," by way of intensifying your zeal for Home Missions. We are bound to become the most intensely missionary people in the world, or be the most unfaithful.

—We are sorry to learn of the sudden death of Prof. W. P. Hunt, of Columbia, Mo. He was for many years Professor of Mathematics in Christian College, and an elder in the Christian Church at Columbia for thirty years. He was highly respected and known, not only by the church, but by all citizens who knew him. Fuller account will be given next week.

—The Cedar Rapids Church, J. M. Rudy, pastor, has become a "Living Link" church, supporting a missionary in the foreign field. This costs $600 a year, and a number of our churches are becoming "Living Links." The Northeast Iowa Christian Convention is in session in Cedar Rapids this week, with B.B. Tyler as chief speaker, and will remain for awhile, conducting a special meeting.

—Thanks to Spirit Franz Petersilea, who is writing letters from the spirit-land, the world is favored with a message from the late Col. R. G. Ingersoll. The Colonel acknowledges his mistake in opposing Christianity upon earth and says, among other things: "I can't fight against the beautiful Christ, for I have already met and conversed with him, and true Christianity is divine and of divine origin." Now let the infidels and agnostics lay down their arms and cease making war against what is pronounced "divine" in this latest revelation!

—"Liberty or death!" says President Kruger. But a correspondent, writing from South Africa, says it has been tyranny and death to the native colored people of Africa for 200 years under Boer rule, and that the Boers are now only expiating their long-continued crimes against the weak and oppressed natives. People who want "liberty" for a select few, and are unwilling to grant even justice to the weak and helpless, are hardly the people to enlist the sympathy of the civilized world. We haven't gotten to the bottom of this Boer-Briton conflict yet. Let us take time to be just and discriminating in our sympathies. Above all, beware of the politicians on both sides just now, who love to twist the British Lion's tail for political purposes.

—We note that the Independent Republicans and Democrats of Cincinnati have joined hands to put the city government in the hands of honest and capable men. This is exactly what ought to be done in every city in this country. We are glad to see a ringing speech from our brother, S. M. Cooper, endorsing this movement for reform in municipal government by a coalition of the honest voters of both parties. It is the testimony of such distinguished foreigners as Mr. Bryce that "the government of cities is the only conspicuous failure of the United States." The cause of that failure is patent. While honest voters have been dividing on party lines the boodlers have gained and hold the balance of power. The remedy is equally plain. There must be a union of those who prefer an honest city government to partisan success.

—We are glad that our New York Letter has given our readers so full an account of the Ecumenical Conference, to be held in New York next month. This letter will help you to realize something of the greatness and importance of this undertaking.

—E. M. Drake, of Red Oak, Ohio, just sent $500 on the annuity plan to the Church Extension Board. There is now $220,000 in the fund, and the board is now $7,000 ahead of the same time last year. The two hundred and fifty thousand is looming up in the distance, and must be reached by Sept. 30, 1900.

—Free to Bible Students in College. To the young preachers in our colleges, who would like to prepare a special lecture or sermon on the apostle John I will send, free, a copy of my little book, "The Seer of Patmos," on application with stamp. Address J. S. Hughes, Station O, Chicago.

—The "Appeal for the Filipinos," by William Foulke, of the American Bible Society, in this issue, was sent to us through the kindness of Clayton Kieth, of Louisianna, Mo., secretary of the Pike County Bible Society.

—We are informed by special dispatch from Toledo, Ohio, that there were twelve additions on last Sunday in the Wilson and Huston meeting in that city. In all to date, 160, with interest still increasing.

—To be unwise, uncouth, hard and legalistic in the presence of a dying man seems almost unpardonable. Wm. Steers, of Kinderhook, Ill., cites some cases in point which have come under his observation, but which we do not like to print. One who has not understood Christ any better than to deny hope to one who in the last hour is willing to cast himself on Him, and has done so in the only way possible to him, ought not to go about a sick room,to give counsel to the dying. Bro. Steers says: "The highway leading to heaven is as broad-guaged as its Author, but we find narrow coaches bobbing on the ties between the rails, objecting to everything but themselves."

—Evangelist J. R. Pratt recently closed a very successful series of meetings in Mason City, Iowa, and drew to his meetings all classes of Christians. Mr. Pratt is a Congregationalist and has had a large and varied experience in evangelistic work. Bro. Martin, of Mason City, who attended many of these meetings, said he had never heard any one outside our own ranks who indicated as clear a knowledge of the proper division of the Word of God. He writes us concerning him as follows: "Bro Pratt is a great Bible teacher, far in advance of religious teachers generally in his knowledge of the proper division of the Word, and is most tender and faithful and effective in reproving worldliness among church members. I think the Disciples of Christ will do well to lend him aid and encouragement wherever he labors." Rev. Chas. H. Rogers, pastor of the Congregational Church at Mason City writes: "He is a man with a message, and honors the Word in a very wonderful degree and imparts his love for the Bible to all of his hearers. God is using him for His work, and I cheerfully commend him."

—Miss Virginia H. Hearne and Miss May Whaley, both Kentucky young women, are now with Bro. N. M. Harvuot, of Central Church, Cincinnati, O., preparing to become Pastoral Helpers. Bro. Harvuot writes that with present equipment he does not feel like taking any save those who are well educated and in large degree ready for the work. A few others might be received from the applications now on file. Pastors wanting helpers will correspond with Bro. Harvuot, 617 Richmond St., Cincinnati.

—P. S. Olson, Lake Benton, Minn., inquires for a good dentist "who is a faithful member of the Christian Church," whom he will help to a good location in a county seat.

—M. J. Nicoson, of Monroe City, Mo., paid this office his respects on last Monday. Bro. Nicoson is laboring to secure the pledge of three hundred churches in Missouri, less than one third of the entire number, to make an offering for Home Missions on the first Sunday in May.

—The secretaries of the home board report that more churches have pledged to take the home offering this year than ever before at the same period of the canvass. All signs point to the greatest offering for this work our churches ever made. Has your church pledged? Ask the minister, if not, write at once to Secretary Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, saying you will take the offering. He will send you supplies free of charge.

—The offering for Foreign Missions credited to Westboro, Kansas, in our issue March 16th should have been credited to Westboro, Mo. Honor to whom honor is due. The amount raised by the church in Westboro, Mo., was $25, of which $15 02 was contributed by the Ladies' Aid and $9.98 by the church and Sunday-school. In '98 this church gave $1 to Foreign Missions; in '99 $11; in '00 $25.

—Let the Illinois preachers and all other interested parties remember that the Ministerial Institute will meet in Mason City, April 10-12, and that a good program has been prepared for the occasion. All who expect to attend are asked to send their names to Miss Blanche Reason, Mason City, at once that your entertainment may be properly arranged.

—The church at Elkhart, Ill., wants a preacher for one-half time, if no more. They have a parsonage with seven rooms. Address Wm. J. Miller.

—In reply to three invitations given by Charles Reign Scoville last Sunday in Pittsburg, Pa., there were 31 additions. Total additions at the Central Church, 251; at East End to date, 70. Total in the three meetings in Pittsburg to date, 593.

—The National Congress of Mothers will meet this year in Des Moines, Ia., May 21-25. "Child-study in its Possibilities for Boys," "The Right Education for Women" and "The Training of Young Children" are among the living, vital problems, of the day, to be discussed by both men and women who have given earnest thought to these subjects.

—PICTURESQUE VIEWS.—We are indebted to H. C. Townsend, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. Louis, for a magnificent series of views along the line of the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain Railways in Missouri, Arkansas and Kansas. It is really a work of art and will make those who are so fortunate as to secure the book of pictures wonder that we have so much splendid scenery so accessible to us. The views show, not only beautiful scenery, but the productions of different parts of the states in which the scenes are located.

—Read the article from J. Fraise Richard this week on "The Battle of the Giants," and help us give this remarkable debate the constituency it deserves now in view of impending conditions.

—The Newcastle (Pa.) Daily News gives a flattering report of the inauguration of the work of Earle Wilfley as pastor of the church there. It says:

The Church of the Disciples in this city is very much alive, as shown by the splendid achievements of yesterday. Large congregations morning and evening; largest Sunday-school for many weeks; wide-awake meetings of Christian Endeavor and Juniors; largest offering for Foreign Missions in years, and an interesting meeting of the official board at which plans for an onward movement were adopted. These are some of the points developed yesterday indicating the live, progressive spirit that is in the congregation. The pastor, Earle Wilfley, is greatly pleased by the prospects of the work and has reason to believe that great things are in store for his church. There will be special services each night this week at 7:45.

Bro. Wilfley says: "Our 'acquaintance meeting' has been quite gratifying, as it gave me a chance to meet quickly the membership. We have had 14 additions in ten days."

—A preacher, widely known, not writing for publication, and whose name is therefore withheld, in a private letter to the editor says:

I wish to express my hearty approval of the editorial in Our Budget, in your issue of March 22, page 365, relative to Dr. Watson's suggestion that "ministers should be retired at sixty years of age on half pay." I say deliberately that what you write touching this matter has more sound sense in it than anything I have ever read on this subject. You truly say that "no well-preserved man now counts himself old at sixty years of age. He ought to be in his prime, so far as usefulness in the ministry is concerned." Right! I am past sixty and yet I am often taken for fifty, and even less; and I was never so vigorous, either mentally or physically, in my life. During the last year I have held more than twenty meetings, preached largely above four hundred sermons, traveled about five thousand miles, written considerable for our papers, conducted a large correspondence, and am to-day as fresh as though I had been taking a long vacation. Ought I to be retired? Not much! Let the mossback, whose life revolves in an orbit three-quarters of an inch in diameter, who reads nothing, who observes nothing, who learns nothing and who has forgotten what little he did know at the beginning—I say, let him retire; or rather, he is certain to be retired, but for myself and other frisky youths of my guild, like Tennyson's brook, we are "going on forever."

—A jury in Galesburg, Ill., censured the city for allowing liquor to be sold to drunkards. Whom would they have it sold to? Would they restrict their manufacture of human destruction strictly to new material?—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

That's the idea. A drunkard has usually spent all his money and new victims pay better. Besides, the supply would soon be exhausted unless "new material" was being brought into the drunkard-mills. A saloonkeeper whom we met on the train recently said to us, when we were urging him to give up the business, that he believed he could do more good by continuing in the business than in any other way, because he would never sell to persons who were intoxicated, or who had taken the Keeley Cure, or who were minors. But before he was through he admitted that it was a miserable business, and that it was wrecking his life. "But," he added, "the only way to stop the liquor traffic is to stop its manufacture." In this he was not far wrong.

Free For Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, will send free by mail to all who send him their address a package of Pansy Compound, which is two weeks' treatment, with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe and blood poison.

Personal Mention.

F. M. Morgans, of Ashley, Ill., preaches for the church at Youngs and at Mulkeytown, Ill.

O. H. King, of Colfax, Ia., will begin work at Le Grande, Ia., April 1, under the auspices of the state board.

H. H. Peters, of Rantoul, Ill., recently lectured at Gifford, Ludlow, Potomac and Fisher. His work in this field is along reform lines.

H. C. Littleton of Astoria, Ill., accepted a call to preach for the church in Harlan, Iowa, and goes at once to his new field.

E. W. Yocum has been unaminously called for his third year at an increased salary by the church in Ox Bow, Neb.

The church in Mt. Ayr, Iowa, L. C. Swan, pastor, raised $45 for Foreign Missions, $10 more than its apportionment.

Evangelist H. W. Cies and pastor of the church in Hamburg, Iowa, recently closed a successful meeting in that place.

A. R. Hunt reports the work in Savannah, Mo., in a prosperous state. The ladies of the church recently made $50 at a sociable.

P. J. Rice, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., succeeds Bro. Van Arsdall at South Bend. Bro. Rice has wrought well at Ft. Wayne, and South Bend has made no mistake.

J. D. Forsyth is now located with the church at Eureka, Kan. He was at Kellerton, Ia. The church at Eureka is now equipped with a new $5,000 house.

B. L. Ray, pastor of the church at Kentland, Ind., reports $50.70 raised for Foreign Missions by that church this month. Last year the offering was only $12.15.

Ralph C. Sargent, of Salem, O., reports $91 as the offering of the Salem Church for Foreign Missions this month. Bro. S. is to succeed Sumner T. Martin in Mason City, Ia.

D. D. Ferrell, of Medina, O., reports $85 raised by that church for Foreign Missions, being $10 above the apportionment. He reports this as the largest offering for Foreign Missions in the history of the church.

The report of the church at Alliance, O., for the fiscal year just closing, shows receipts in all departments of $3,580.00; $280.00 being for missions and benevolences. Additions for the year, 205. A. M. Chamberlain is the pastor.

A. R. Adams has resigned at Astoria to take the work at Lynnville, Ill. During his stay at Astoria there has been a number of additions to the church and money raised to build a parsonage. Lynnville is one or the oldest congregations in the state.

F. L. Davis, of Charles City, Iowa, preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the High School of that city to an audience of over one thousand people. The offering of the church in Charles City for Foreign Missions this month was $7.

The pastor at Nortonville, Kan., Daniel Stewart, has closed his work and accepted a call from the church at Holton. His resignation has caused widespread regret on the part of the church for whom he and his excellent wife have labored faithfully and unselfishly.

Dr. W. T. Moore, who met with an accident some months ago, which has confined him to his bed and room most of the time since, writes us that he has begun to walk a little on crutches, can bear his weight on his lame leg, and that he hopes to be able to be in the field soon, in the interest of the Bible College.

M. G. F. Bennett, of Clarion, Ia., was ordained to the ministry of the gospel March 12. I. N. McCash conducted the services and preached the sermon. J. F. Adair, of Missouri Valley, Ia., assisted. There have been 32 added to the church at Clarion during Bro. Bennett's first eight months with it. All departments prosperous.

Geo. B. Van Arsdall, who has occupied the pulpit of the church at South Bend for two years, has resigned to accept the pastorate of the Central Church in Peoria, Ill. A local paper brings us a report of his farewell sermon on "Glorying in the Cross," which indicates a clear grasp of a vertebrate gospel, strong in its vital principles with power to save.

"Shallow Brooks Are Often Noisy."

You have headache, backache, eruptions or kidney troubles, or "that tired feeling." These are the shallow brooks with their noise. Seek the source of the brook and it is deep and quiet. The source of illness is impure blood. America's Greatest Medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, is Nature's own means of cleansing the entire system. It has no superior, no equal, only imitators.

Debility—"My system was all run down. I had blackheads and that tired feeling. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and have gained ten pounds in weight and feel like a new man." William J. Knight, 821 Bluff Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The trustees of Add-Ran University, in session at Waco, elected Dr. J. W. Lowber, of the Central Christian Church, to the presidency of Add-Ran, notifying him yesterday by long-distance telephone. While Dr. Lowber appreciates the honor conferred upon him, he feels that his obligations to the church in Austin are such that he cannot accept the position.

The State Board of the Virginia Missionary Society has expressed its appreciation of F. M. Anderson, who was killed by a railway train, March the 14th, and of his work, and its sense of the deep loss sustained by the cause in which he labored, and of their deepest sympathy to the bereaved family in their great sorrow, in a most fitting and beautifully expressed set of resolutions.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, March 19, contains the brief outline of a sermon preached in that city on March 18, by M. E. Harlan, on "The Unitarian and Trinitarian views of the Christ," attributing their difficulties to definitions and systems of interpretation and pleading for faith in a living and glorified Christ. We are glad to see the great dailies of our cities reporting the sermons of our preachers. By so doing they are helping them to preach Christ.

Allan B. Philputt.

It is fitting that we furnish our readers this week an excellent likeness of our widely known brother, A. B. Philputt, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, with which our Congress is now in session. Bro. Philputt is a Tennessean by birth, but the date of his nativity is unknown at this office. It is believed, however, to have been within the present century! He graduated from the Indiana University in 1880 and taught for two years as instructor in the University. He attended the graduate department of Harvard University during 1888-1889, where he held a Morgan fellowship. He took special studies in Hebrew, Liturgics and New Testament Exegesis in the Episcopal Divinity School in Philadelphia, during his residence in that city.

Bro. Philputt has held three pastorates, one of seven years in Bloomington, Ind., during which a modern house of worship was erected and paid for, costing $15,000; one of ten years with the First Church, Philadelphia, during which the strength and numbers of the congregation were far more than doubled in every department of its work, the old property on Twelfth and Wallace Streets sold for $15,000 and a large, well-furnished stone church purchased for $40,000 on the corner of Mervine and Berks Streets. He is now in the second year of his third pastorate with the Central Christian Church at Indianapolis, during which time about 165 have united with the church and $7,500 have been paid on church debt, leaving less than $1,000. The church is in a flourishing condition and bids fair to outgrow its church building.

Bro. Philputt is one of the trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and during his residence in Philadelphia was for two years president of the Pennsylvania C. E. Union. He is married and has two children. In a letter to the editor he says: "My wife is the best part of me. It is probably due to her work and management that I have been able to accomplish anything worth while." Bro. P. unites the qualities of a good preacher and a good pastor, and this fact accounts for his long pastorates. He is yet a young man and has every prospect of a career of wide usefulness.

Time to Begin Preparation.

Many friends of Home Missions, remembering how great was the advance noted at our Jubilee Convention, feared there would be a great reaction this year.

Last year 2,095 churches gave $33,963.33 to the great cause of the evangelization of our own country. In response to our larger income our home board has very greatly increased its appropriations and we are told there are now 129 missionaries in the employ of the home board, including the negro work.

Our home missionaries reported 2,996 additions last year, an average of 77½ additions for each worker employed. The next highest number reported was 19 additions for each worker employed by the Lutheran Church.

Our home board organized through its missionaries last year 65 churches, over one new church each week.

We call all to read the story of the careful management of this work in these results, and the deeper lesson that America is the ripest field in the world for the plea of primitive Christianity. We should more liberally support our Home Mission work; we ought to do far better than ever before.

Preparation for the May offering should begin now and not cease until the greatest offering ever gathered is made by our churches the first Lord's day in May.

Marion Ingels.

Marion Ingels was born at Waverly, Indiana, September 17, 1844. Before he was fifteen years of age his father died, leaving him to be the chief support of his mother and four younger children. After a hard struggle with poverty he was at last enabled, with the help of relatives, to enter Abingdon College in 1864, where he graduated in 1869. The same year he was married to Miss Libbie Frazier. In 1867, while a student, he united with the Christian Church. He was ordained to the ministry in 1873. For the next five years he divided his time between preaching and teaching, but in 1878 he abandoned teaching, and has since devoted his entire time to the ministry. From 1884 until 1887 he was Sunday-school evangelist of Kansas. After a three years' pastorate at Oswego, Kansas, he again become Sunday-school evangelist until he resigned in 1893. For the next two years he was pastor at North Topeka, resigning there in 1895. Since that time he has been engaged in evangelistic work. Mr. Ingels is the author of "Christian Normal Lessons," "New Testament Baptisms," "Baptism in a Nutshell—Examined." Mr. Ingels is not an old man, by any means, but premature whiteness of hair and beard give him somewhat the appearance of a patriarch. His home is now Larned, Kansas. He is an active and valued friend of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, being responsible for the fact that the best religious weekly is blessing a great many Kansas homes.

"Our First Congress."

This handsome volume of Addresses delivered at our First Congress, held in St. Louis, in April last, has just come from the press of the Christian Pub. Co., and is now ready for delivery. The following table of contents will give our readers an idea of the value of the book:

Preface.

Introductory Address.

I. The Value of Theology. Edward Scribner Ames.

II. The Cry, "Back to Christ:" Its Scope and Significance in Modern Religious Thought.

III. The Cry, "Back to Christ:" A Review. J. B. Briney.

IV. The Cry, "Back to Christ:" A Supplementary Statement. W. J. Lhamon.

V. Crucial Points Concerning the Holy Spirit. R. T. Mathews.

VI. Crucial Points Concerning the Holy Spirit: A Review. W. E. Ellis.

VII. Crucial Points Concerning the Holy Spirit: A Supplementary Statement. F. N. Calvin.

VIII. Organization And its Adjustment to the Present Needs of the Church. Allan B. Philputt.

IX. Organization And its Adjustment to the Present Needs of the Church: A Review. W. F. Richardson.

X. Enrichment of Public Worship Among the Disciples of Christ. Ida Withers Harrison.

These make a volume of 246 pages which, printed in clear type on good paper and bound in red cloth, rough silk finish, is one of the handsomest as well as one of the most important books we have ever put forth. It will be sent for $1.00, postage prepaid. It is a book that will bear careful reading and study, and is one you will be glad to hand to your religious neighbor to read, both for the ability of its papers and the proof it furdishes of our liberty in Christ preserved with our unity in Him.

The Publishers have assumed the responsibility of sending forth this volume of scholarly addresses with a view of testing for the committee the extent of the demand for such books, to guide its future action. A wide demand for the book would indicate an interest in current theological and religious problems which would augur well for our future.

The B. A. C. C.

Again a word to readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about that Easter offering for the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church for the benefit of the homeless and helpless of our own land.

Since 1892 collections have been asked and taken for this association by many of our churches, the number increasing each year, until it has become an understood fact that Easter Sunday is the day for an offering for the benefit of orphans and homeless children of our country. We have asked this offering principally from the Sunday-schools, so that it might not even seem to interfere with the offering of the Foreign and Home Missionary Boards.

This year we are asking for an increase in your offering, brethren and sisters, because we have enlarged our work by opening two other Homes, one for little babies, as we find it not best to keep them in the Orphans' Home; and a Home for our poor, homeless, aged Disciples. Who will say such a Home is not needed? Who will say 100,000 Disciples cannot support one institution for the care of its aged poor but worthy brethren and sisters? Who will say they will not do it?

It is needed. It can be supported, and we have all faith in our brotherhood that it will be supported.

This Home for our people, just opened by the B. A. C. C., is in a small house; only five or six can be cared for at once, and we must deny admission to many who apply until a suitable building is provided.

This Home, like our Orphans' Home and Babies' Home, is national, because it must be, as there are old Disciples in many of the states needing a home, and we have no such place for them in any state (the Kentucky State Home not yet being prepared to take even the Kentucky widows). Until the states are provided there is a need for national homes for both children and old people. Brethren, you of large churches and grand enterprises, do not push this aside as a small matter. You know that the Lord requires us to do this work—to take care of the widow and the orphan—and you who have had orphaned children left on the care of the church, you know how thankful you have been that our church, has such an institution as a national Orphans' Home.

We have sent out Easter-egg envelopes to about 500 of our churches in the different states that have sent children to our Orphans' Home asking an offering on Easter Sunday for the B. A. C. C., and we are hoping for a large return, that we may get our Old People's Home in a larger, more comfortable building and extend the usefulness of our other two Homes. If you need more of these envelopes or exercises for an entertainment, for benefit of this association and its Homes, they will be sent you free if you apply to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, corresponding secretary, 5018 Cabanne Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Correspondence.

English Topics.

MRS. SPURGEON'S "LIFE" OF HER HUSBAND.

Here at my elbow lies the fourth and last volume of C. H. Spurgeon's autobiography, edited and compiled by his wife and his private secretary, Mr. Harrald. I wish that some American Christian millionaire would buy up the whole of the edition of these lovely four volumes of this Spurgeon Life and present a copy to thousands of American ministers. Every preacher and even every Christian ought to have an opportunity of reading this wonderful autobiography, now at length complete with the issue of Vol. IV. The pictures alone are a feast. In his autobiography, as Mrs. Spurgeon insists on calling the work, the greatest preacher England has ever seen appears in the striking aspect of his own personality at every period of his extraordinary, beautiful and unique career. The last volume is in some respects the most interesting, because it displays the man in maturity. It is by far the most pathetic, seeing that it gives a view of Spurgeon in his last years of increasing suffering, characterized by an actual increase of mental power and a deepening tenderness of spirit. It used to seem to Spurgeon himself, as I often heard him say, that Americans never really understood him. Hearers from across the Atlantic used to come in great numbers to hear him, but constantly they declared that they could not understand the secret of his immense popularity. They very seldom took the right measure of the man. For Spurgeon could not be adequately estimated or appreciated by any cursory criticism. He was of all the men I ever saw the most versatile. And here in this final biographical installment we get astonishing delineations of his many-sided genius, for Spurgeon was a real

POLYGON OF HUMANITY.

The volume opens with the year 1878, and it covers the years on to the end at Mentone, the Paradise on the Riviera, the Mediterranean shore where the great preacher died He had by that time become the greatest religious figure of the age in the whole world. No man of recent times could match him. The opposition to him, which had been exceedingly virulent, had died down; the great ones of the land have acknowledged his pre-eminence as a popular pulpiteer, he had become charmingly genial, his curious angularities and eccentricities had been rubbed off by experience, and he took up an attitude of the sweetest tolerance, which was not disturbed until the unhappy "Down Grade" controversy broke out. To comprehend the real splendor of his genius it was necessary often to hear him, to stay sometimes in his beautiful home, to see him in his social circle, to be a student in his college, to work with him and work for him in literary matters, and to know him as a friend. It was my singular fortune to possess opportunities of indulging in all these privileges for a number of years. Under God I owe my progress in religious convictions to three men, all of very different types of personality, but equally precious and dear to me. Those three were C. H. Spurgeon, M. D. Todd and W. T. Moore. Only the last of these three is yet with us in this world. The first shifted me from the Church of England. The second shook my sectarian habits of thought. The third consolidated my intellectual and spiritual convictions so that I inevitably graduated in the Apostolic College of the Old Jerusalem faith. What a series of privileges for one man to enjoy! The three men I have mentioned are fine instances of the charm and power which is said by all who knew him to have distinguished Coleridge. He was a most brilliant conversationalist. So was M. D. Todd. When in his company I did not want to talk, but only to listen. W. T. Moore exercises the same monopolizing fascination over company, and I continually yearn for his society. Charles Dickens used to throw the same spell of enchantment over his friends. Who that enjoyed hours in fellowship with C. H. Spurgeon can ever lose the fragrant flavor of the recollection of his magnificent colloquies? He possessed a prodigious memory and was an omniverous reader. A strange delusion filled some minds that Spurgeon was not scholarly or cultured. This misunderstanding arose from the fact that he never in his preaching displayed his extraordinary stores of information. He never seemed to forget anything. He would sit down to five or six large books and master them at one sitting. He sat with his left hand flat on the page at the left side of the book, and pushing his right hand up the page on the right side until the page projected a little, he turned it over with his finger and proceeded to the next page. He took in the contents at a glance, reading by sentences as others read by words, and his memory never failed him as to what he read.

SPURGEON ON EVOLUTION.

Here is his pronouncement on evolution, given in 1887: "I have read a good deal on the subject and have never yet seen a fact, or the tail of a fact, which indicated the rise of one species of animal to another. The theory has been laid down and the facts fished up to support it. I believe it to be a monstrous error in philosophy, which will be a theme for ridicule before another twenty years." Spurgeon's admirers were countless beyond his friends and followers in his own theological connection. Gladstone was at one time a frequent hearer, and some of the most beautiful out of the many letters from great men enshrined in this volume are from the greatest of our statesmen to the greatest of our preachers. But several of the most characteristic of these epistles are from Ruskin. Here is one:

Denmark-hill, Camberwell,
25th Nov., 1862.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I want a chat with you. Is it possible to get it—quietly—and how, and where, and when? I'll come to you—or you shall come here—or whatever you like. I am in England only for ten days, being too much disgusted with your goings on—yours as much as everybody else's—to be able to exist among you any longer. But I want to say "Good-bye" before going to my den in the Alps.

Ever with sincerest remembrance to Mrs. Spurgeon, Affectionately yours,

J. RUSKIN.

"I thought you had cast me off," wrote Spurgeon in reply; "but I perceive that you let me alone when all is right, and only look me up when you are getting disgusted with me." We get throughout the book strongly worded expressions of the famous preacher's opinions on many subjects outside his work, opinions often full of common sense, as often merely the outcome of his irremovable prejudices.

THE IDOL OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

"Bobs," as the English people affectionately nickname Lord Roberts, is at this hour the talk of the nation. He deserves the adulation showered on him. He won the Victoria Cross, years ago, by his extraordinary heroism in saving twice in one day precious lives at the risk of his own, during the campaign in Afghanistan. And he has shone equally, throughout his career, in valor and in modesty. He quitted his beautiful Irish home a few weeks ago, at a day's notice, to take up the supreme command in South Africa. And this arduous duty he assumed, at his country's call, at the moment when his heart was bleeding at the news of the death on the battlefield of his splendid son, young Lieutenant Roberts, who fell in one of the earliest engagements of this awful war. Death came to the young officer from the guns of the Boers, by the side of the Tugela River, in front of Ladysmith. Lord Roberts is an Irishman. And this fact leads me to remark that a very large proportion of our generals, officers and soldiers, now loyally and valiantly fighting for Queen and country, are natives of the Emerald Isle. Gen. White is from Erin, so is Clery. It is an ugly illusion in many minds that Ireland is not in sympathy with England against the Boers. Foremost in recent assaults on the Boer trenches in front of Ladysmith were the Inniskillings, a splendid Hibernian regiment of our army. Here is a significant fact for the foes of England to ponder. All the black tribes of Africa which have any cognizance of present affairs are eager to take up arms for Britain against the Boers. We have subdued the fierce Hill Tribes of India. What is their supreme ambition? The same which is cherished by Zulus and Basutos. They clamor only to be led against Kruger's legions. How is this, that much-abused Albion commands the allegiance of her own sons who are willing to face death for her on any field on earth, but she finds a hundred other races equally ready to march in their aggregate might under the Union Jack? How is it that those who have fought against us now without a single exception want to join in the fray on our side? Simply because they have come to comprehend that England, with all her faults, real and alleged, is the champion of liberty and the enemy of all who oppress the fallen and weak. W. DURBAN.

A Few Days Brew Of Deadly Uric Acid

In a few days you may brew enough uric acid in your body to produce death.

Your kidneys are your only salvation.

Because when they are well, they filter out this deadly poison.

So, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

Uric acid poison irritates the nerves, and causes rheumatic pains in joints, muscles and limbs, catarrh of the bladder, headache, stomach and liver trouble, shortness of breath, heart trouble, dizziness, nervousness, irritability, lassitude, loss of ambition, weakness and wasting away.

Red brick dust and similar sediments in the urine are also caused by various salts or uric acid.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, the great kidney remedy.

It instantly relieves the congested, overworked kidneys, and gradually brings them back to health.

Healthy kidneys keep down the excess of uric acid, and you soon feel the benefit in new health and strength.

Swamp-Root should at once be taken upon the least sign of ill-health. It will make you well and is for sale the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices, fifty-cent and one-dollar.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles.

To prove its wonderful efficacy, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., mentioning this paper, when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book, by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured.

If Your Brain is Tired Use Horseford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. T. D. CROTHERS, Supt Walnut Lodge Asylum, Hartford, Conn., says: "It is a remedy of great value in building up functional energy and brain force."

New York Letter.

In compliance with several requests from brethren in different parts of the country I will say a few words concerning the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in this city on April 21st, to May 1st. This will be the third ecumenical missionary conference, and will be attended by noted missionary workers from all lands. The objects are to consider missionary topics, arouse public interest and diffuse missionary information. The forces have been thoroughly organized into committees of arrangement, and for months these have been hard at work to get everything in readiness. The railroad committee announces that a fare and a third for the round trip has been secured on the certificate plan. Delegates will pay full fare coming and bring with them a certificate to that effect from agent selling the ticket and this will secure a return ticket at one-third the tariff rate. The entertainment committee is arranging for the accommodation of guests at reasonable expense in private boarding houses and hotels. Those wishing information on this matter should write the Rev. Arthur J. Brown, chairman hospitality committee, 156 Fifth Ave., New York, stating who you are and the kind of accommodations you would like.

The conference expects all delegates except foreign delegates and missionaries to pay their own expenses. The introductory session will open in Carnegie Hall at 2:30 Saturday afternoon, April 21st, when ex-President Benjamin Harrison will preside and the Rev. Judson Smith, D. D., will deliver the address of welcome. The Rev. R. Wardlow Thompson will respond for the British delegation, Drs. Merensky and Schreiber will speak for the German delegation; the Rev. Joseph King will represent the Australians and the Rev. Jacob Chamberlain will speak on behalf of the missionaries. In the evening addresses will be made by the President of the United States and representatives of the state and city of New York. The first Lord's day will be occupied by addresses from delegates in the churches, and the second (April 29th) will be used in the same way with great Sunday-school rallies in the afternoon.

The general schedule provides for a number of sessions in various parts of the city in the morning and afternoon of each day and for a great rally of the forces at Carnegie Hall each evening. The many places of meeting throughout the city have not been selected as yet, but all the themes have been announced and also the names of the speakers.

The main outline features of the conference will include the missionary topics: Authority and Purpose; Survey of Fields; A Century of Missions; Administrative Problems; The Missionary Staff; Wider Relation of Missions; Missions and Governments; Comity and Division of Fields; Self-support by Mission Churches; Missionary Boards and Societies; Non-Christian Religions; Social Progress and Peace; Outlook and Demands; Evangelistic Work; Native Agency in Evangelistic Work; The Native Church and Moral Questions; Evangelistic Philanthropic Work; Educational Work; Normal Training; Higher Education; Elementery Schools; Educational Philanthropic Work; Industrial Training; Medical Work; Medical Training of Natives; Literary Work; Vernacular Literature; Mission Presses; Bible Translation and Distribution; Bible Societies; Home Work for Foreign Missions; Support of Missionaries by Home Churches; Missionary Literature for Home Churches; Students and Other Young People. These topics are subdivided, in each instance, into two or three distinct phases, and will be discussed severally by men of experience and ability.

The women will have a conference of about three days, taking up a number of questions peculiar to their work on the mission fields and at home.

Many of the strongest and most noted missionary men now living will be in attendance, and it will be a rare treat indeed to see them and hear the thrilling stories of how the Lord has used them in the salvation of the heathen. All our preachers who can afford to attend this conference should do so, for it will give an inspiration to their service and a joy to their hearts that will do much good.

If you cannot be present, the next best thing will be to secure the official report of all the addresses and proceedings, which will be bound in cloth and cost about $2 per copy if ordered at once, of Dr. E M. Bliss, chairman press committee, 156 Fifth Ave., New York. The report will be published as soon as possible after the adjournment of the conference.

According to the rules our mission boards are allowed 36 delegates, and we hope all receiving appointment will attend and that we may have at least one rally of our forces while all are in the city.

We have searched the official program in vain to find the name of a single Disciple of Christ on it. I wonder why this is. It does seem that a million Disciples in this country do not count for much in the eyes of the missionary powers that be. But that fact will not keep our missions from prospering, we hope, nor our people from getting all the good out of the conference that is possible.

Colorado Letter.

While the people of the Middle West and along the Atlantic Coast are deluged with water and overwhelmed with snow and almost blown away by the violent winds, the citizens of Colorado Springs are basking in sunshine and enjoying a temperature which reminds us of a pleasant May day in Missouri, Illinois, Iowa or Indiana. The arrival of the Eastern papers, full of accounts of unpleasant weather, materially increases our enjoyment of the good things which, this spring and last winter, have fallen to our lot. We have been able to thank God daily that we are not as other folks!

The congregation of Disciples of Christ at Colorado Springs of its own accord began to conduct special meetings Lord's day, March 4th. The movement formally began in the official board by a resolution offered by one of the deacons. The resolution proposed that we have a series of meetings extending through two weeks. After a full discussion of the situation and of the needs of the congregation, it was decided by a unanimous vote of the elders and deacons that a meeting should be held. The Society of Christian Endeavor, hearing of the action of the board, took up the suggestion and resolved to heartily co-operate. A report of the action of the official board and of the Society of Christian Endeavor was made to the congregation when assembled for worship on the morning of the Lord's day. The church, having heard the report, determined by a unanimous vote to have a protracted meeting. Two prayer-meetings were devoted to conferences concerning these special services. The young people determined to hold a prayer-meeting in one of the small rooms of the church each evening just before the public meeting in the auditorium. They also took it upon themselves to distribute cards containing announcements of the topics for Bible studies and sermons. Two meetings were to be held each day—in the afternoon at 3 o'clock and in the evening at 7:45. The program here outlined was faithfully followed. The attendance, both day and night, was larger than was expected by those who know most about such campaigns. It was Very many young women write to Dr. Pierce and consult him by letter free. All such correspondence is strictly private, and womanly modesty is spared the shock of indelicate examinations, unpleasant questionings and offensive local treatments.

"I suffered with female trouble," writes Miss Agnes McGowne, of 1221 Bank St., Washington, D. C. "I tried various remedies but none seemed to do any permanent good. The doctors said it was the worse case of internal trouble they ever had. I decided to write to Doctor Pierce for help. I received a very encouraging reply and commenced treatment at once. I had not used the "Favorite Prescription" a week before I began to feel better, and, as I continued, my health gradually improved. It is improving every day and I still continue to take the medicine.

understood from the first by all who were interested that these meetings were not, primarily, for the purpose of increasing the numerical strength of the church. It was realized that what is especially needed in the Colorado Springs Christian Church is an increase of knowledge and of an intelligent spiritual life. The purpose, therefore, was growth in a knowledge of divine things, with a fuller and a more intelligent consecration to the daily service of the Master. Because of this, as the purpose of the meetings, it ought not to occasion surprise to receive information concerning the large attendance at the meetings which were held in the daytime for the study of the Word. One week was spent in a study of the Holy Spirit, his personality and work. One week was spent in a study of prayer. There was much praying during the meetings. While the chief purpose was not conversions, nevertheless quite a number turned to the Lord. Some who had not been in formal fellowship with the church asked that their names might be enrolled as active members of the congregation. Some who had been in formal fellowship with the church became real members of the body of Christ and are now at work. In many ways the church was helped by this quiet little meeting. It is unusual to find a church in which so large a number participate in the public prayers as in the Colorado Springs congregation of Disciples of Christ. This is a good church.

F. N. Calvin has been called to the pastorate and will begin his work the first Lord's day in April. He will come to a church free from discord and debt. It will be his privilege to lead through green pastures and beside still waters some of the best men and women in America. A more ready people to do right cannot be found. They are willing to learn out of the Good Book and will stand by a true man loyally. The church and preacher, in this case, are alike to be congratulated.

The First Christian Church in Colorado Springs was temporarily organized in 1878. Four years later a permanent organization was effected. Such men as J. P. Ralston, M. D. Bush, David Husband, John C. Hay, A. B. Griffith, L. R. Norton, M. S. Johnson, G. W. Terrill, J. P. Lucas, Walter S. Priest, J. B. Johnson and B. B. Burton have at different times served the congregation in the ministry of the Word. For a number of years the congregation met for worship in a small wooden building on Huerfano Street. During the pastorate of J. P. Lucas a building of Pueblo pressed brick, with white stone foundations and red sandstone trimmings, was erected on Nevada Avenue, on the east side of the North Park. The building is an ornament to the beautiful city in which it stands. Six hundred people can easily be seated within its walls. A considerably larger number has been crowded in on special occasions. It is the best arranged church building for Sunday-school work of which I have any knowledge. All the classes meet in separate rooms. Under the superintendence of J. M. Hawkins there is an efficient Sunday-school with an average attendance of about two hundred. The Old Book is studied in this church and school. The membership of the church is from three hundred and fifty to four hundred. In the building of the present house of worship which, with the ground, cost, according to a statement made by Bro. J. P. Lucas to the writer, a little more than $30,000, a debt of $11,000 was contracted. This was reduced to $2,000 during the pastorate of B. B. Burton; afterward the indebtedness was increased to $3,000. Money is now in the treasury to pay the debt, but as the note and mortgage will not become due until May, 1901, the holder declines to receive the money and surrender the papers.

The Christian Church in Colorado Springs stands well in the community. Its influence is good. It is recognized as one of the strongest churches in the city. Some of the most successful business men with their families are active members. The elders are John Robertson, F. M. Young and W. H. Sutherland—all good men and true. At the time of the removal of Horace Morse to California he was elder in this congregation. His removal was a serious loss to the church. The deacons are S. S. Bernard, J. A. Sill, W. P. Wagy, J. M. Hawkins, A. D. F. Armstrong, Horace J. Matthews, J. C. Ellis, E. Lowther, H. C. Morse, Geo W. Lloyd, C. M. Smith and Dr. D. I. Christopher. No better official board can be found in any church.

The Ladies' Missionary Society Auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions has ninety-three members. It has just taken and paid for in full a life membership in the Christian Woman's Board at Indianapolis. It is one of the best—if not the very best—organizations of its kind in Colorado. The Ladies' Aid Society is the charity organization of the church and is most efficient.

The Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Association.

The last meeting of these two Missouri institutions that will ever be held, jointly or otherwise, was held in Palmyra, March 19-22. Of the twain one new organization has been made, and the name of that new organization is "The Missouri Christian Institute." The term "institute," it was claimed, was a broader term and better represented the nature and object of the work usually accomplished or desired than the term "lectureship" or "ministerial association," and hence the new name. But the Missouri Christian Institute is not a new thing in name only, but in its constitution and in its bylaws. The reasons for this change seem to have been of the economical kind chiefly. Fewer officers, fewer shiftings, less correspondence and a lower initiation fee—fifty cents—were some of the reasons for the changes. In the main, however, the same spirit, the same persons and the same general methods will prevail in the Missouri Christian Institute that prevailed in the two institutions for which and in whose stead it now stands. The spirit of concentration seems to be in the atmosphere.

But now as to the sessions of the Lectureship and Ministerial Association, just held in Palmyra, much is to be said. There was not a dry session throughout the program. The addresses and lectures were able and vigorous, the discussions animated and animating, the spirit as sweet as ever prevailed in a revival meeting, and, as a whole, probably as profitable as that of any former assembly of either of these two characteristic Missouri institutions. There was nothing dry are draggy in a single session, and the mental stimulus was all that could be desired. There was a happy combination of the devotional, social and truth-searching spirit throughout the sessions, with the usual healthful seasoning of wit, sharp retorts, and the humorous element.

Of the personnel of this joint Lectureship and Ministerial Association assembly it may be said that it was sufficiently attended by the elderly, the middle-aged and the younger preachers to make it representative in this respect. While there were many of our older men who were not present and whose absence was frequently remarked and felt, there were enough present to give gravity to the assembly and wise counsel to the young. Of the middle-aged ministers of the Word there were many, but the majority was on the side of the young men. Not all but many parts of the state were represented, and the local attendance was good, during the afternoons, better, and at nights, excellent.

The entertainment given by the church in Palmyra was hearty and royal. They, together with their pastor, Bro. Marshall, seemed ever on the alert to discover an opportunity to add to the comfort of their guests and to the interest of the sessions. The choir, the organist, the soloists and others contributed richly to the interest and the profit of the sessions. The Palmyra press was kind and liberal in its notices of the lectures and addresses, and all things seemed to work together for good to all and for the success of the assembly.

Christian University dismissed its Bible department for the week and sent its ministerial students to Palmyra to profit by the lectures, participate in the discussions, and to assist by representation in the program. The presence of these young men, with their open ears and sharpened pencils, seemed to put the speakers on their metal and to intensify the interest of the sessions. When an audience vies with each other in hearing and the speakers in speaking, there is no danger of dullness in the assembly.

All could not remain to the close, but there were fewer departures before the close of the assembly than usual, and so each session to the end was well attended.

Of the lectures and addresses shall we speak in particular in another article. They were indifferent departments of thought, but whether dealing with things abstract or concrete, theoretical or practical, they were thoughtful, vigorous and helpful. And as to the discussions I need hardly speak. Our preachers always feel at home in this sphere, and equal to the emergency.

The sessions were ably presided over by E. B. Redd, president of the Missouri Christian Lectureship, and Davis Errett, president of the Ministerial Association, according to their representative sessions on the program, save the last night, in which Bro. Redd presided in the absence of Bro. Errett, who could not remain to the close.

Of the new organization S. D. Dutcher was made the president, and its first session will be held in Fayette, next March, and the new program committee are already thinking about the program, which, they say, must be the best yet produced before any Lectureship or Ministerial Association yet held in Missouri.

I will tell you of the lectures next week.

Bolton's Notes By the Way.

We are now in the Keystone State, the state in which better half and I were born. For various reasons we deemed best to move further West, and as a result of correspondence with our late and lamented brother, C. S. Long, corresponding secretary of the Eastern Pennsylvania district for the Church of Christ, and our son, John William, we accepted the pastorate of the Church of Christ at LeRoy, Pa.

Having edited and published the New England Messenger for more than four years at Everett, and later at Chalsea, Mass., we succeeded in transferring the Messenger and its interests into the capable and trustworthy hands of Bro. James H. Mohorter, of Boston, Mass., who we feel conscious will make a success of the paper, especially as he has the faithfully expressed promise of the cooperation of the leading brethren in New England. The paper should be enlarged and published more frequent. This can be done if the brotherhood will rally to the help of Bro. Mohorter. The New England Board assembled and adopted a commendatory resolution in reference to our work as editor and publisher of the Messenger, which we highly appreciate. After our departure, Editor Mohorter, in his first issue of the New England Messenger, has the following to say regarding our work:

"After nearly five years in our midst Bro. R. H. Bolton leaves New England to find his field of labor and to make his home in Pennsylvania. For four years he was pastor of the church in Everett, where he rendered valiant service. He was untiring in his efforts to advance the cause of primitive Christianity. During this time he founded, edited and published the New England Messenger at the cost of great labor, freely given as a contribution to the cause of Christ. He is now pastor of the Church of Christ at Le Roy, Pa. His experience, his knowledge of the Word of God and his devotion to its ministry augurs good for the church which he serves."

With much regret we severed from the many good and kind brethren of the East. They are engaged in a great work. Much remains to be done. More faithful workers are needed there; but many workers come and go. During our stay East we can count about twenty resignations tendered by ministers of churches. These brief pastorates, as a rule, are not best.

Again, too many of the churches have, in our judgment, overburdened themselves with debts in erecting church houses and procuring lots. These heavy and burdensome debts weigh against rapid and aggressive church work. A debt-burdened church, especially a weak church numerically and financially, handicaps its successful work. Churches ought to erect houses, keeping within the limit of their means and needs.

Bidding adieu to church, people and city, we came via New York City to Scranton, Pa., on to Hunlock's Creek; here we were met by our son, John W., and were conveyed out into the country eight miles to Sweet Valley, Luzerne County, Pa., place of our son's home. We found son and family in health and good spirits and learned during our sojourn of one week that between church and pastor there prevails harmony and good will, and his labors have been attended with a fair degree of success.

An interesting meeting was in progress when we reached there. Son pressed his father into the work of preaching while there, which we enjoyed.

Audiences were good-sized and attentive. A number of souls turned to the Lord and we witnessed our son baptize ten believers in Christ, and about as many took membership with the church. There were still more to be baptized and added to the church. Son preaches at Huntsville also, where there is a good working church. A number of its members were at the Sweet Valley meetings. Recently, under our son's labors at Sweet Valley, a minister of the Christians (New-lights) took membership with the Church of Christ. His wife, a teacher in Israel also, proposes to follow the steps of her husband ere long. They are prepared to do good service, and we trust will find a church to minister unto in the near future.

On Friday, February 16th, by rail came to Canton, Pa., and from thence were conveyed eight miles down the beautiful Towanda Valley to Le Roy, Bradford County, Pa. We halted with the church clerk, Bro. Leroy Holcomb, where we received a hearty welcome and were royally entertained a few days. On Lord's day, Feb. 18th, we preached to large and appreciative audiences, which we enjoyed greatly. At close of the sermon we cast our lot with those brethren by submitting our church letters and received the hand of church fellowship. The writer was appointed teacher of the young men's class in the Bible-school. We have an interesting class. We have also begun to conduct "Bible Readings" for the benefit of the young people. The Christian Endeavorers are doing good work, as well as the Ladies' Aid Society. The church enrollment is 237 but many are non-residents, having moved away.

The church gave us a public reception, which was of a most enjoyable character. We now feel assured that we are among good and kind-hearted brothers and sisters. We already feel endeared to them, and trust, with God's blessing attending us, we can be made a blessing to church and people, and they to us.

Am publishing a four-page monthly paper to be called the Le Roy Messenger, specially in the interest of this local congregation. We feel sure it will be a helpful medium to accomplish good.

The sudden and unexpected departure of Bro. Charles S. Long, of Dunmore, Pa., is most saddening. He was for years closely identified with the work in Eastern Pennsylvania, and was one of its most useful members.

But am reminded that I have spun out this letter to sufficient length. Hence, I'll drop the pen with the promise of more in the future.

R. H. BOLTON.

Memphis (Tenn.) Letter.

EDITOR OF CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—For several years I've been an appreciative and constant reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and feel that it has been of untold benefit to me in expanding my knowledge of our plea, our people and our work in Christianizing the world, in enlarging my thoughts and in enriching my life. I find it also a help in my Bible reading, while it inspires me to closer study of the Bible and to greater effort to live up to the teachings of the Master. I am sure if our brotherhood would read our church papers regularly and habitually, the pulpit would find more appreciation, sympathy and co-operation among the membership, and the pastor's labors would be less arduous and more effective.

I read many letters each week in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from churches all over this land of ours but have never seen anything from the First Christian Church of Memphis—the Linden St. Christian Church—to me the dearest and best church in the world. Inasmuch as this is one of the oldest Christian Churches in the South, being now fifty-three years old, and as this old "Mother Church" has many sons and daughters who have gone out into this broad land, being scattered from Canada to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to the islands of the sea and across the waters, who will read with much interest any message from their old church home, I beg you will give me space in your paper to send greetings from the Linden St. Church to her children wherever they may be.

Being assured that a brief history of this church will be of interest to all those who know and love our plea, because of the good it has done and of the possibilities which the future promises, I will give in outline a short sketch, beginning with its organization at Hightower Hall in 1847, by Mr. and Mrs. Egbert Woolridge, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Caldwell, Mary McIntosh, Ann McGuire, and it may be others whose names have not been preserved. These charter members have all "crossed over the river," but some of them have descendants among us, who are active, earnest members of the old church, notable among them Mrs. T. J. Latham, wife of one of our elders, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Egbert Woolridge.

The Southeast corner of Linden and Mulberry Streets was purchased, on which stood a small frame dwelling, which was fitted up for a church. This building was used until 1859, when the present brick building was erected, but which was not finished for some years. It is a commodious two-story structure with Sunday school, class rooms and pastor's study below, and auditorium above, costing about $35,000.

The pastors of this church have been as follows: From its organization to 1853, Elder B. F. Hall, who in that year was succeeded by Elder R. E. Chew. In 1855 Elder W. J. Barbee became pastor and remained until the beginning of the Civil War. In 1864 R. A. Cork occupied the pulpit, succeeded by T. W. Caskey in 1865, Curtis J. Smith in 1868, David Walk in 1869, J. M. Trible in 1879, G. W. Sweeney in 1882, J. B. Briney in Jan. 1886, J. W. Ingram in Sept. 1888, Jno. A. Brooks Nov. 1892, W. E. Ellis in 1895 and Wm. D. Rice, our present pastor, in March. 1898.

The Linden St. Church has given to Memphis two live, flourishing mission churches, with a combined membership of more than 400. The "Mother Church" gave to these two missions some of her best sons and daughters, and encouraged and fostered them until they became self-sustaining.

The "Memphis Christian Missionary Union," organized last year in the Linden St. Church for the purpose of evangelizing the city, with the direct purpose of planting two mission churches this year in the city suburbs, Bro. R. P. Meeks being engaged to begin his labors as city evangelist in April. In the meantime, the Missionary Union holds meetings each Lord's day at Raleigh and Binghamton, suburbs of the city.

The Linden St. Church has always been a missionary church, but the missionary spirit has developed more the past ten years than during any period of her history. Our people are reading our church papers, especially the EVANGELIST and Standard, the secretaries of the several departments of our National Missionary Board visit us, and our pastor is thoroughly imbued with missionary zeal, and all these agencies are mighty influences which are acting upon us to quicken us into missionary activity.

The Linden St. Church has a resident membership of five hundred and forty and non-residents of thirty-nine making a total of 579. The total receipt of moneys paid into the church for 1899 was $4,691.47; of this amount $940.55 was given to our various missionary enterprises. We are now planning and making ready to do more for missions this year than ever before.

Under the ministrations of Bro. Rice we have made a net gain of 31 members, with no revival meetings. Bro. Rice has labored under heavy disadvantages, owing to ill health, induced by change of climate. During the two years he has been with us he was forced to leave the city on account of ill health both summers, being absent about six months at different times, including three months the past summer. He is now becoming acclimated and is rapidly regaining his former health and strength, and we are reaping the benefit in the shape of pure gospel preaching, delivered in that forceful yet sympathetic spirit as best calculated to reach the heart. Bro. Rice has, by his fine, strong preaching, pure life and sympathetic manner, won the love and confidence of not only his own people, but of all who come under his personal influence. He is endeavoring by precept and example to lead his people to the highest spiritual life and activity.

Every department of this church is earnest and active. Our Sunday-school is flourishing and wide awake, numbering over 200, with E. A. Long, superintendent. He is the right man for the place. Our Christian Endeavor Society is the largest in the city and among its members are to be found our most devoted, earnest young people. Miss Donna Smith, a daughter of one of our official board, has a fine, interesting Junior Society, which she is training for active Christians in the future. I feel that I must tell you now of this bright, accomplished, consecrated young Christian girl. She teaches in the Sunday-school, is one of the most earnest, active workers in the Y. P. S. C. E., and is always to be depended upon in the choir. Her helping hand is everywhere. By the way, our choir is faithful, giving their time and service for the love of the Master and his church.

The C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, with Mrs. W. H. Bates as president, is growing in numbers and interest, and here are found some of the most earnest Christian women of our city. Mrs. Bates makes an exceptionally good president. She attends our national conventions, meets and mingles with our national workers and brings back to her work the love and zeal that such contact can but inspire, and her influence is being felt in the Memphis auxiliary.

The Ladies' Aid Society, the last-mentioned of our departments of church work, is by no means the least important. Its importance ranks with its age, and it is next in age to the Sunday-school. Sister Rice, our pastor's wife, was made president about eighteen months ago, and under her gentle but skillful management the society has trebled its membership, and at the close of 1899 we had raised our bank account from nothing to nearly $200, to say nothing of money expended for various purposes. Sister Rice is truly a helpmeet to her husband and an inspiration of the sisterhood to better and fuller service.

I feel that I cannot close this letter without telling you of the elders and official board. Thos. Gale, Judge J. R. Flippin and Judge T. J. Latham comprise our eldership and are the peers of any Christian men, embodying, as they do, those qualities of both mind and heart that go to make up a well rounded, fully developed Christian character. They were chosen according to the plan given us in the New Testament and are faithful to the trust imposed in them. Our board is composed of not only the representative men of our church, but of our city. They are capable and conservative, being faithful to every duty and ever on the alert for the best interests of the church. We feel that we are blessed in our pastor, eldership and official board, and with the help of the Master will try to prove our gratitude for all of our blessings by greater and more consecrated service in his cause. To her children, wherever they may be, Linden St. Church sends greetings.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

The Church in Baltimore.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I generally read all that F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C., writes, not simply for the reason that I like him personally, but also because he always has something to tell which I want to hear about. Well, in reading his article on "Pioneer Disciples in the East," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Feb. 8th, I found myself upon the familiar ground in that portion of it which relates to the work in Baltimore, and I ask space to point out some things which I consider inaccuracies. He says:

"Baltimore had its beginning as far as this movement goes in 1830. Back of that, however, the germs may be found."

Now the truth of the matter is that there was a Church of Christ as far back as 1819, worshiping first at Fell's Point, then in Mr. Ferguson's home, then on Saratoga St., then on Baltimore St., near Lloyd, then in the Bazar on Harrison St., then in their own house of worship, which is standing yet on North St. From North St. they moved to the corner of Dolphin and Etting Sts., where under the "edification" of Daniel Somner they finally disbanded. Some of them went to the Baptists and others of them united with the Paca St. congregation, which was organized July 26, 1840. The house on Dolphin and Etting Sts. was given over to the colored congregation which, during my residence in Baltimore, was presided over by S. R. Wilkins. Mr. Campbell first visited Baltimore in 1819. He was at that time a Baptist minister and soliciting help to build a Baptist church in Wellsburg or Wheeling. He preached in the old Sharp St. Baptist Church during his visit, and from that church received help for his building fund. His next visit to Baltimore was in 1835 and not in 1833 as Bro. Powers' article has it. At that time the church was worshiping in its own house on North St. His meeting was held in Scotter's Hall (not "Scott's Hall" as Bro. Powers has it) for the reason that the house on North St. would not hold the people who wanted to hear him. I may also say in this connection that it was a Mr. Healy who first presided over that Fell's Point congregation and not Mr. Henly; that Theodatus and not Theodotus was the given name of Dr. Garlick; that Francis Dungan and not Francis Dungau was a deacon in the Paca St. Church, and to the best of my recollection H. T. Anderson, not A. Anderson, was its pastor. I wish to say in conclusion that I got my facts first-hand from Samuel Sands and Henry Mentzel, both of whom are now dead, and embodied them in a sermon preached Aug. 28, 1887, on the occasion of our abandoning the old Paca St. house for our new one on Fremont St. Bro. Powers' article shows either that he had the sermon before him when he wrote, or somebody told him what was in it, or he read it years ago; and in either case he ought to have given some reason for his departure from the facts and names and dates as stated there.

Samuel Sands was well known throughout the United States as the Agricultural Editor of the Baltimore American and also as the man who first set "The Star Spangled Banner" in type, setting it up from Key's manuscript while its author was a prisoner in a British ship lying off North Point. He told me that he attended worship at Mr. Ferguson's house in 1819 with the families of Bro. Carmen and Bro. Inness. He said that Mr. Ferguson preached and practiced what the Christian Church preaches and practices now. He married Bro. Carmen's daughter and with her attended worship wherever the church met, and finally confessed Christ and was baptized in the meeting held in Scotter's Hall by Mr. Campbell, in 1835. He united with the church on North St. Moved with them to the corner of Dolphin and Etting Sts., and after they disbanded united with the Paca St. Church. Moved with them to Fremont St., and was in the fellowship of Fremont St. Church when he died. Others, of course, may think this a small matter, but to me it is something to be able to show that there was a church in Baltimore, just as there were churches in Edinburg, Glasgow, Paisley, London, Birmingham, New York and Pittsburg long before the brethren in those places heard of Alexander Campbell.

Very truly yours,

JAMES VERNON.

Kansas City (Kan.) Letter.

The church work in that part of Kansas City which lies on the west side of the Caw has not been, for years past, in a flourishing condition. The church has been from the beginning burdened with a heavy debt that has hindered the advancement of the cause. That, together with divisions and strife, has prevented the efforts of the few from accomplishing the good for the Master that we have desired to accomplish.

We feel, however, that there are better things now before us. The difficulties that heretofore have held us down have been removed, and the chasm that long yawned in our midst has been bridged in the best possible way. This accomplishment is due largely to the business integrity of Bro. G. F. Shields, who has been for a little more than a year at the head of our work, assisted by the efforts of a few of the faithful workers.

Bro. Shields began his work with us on January 1 of last year. At that time there was a debt of nearly six thousand dollars against our property, and our ranks were divided. Bad business management heretofere placed us where we lost the equity in our building, which of course was discouraging to those who had paid of their hard-earned money to its support.

An effort was made to consolidate the three small churches in a temporary building at the corner of Seventh and Garfield, which was effected in July. The desire to pay off tha debt against the Tabernacle was then arroused, and an effort made with fine results. The amount was raised and paid in cash (not pledges). The year 1900 found us out of debt for the first time in years past.

Out of a membership that was once reported five or six hundred strong we now have a united memdership of about two hundred and twenty-five resident members.

In the face of our prospects for the future we were much grieved by the resignation of Bro. Shields, whom many of us have learned to love. With our growing audience nnd increasing membership we were much encouraged for the hope and prospect of greater things. Our pastor closed his work with us last Lord's day, March 4, with a thoughtful and eloquent address on "God's Proof," of which our papers gave favorable notice. Bro. S. is a young man of more than average ability in his presentation of God's Word. We know him to be a man. We learn that he purposes to give a little time to some business interests before engaging with another church.

Our work has been arranged for for the present, and we trust for greater things for God.

Texas Letter.

Our weather for a little while has been "peculiar." Falling snowflakes on green grass, growing gardens and blooming fruit trees is out of the general order of things, but is by no means an unheard-of thing here. But it will all round out all right very soon.

There seems to be no end to the variety of Texas crops. It used to be thought that cotton was the only thing which could be profitably raised here. Later we learned that corn, wheat, rye, oats, etc., were as well adapted to our soil as cotton. And now we are being told that tobacco can be successfully grown. A Corsicana cigar manufactory has been paying $25 and $40 per hundred for the home-grown weed. That these are good prices every man raised in a tobacco-growing country, as I was, well knows. Next!

Add-Ran University has confidence in her future. As evidence of this, at the last meeting of her board of directors it was determined to build a large brick annex for girls, capable of accommodating fifty young ladies, and to have it ready for occupancy by September, 1900. The building is to cost $10,000, and one-tenth of the amount was subscribed by one of the directors; that liberal-hearted Christian gentleman, T. E. Shirley. No president has yet been selected. May the right man soon be found.

J. C. Dickson, of Clifton Forge, Va., will be in charge of the work at Tyler by the time this is in print. He comes to us highly recommended, and he enters a difficult but most important field, and all Texas says, "Welcome!"

J. S. Myers, of Philadelphia, is to succeed Homer T. Wilson at Ft. Worth. No better selection could have been made as Wilson's successor. And that a great work will be done in this new and handsome church, there is not a doubt. We also bid him a most hearty welcome. Bro. Wilson is to give his entire time to the lecture field, where he is a pronounced success.

E. W. Darst, our Chicago city evangelist, had to run out of Chicago on account of the severe winter, and J. C. Mason has him at work at Houston, while waiting for warm weather.

"A Battle of Giants."

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Your article in the issue of March 22nd upon the above subject calls attention to one of the most important movements of the day.

I have in my possession a copy of a circular distributed in San Francisco by Roman Catholics prior to the last municipal election. In it occurs the statement that Romanism, having been given a backset in Europe in the Dreyfus trial and the faith having lost prestige in the Philippines, the only hope of that church is America. Every energy is bent toward the capturing of this country, as will be admitted by all who watch developments. Forces are at work now to get the machinery of national legislation under Romish control. There is more than conjuncture in the statement that Romanism has its clutches upon the White House, the Government Printing Office, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Pension Office, the Indian Bureau and even upon the Congress of the nation. If any one will read Rev. J. M. King's "Facing the 20th Century" he will find a truthful portraiture of developments that ought to startle every American citizen.

With a secular press under the control of the Roman hierarchy and with a Protestant ministry divided and lacking the moral courage, except in rare cases, to expose and denounce this crouching, cringing subserviency to a power thoroughly anti-American in every fiber of its make-up, the 85 per ent. of the population of this country need to be aroused to the true condition of affairs and act with vigor and intelligence.

There needs to be a campaign of education. The people need to know the true character and history of Romanism, not from mere sensational pamphlets, but from reliable books and other intelligent sources. The debate on Romanism between Campbell and Purcell, two giants in the polemic world, is the ablest and most impartial presentation of the subject ever given to the public. Though the discussion occurred in 1837, it presents material which is as fresh to-day as it was then.

I am highly gratified to see you reduce the price of this book, which ought to be sold by the thousand copies. Each preacher ought to call attention to it publicly. Classes for its careful reading and study should be formed. It ought to be ordered and then loaned to others to be read.

A gentleman of intelligence told me yesterday that he had recently borrowed a copy and read it twice. Now he wishes to purchase a copy. He regards it a great book. Another man, a bookseller, said that he wanted get it for his own use. His wife being a Catholic, he desired to convert her from the error of her way.

Returns From the March Offering.

There is a satisfactory gain in the receipts, also a satisfactory gain in the number of contributing churches. More interest is taken in the apportionment. The preachers have done a noble part by enlisting new churches. The receipts from March 1 to March 23 amount to $31,645.46. This is an encouraging report. We expect to receive $40.000 during March.

Many of the larger churches are slow sending in their offerings. Will they not respond at once?

We must not fall below $200,000 by September 30.

We hope the churches will remember in a substantial way the millions who are starving in India. Our own brethren in India, converted from idol worship to serve the living God, are in great distress. We must remember them. We hope to receive thousands of dollars for this special purpose. Send to F. M. Rains, treasurer, box 834 Cincinnati, Ohio.

Ireland and Our Plea.

I see in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that Bro. R. W. Abberly thinks Ireland is a ripe field for missionary work. As a native of the country, and my knowledge of the field and people, I believe this is true. Six years ago my brother Matthew and I found a splendid opportunity in Antrim and Down Counties to preach the simple, all-conquering, all saving and all-regenerating gospel of Jesus.

The people heard most gladly. For twenty miles around our old native home we preached in all the Presbyterian Churches, and not a few were inquiring the way of salvation. For my own part, I could not possibly leave my work here this year, but I will help to send such a man as Brother Z. T. Sweeney, who might be persuaded to establish a Church of Christ in Belfast or Dublin, and plant the cause in Alexander Campbell's native land.

JAMES SMALL.

Bedford, Indiana, March 12, 1900.

Number of Churches Contributing to Missions.

Many requests have come to the undersigned for the number of churches among the Disciples of Christ who contribute to missions. We have so many missionary organizations and they often act so independently of each other that such statistics are somewhat difficult to secure. Upon examination, we find the following: Three thousand and fifty-one churches contributed to Foreign Missions. Taking this as our basis, we find that 1,224 Bible-schools, mostly in the country where they could not well secure an offering in March on account of bad weather and small attendance, contributed to Foreign Missions and who are not counted as churches. These churches made their offerings as schools in June and should be added to the 3,051. We also find that 500 churches contributed to the Home Board who did not make an offering to the Foreign, and that 1,250 congregations gave to state, district and city missions who did not give to either to the Home or Foreign Boards. Now, in order to do justice to our churches, we must add these together and we will have the following:

Churches contributing to Foreigh Board	3,051
Bible-schools contributing to Foreign Board, not counted as churches,	1,224
Churches contributing to the Home Board and not to Foreign	500
Churches contributing to State, District and City Missions and to neither of the above	1,250
Total	6,026

At the beginning of the year 1899 we had 9,484 churches. This indicates that 3,358 did not give to missions. But when it is remembered that among this number there were a few Christian Endeavor Societies, auxiliaries and some churches who gave direct to a few independent missionaries and that others gave to orphan homes, ministerial aid, etc., etc., the number that did nothing at all for missions or benevolence is not large. The great need, however, is that every church should give to the several calls as they are made. Though the offerings may be small in some country churches, let them not fail to make the effort to the best in their power. G. A. HOFFMANN, Statistical Secretary.

Arkansas State Mission Notes.

Between little Rock and the west line of the state there are not less than ten towns on the Choctaw road that will be important centers in a few years. In each of these the Disciples ought to have a lively church, and could soon have if the means was at hand to give a little timely help.

Magazine is a finely situated town one mile from the old town and is destined to be one of the best on the road. A neat house of worship is located in the old town which will have to be moved if made available. It is jointly owned by the Christians and the Adventists. If either of these bodies is trying to build a church on views of the state of the dead, or of the kingdom, or of the immediate coming of Christ, or anything else except the divine Christ, carrying with it obedience to him, they are trying to lay another foundation and are thus far defeating the object dear to every Christian heart, the unity that is to be found in Christ. If a preacher has not already been employed by the church at Magazine, they will not be long without one.

Boonville. This is probably the most rapidly developing town on the Choctaw west of Little Rock. It is a very pleasant location and a division on the road. Here we have no house. There are a few members in town, and a congregation a few miles distant in the country. A good lot can be obtained and we should be ready to take a start with the town. Every month will make the consummation more difficult.

Lawrence, on the Hot Springs railroad from Malvern, is a favorable opening for some good work. Brother Kincaid, of Hot Springs, will preach for them monthly Sunday afternoon, and possibly occasionally of week days, until they can make other arrangements more effective.

Texarkana. The writer visited this place by invitation of the pastor, Brother Weaver, on the first day of March, the occasion of their annual roll call, and preached on the church, emphasizing the local church organization and life. It was a very pleasant meeting, and I think a profitable one. I commend the practice of annual roll call. Brother Weaver and his excellent family and their faithful helpers are doing good work at Texarkana.

Brother Kincaid and the energetic workers at Hot Springs are bringing the little church to the front.

Brother Ferrell, of Coal Hill, is a very busy man. As mayor and a good Christian citizen, he is stirring up the whisky venders, and as a preacher he is helping the churches around. One of his points is a few miles from Ozark where is a very promising country congregation. Bro. West, an intelligent and consecrated Disciple, and his family reside here. They are a valuable moral force.

Let all churches in Arkansas prepare for a liberal contribution to our home board, (the A. C. M. S.) in May. Miss Thompson of the C. W. B. M. is expected to visit Arkansas soon. Let all churches receive her cordially and joyfully. She will do you good. Will not the churches and individual contributors send money for state missions to Daman Clark, 20th and Adams, Little Rock? It is very much needed.

Pittsburg, March 19.—Five hundred and ten added in the first two meetings in these smoky cities with Bros. W. J. Lhamon and C. L. Thurgood and their great churches, and we are just starting with Bro. F. C. Cramblet at East End; 30 added to date, 13 yesterday and six to-night. The field is hard and slow. Bro Thurgood and his Boys' Brigade of 82 young men attended in a body last night and helped us greatly. Bro. C. says the crowds last night and to-night were as large or even larger than any ever assembled in this church. Bro. J. Walter Wilson is singing here. I go to Kansas City next. We ask the prayers of all brethren.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

IOWA.

Estherville, March 19.—Our audiences are growing larger each Sunday. Two additions last night.—H. MORTON GREGORY.

Mystic, March 18.—One accession last night. Over 400 in attendance and splendid attention. Our Bible-school average attendance is 150.—Z. T. QUEEN.

Mason City, March 19.—My last Sunday's preaching here was blessed both in my experience and in the work of the church. Very large audiences, a beautiful spirit of worship at all church meetings, S. S., Junior and Senior C. E. at their very best, and five confessions and one reclaimed. Next Sunday the new preacher, Ralph C. Sargent, will preach in the morning and W. F. Cowden in the evening.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Waukee, March 14.—Held a week's meeting here with four baptisms, two reclaimed and one by statement. Have a good Bible school, C. E. and Aid. Need a church building.—J. R. MOWRY.

Des Moines, March 19.—I closed a four weeks' meeting at Collins March 4, with 19 added. Will continue to labor with this church, preaching each Lord's day. We have in Collins a promising young church of 100 members.—T. S. HANDSAKER, of Drake University.

The meeting at Kellerton, of two and a half weeks, held by F. L. Davis, of Charles City, resulted in 18 additions to the church. The Methodist preacher's daughter made the confession, but was not baptized; 14 baptisms and four by statement.

Cherokee, March 23.—Final results of meeting at Thurman, 42 additions. Full houses here and intense interest. Pray for us. F. C. Aldinger, who carried off the honors in the state oratorical contest two years ago, is pastor here.—R. A. OMER.

Hopeville.—Five days' meeting here and six confessions. Meeting progresses. Packed houses. One addition at Murray last Sunday.—W. W. WHARTON.

OHIO.

Mineral Ridge, March 13.—Closed our meeting here with home forces. Number added to the church since last report, 12.—L. J. AND ELLA P. MCCONNELL, pastors.

Massillon, March 17.—Four were baptized here last Wednesday night and two more confessed their faith in Christ.—F. N. SIMPSON.

Fostoria, March 19.—At our services yesterday morning one man confessed Christ, and at the evening service there were three confessions and four additions; two by letter and two by statement. Sixteen additions here since the beginning of the new year.—R. W. STANCILL.

Medina, March 21.—March offering for Foreign Missions, $85. We have had 21 accessions here (mostly baptisms) since we commenced work four months ago.—D. D. FENNELL.

KANSAS.

Coffeyville, March 19.—Assisted S. W. Nay in a meeting at Elk City, in which there were 20 baptisms. Bro. Nay is very popular in Elk City and is doing a fine work there. He filled my pulpit here two Sundays.—ALFRED BRUNK.

Independence, March 19.—Have had additions at every service for a month; nine recently.—J. C. COGGINS.

Scottsville, March 15.—L. S. Ridnour closed a three weeks' meeting at Fairview schoolhouse, March 11, 16 were added to the church; 14 by primary obedience.—ELLA CUNNINGHAM, clerk.

Elk City, March 15.—Alfred Brunk, of Coffeyville, assisted us in a 17 days' meeting, which resulted in 20 confessions. This maks 30 additions in six months.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Olathe, March 19.—One added here yesterday from the M. E. Church—a sister desiring baptism. —C. H. HILTON.

Columbus, March 16.—One by confession and one from the Newlights at regular services (March 11); also five confessions and seven baptisms at our regular midweek prayer-meeting last night.—M. MCFARLAND.

Osawatomie, March 19.—One made the confession at our morning services yesterday and one was reclaimed at our prayer-meeting last Wednesday night. After 13 months' service for the church here I received a call to continue indefinitely.—S. H. GIVLER.

Chanute, March 23.—Our meeting at a country schoolhouse was quite succesful, considering the place. There were six additions; four confessions, one from the Baptists and one reclaimed. The attendance was fine from the start and all seemed to enjoy the short meeting. At times the house would not hold the audiences.—W. T. ADAMS.

ILLINOIS.

Carlinville, March 16.—Closed our meeting with the Blooming Grove brethren on March 11. Total number of additions, 28; 21 by confession. Church is greatly strengthened. My wife labored with me during the last three weeks, doing personal work. The brethren worked earnestly and our efforts were not in vain.—WILL A. GREEN.

Manchester, March 22.—Just closed a successful four weeks' meeting at Raymond, under the missionary board of the fifth district. Paul H. Castle, pastor at Virden, did the preaching in a most effective manner. The work was reorganized, money raised for preacaing one quarter time, eight new and efficient workers added to the church and the work generally revived. I will be in a meeting at this place beginning March 26. Ivan W. Agee will do the praching.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, singing evangelist.

Rantoul, March 14.—Seven additions here since my last report. Our work is very encouraging.—H. H. PETERS.

Lilly, March 19.—Meeting well started; 12 last night.—S. S. LAPPIN, evangelist fourth district.

Galesburg, March 19.—One addition to the church at this place yesterday.—C. H. WHITE.

St. Joseph, March 19.—Eight additions and 12 baptized yesterday, making 36 since the meeting began —H. J. HOSTETLER.

Sullivan, March 20.—We enjoyed very fine audiences and a deep interest Sunday. We had one accession, a good man. Last seven accessions have been men. Will now push our new house to completion.—E. W. BRICKERT.

Lilly, March 25.—Beginning third week with 37 added.—S. S. LAPPIN, fourth district evangelist.

Watseka, March 17.—Our meeting of 26 days concluded last evening, with 81 added. Bro Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky., has proven himself to be one of the most capable pulpit men that ever graced our county seat. His fearless denunciation of sectarianism will not soon be forgotten. His splendid appeals to the Bible in the answering of all queries were admirable. Eight religious bodies were represented among those who came to take a stand with us upon apostolic ground.—BENJ. S. FERRALL, pastor.

Augusta, March 21.—At the close of the union meeting, recently, we received seven more by confession and two by statement, making 37 in all the past winter. All departments of church work prospering. I am on my second year and can say we have a noble and spiritually minded people here. The third district convention meets with us in May.—A. L. FERGUSON, pastor.

INDIANA.

Zionsville, March 13.—I had two additions at Providence last Lord's day and also two at my last regular appointment at Dover. We have postponed our offerings for missions till next month. —WM. H. KNOTTS.

Warren, March 21.—We are having a good meeting; 12 additions to date.—J. M. CANFIELD.

Shelbyville, March 19.—Yesterday we raised $42 for Foreign Missions. Much interest is being manifested in a series of sermons to young people. Crowded houses at each service and frequent additions.—E. FINLEY MAHAN.

Milton, March 15.—In a three weeks' meeting, held by our pastor, W. F. Shearer, assisted by Pearl Perrin, soloist, 14 were added to the church; nine by confession Two added previously not reported.—CHAS. H. CALLAWAY.

MISSOURI.

Shelbina, March 22.—Sixteen added to the Shelbina Church since Jan. 1st.—J. H. WOOD.

Vandalia, March 22.—I have been here one year this month and will remain indefinitely. Had 93 additions; 26 by letter. Raised for all purposes, including church debt at Union, $1,100. Our work is progressing nicely.—F. A. MAYHALL.

Tuxedo.—One confession.—D. N. GILLETT.

Sweet Springs, March 16.—We began our meeting last eve with fair prospects of success. Will continue two or three weeks.—EDMUND WILKES AND V. E. RIDENOUR.

Maysville, March 17.—I closed a 10 days' meeting at Princeton, March 15th. Offering for Foreign Missions of the Princeton Church, the first, I think in its history, or at least for some years, amounted to $10. The C. W. B. M. of this church has a membership of 20; it was organized less than a year ago. The C. E. Society has pledged $25 to Foreign Missions, of which it has already $16 in hand.—H. S. GILLIAM.

Rockport, March 19.—Have just closed a meeting at Westboro with nine additions; five by confession. Am now in a very promising meeting here, to continue indefinitely. Last Lord's day evening the M. E. and M. E. South churches both swarmed and came into our hive and filled every nook and corner, and this together with a few of the Baptist and Presbyterian brethren composed an exceedingly inspiring audience.—G. HALLOCK ROWE.

MOLLIE H. TURNER.

The darkest night will surely end,
The dreariest day will close,
The burning fever cease at last
And lend us sweet repose;
The fearful storm is followed by
The rainbow's circled reach,
The tossed and raging ocean's crest
Dies gently on the beach.

Oh! will this cruel, pain-tossed life
Bring us at last to rest,
Within the glory of His love,
Upon the Savior's breast?
Shall sweeter joy and peace arise
From the chastenings of His rod?
Are tears and pains and heart-throbs wild
But stepping-stones to God?

Oh! then unquiet, weary heart,
Fear not the unwritten years;
Look upward through the rifted clouds
And smile through falling tears.
Though fierce and hydra-headed sorrow
Lash thee with forked tongues,
Still lay the "Balm of Gilead"
Upon thy quivering wounds.

The Angel pale will hide thee soon
From earth's unresting days,
And fold thee in his drapery soft
With gentle, tender ways;
Thou'lt sweetly dream of Him who comes
To wake His own from sleep,
To dwell where hearts no more shall ache
And eyes no more shall weep.

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XXII.

The wave of prosperity in our colony had steadily risen, and in nothing was its flood-tide more manifest than in the fellowship and enthusiasm of our religious meetings. On a beautiful morning we repaired to the stream that flowed adjacent to our village, and there those who by their infancy had been deprived of the exercise of their volition and of faith at the time of baptism, and those in maturer years had submitted to affusion, and who now sought a baptism beyond question, with others who had never made a profession of religion, were buried and raised from the crystal waters in the likeness of their buried and risen Lord.

Then came our brave old Captain saying, as in the olden days: "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" The answer promptly came: "If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest." And he answered: "I believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God." And, as in the long ago, they both went down into the water, and when they were come up out of the water there were joyous hearts and brimming eyes, and never seemed the skies so blue and fields so green and sunshine so golden and the outlook so auspicous as then.

There was a unity of spirit, a strength of faith, a buoyancy of hope and a fervor of love that filled all hearts with gladness and made our fellowship a foretaste of heaven.

Our meeting for Scripture study, though often attended with much discussion and widely divergent views, were characterized by such sincerity and eagerness for the truth as to be truly refreshing.

At one of these Mr. Smithson said: "There is one question that we ought to consider: the relation that baptism bears to salvation.

"Mr. Burton and I have had some talk on the matter, and I have asked him, as he had more leisure time than I, to give it careful study and, without knowing to what conclusions he has come, I should like to hear from him." Others seconding the request, Mr. Burton said:

"The place of baptism, in the very threshold of the Christian system, in immediate connection with faith and repentance, shows that it is of peculiar significance. As you have the excellent custom of bringing your Bibles with you, and have no doubt given study to this subject, let me ask you what you understand to be the design of baptism?" Several views were given, among them the following: Baptism is designed to show humility, to exhibit penitence, to exhibit faith, a display of loyalty to Christ, an evidence of faith in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, for the remission of sins."

Mr. Burton: "Very well. For the present, omitting the last answer, will you give the passages in the Bible in support of your views? I observe you are all silent, and for the very good reason that there are no Scriptures to support your positions, nor for any purpose in baptism but one. I have no quarrel to make with your views. They are probably all incidental to baptism. We can hold them as matters of opinion. But in matters of faith we must go by the express teaching of the Bible."

Miss Clarkson read: "John did baptize in the wilderness and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Mark 1:4).

Burton: "Very good. A single clear, positive statement like that ought to settle any issue with a believer of the Bible. But I ask, Is there cumulative proof?"

Some one read a similiar passage from Luke 3:3.

Burton: "These passages settle the design of John's baptism. Now what about the Savior's baptism?"

Prof. Fergus: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16).

Burton: "Salvation in that passage, as you see, is based on faith and baptism, not upon one, not upon the other, but upon both. Can you give any other passages?"

Gray: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins."

Burton: "Very well. That is most explicit, and we are bound to believe it."

Smithson: "Can't we substitute 'because of' for 'for,' and make that read 'because of the remission of sins?'"

Burton: "Most certainly, if we want to put a plain and simple passage to the torture and make nonsense and worse out of it. Nonesense, because repentance and baptism are for the same purpose. It violates the grammatical construction to make them for different purposes, and no man will deny it. Substitute 'because of' and we read, 'Repent and be baptized because of the remission of sins.' What nonsense: repent—be sorry—because sins are forgiven!

"But it is worse than nonsense; it makes Christ's blood of noneffect. Jesus in substituting the Lord's Supper says: 'This is my blood of the New Testament, shed for many for the remission of sins.'

"Now observe: if 'for the remission of sins' means 'because of the remission of sins' in Acts 2:38, it means that in the other passage, as the language is precisely the same in the Greek and in the English.

"But nobody believes that Jesus shed his blood because man's sins were forgiven. Unless, therefore, we are going to juggle with words and make them meaningless to convey any truth, we are bound to take this language in Acts just as we find it.

"Can you cite other passages agreeing with those given?"

Mrs. Wolcott: "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16).

Burton: "Certainly, no inspired man would ever use the figure of baptism washing away sins, if it had nothing to do with cleansing from sin."

Mrs. Gray: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Mr. White: "I doubt that passage having any reference to baptism."

Burton: "Is there any other ordinance or usage in Christianity in which water is employed?"

White: "None that I know of."

Burton: "Well, then, let us believe that our Savior said something intelligible when he used this language.

"Let me ask you, Mr. White, what do you think of the Methodist Discipline?"

White: "I think it a very wise production."

Burton: "And I heartily agree with you.

Do you know that it quotes the language of Christ to Nicodemus, 'Born of water and of the Spirit,' and makes it equivalent to baptized with water and with the Holy Ghost?"

White: "That is true. I had forgotten it."

McGregor: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us" (1 Pet. 3:21).

"Yes, Peter reasons that as Noah and his family were saved by water, so we are saved by baptism."

Smithson: "'By grace are ye saved through faith.' If that's so, the pardon is bestowed through faith and not baptism."

Burton: "Then you believe the passages that speak of salvation through faith and not the others?"

Smithson: "No, I do not mean that, but the other passages are to be made to harmonize in some way with salvation by faith."

"Well, Mr. Smithson, there is one way and only one way this can be done.

"The other day, you remember, a sailor was carried out to sea by the tide and came near being drowned. Now I have heard three statements about this. The sailor asserts that he was saved by his ability to keep afloat for half an hour. Others say he was saved by a boat. Oleson says he saved him. Which story is true? I answer, all of them. The sailor kept afloat until Oleson rowed out and brought him ashore in a boat, and thus by the concurrence of these causes he was saved. So salvation is predicated on faith, on repentance, on baptism. If we assert it is by any one of these alone, the other statements become irreconcilable. If, however, we understand these as concurrent causes, the difficulty vanishes at once. Let us not, then, understand that baptism alone is for remission of sins. All the waters of the ocean could not cleanse from sin without the antecedents of faith and repentance. It is, therefore, a faith that justifies, a repentance unto salvation and a baptism that saves, that concur in the great end of bringing us into the divine favor as children of God."

Mr. Smithson: "I see, but one objection to your explanation, and that is a statement of Paul; I forget just where: 'Ye are all children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.' Mark the words 'by faith;' that seems to exclude any other agency."

Burton: "That is found in Gallatians 3:26. Please turn to it and read it with the next verse."

Smithson: "For ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."

Burton: "I think, Mr. Smithson, the second verse answers your objection."

Smithson: "Yes, I overlooked the connection, faith and baptism are evidently concurrent causes in our becoming children of God."

Mrs. Wolcott: "I would like to ask if, as the Scriptures seem to declare, baptism is essential, what you are going to do with those who have no opportunity to be baptized?"

Burton: "Just nothing at all. There are few such cases. I leave such in the hands of a merciful God who does not require impossibilities. But I will say, however, that the case of the man who wants to be baptized and can't, and that of the man who can be baptized and won't, are as far apart as the poles, and the latter is a rebel against the Lord that bought him.

"But why should we ask, Is baptism essential? when Jesus says: 'Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you?' That 'whatsoever' excludes the possibility of nonessentials. Did Jesus command it? If the smallest commandment he ever gave, that is enough. Every loyal heart submits without a murmur.

"But this command is made with such an assumption of authority as to make it unique among all the commands ever given. Jesus says: 'All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.' Certainly, when we have no right to classify our Savior's commands and call any of them nonessential, we will not stultify ourselves by calling that so which is made with all authority in heaven and in earth."

The Better Way.

We heard one day lately of a beautiful way of keeping in mind a dear little child who had gone to the better life. When the parents rallied from the first darkness of bereavement, when they had grown a little used to the strange silence where there had been such a melody of the sweet voice and the bounding step, they cast about them to see how best they could remember their little Maud.

Over her grave in the cemetery they had placed a simple, small stone, with her name and the date of her birth and death. They wanted to do much more than this, but they did not care to spend a large amount of money on the mere embellishment of the narrow house in which their darling had been laid to rest.

"It would have cost so much," said the mother, after some thoughtful balancing of accounts, "had our daughter been spared to us, for her education, her clothing, her pleasures and her little journeys. Christmas and birthday festivals a little more. So much this year! Now, can we not take this money and spend it, for just this year, on some little girl of Maud's age, some child who really needs love and happiness and advantages which her parents cannot give her? Let us find some dear child and do this in Maud's name."

The blessed, unselfish thought was put into practice without much delay, and one little child stood, so far as all that lavish kindness and generous wealth could do, in the place of the other whose memory never fades from the hearts that loved her. One year has not proved the measure of this ungrudging and saintly beneficence. They to whom so sweet a suggestion came, doubtless angel-borne, are intending to keep on in their work, and as time passes, their gifts to the girl who has taken Maud's place shall be, as nearly as possible, what Maud each year would have had if she had been spared to them. She will stand to the world in her own lot, developing in her own way, but all that would have been the right of the dear vanished one shall be freely bestowed upon her for that dear one's sake. Beauty will spring from the ashes of the the old sorrow.—Selected.

A Clergical Dream.

The pastor dreamed that his church was a stage coach at the foot of a hill, up which, in the absence of horse power, it fell to his lot to drag it.

Some of his officers and members bade him be of good cheer, for they would all help. He should guide the tongue; some of them would turn the wheels, others push; and so together they would get it up the hill.

For awhile the heavy coach moved slowly but surely up. After a time, however, its weight seemed to increase, till the pastor, bringing the vehicle to a stand on the first ridge, and turning the tongue to prevent its slipping down, ran to see what was the matter. All the helpers, tired of turning the wheels and pushing, had jumped into the coach and were sitting inside!

The pastor cannot drag the coach up all alone! If all will take hold, the heaviest coach will move up the roughest hill.

Pastors have been encouraged to attempt great things, and then have been left when half way up the hill.—Episcopal Recorder.

Hope.

[Written by Robert Burns, in a young lady's autograph album, on the first day of a new year.]

The voice of nature loudly cries,
And many a message from the skies,
That something in us never dies;
That on this frail uncertain state
Hang matters of eternal weight;
That future life, in worlds unknown,
Must take its hue from this alone;
Whether as heavenly glory bright,
Or dark as misery's woeful night.

Since, then, my honored first of friends,
On this poor being all depends,
Let us the important Now employ,
And live as those who never die!

Where Do We Live?

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

What seek ye?—John 1:38.

He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me and I in him.—John 6:56.

If a man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.—John 14:23.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.—Col. 3:2

A wise mother took her daughter with her on a visit to an invalid, who had been for many years confined to her room. Though alone in the world, and poor, and very often enduring great bodily suffering, this invalid was a happy woman; and better still, she made those about her happy. People were invisibly drawn to her. They came to her for sympathy, for counsel, and always left her feeling stronger and more able to bear life's burdens and more determined to win in its battles.

"I don't understand it, mother," said the daughter, as they took their leave. "I don't understand how she can approach anything that is akin to happiness in her condition."

"It is because of her beautiful dwelling-place, my daughter," was the reply.

"Why, mother! That miserable tenement?"

"She resides far above that miserable tenement, my daughter. Her home is where her heart is, where her treasures are—in heaven. Her lot is indeed blessed when compared to that of multitudes of men and women who have all that wealth and position can bring them; whose bodies have palatial resting-places, but whose spirits are homeless. Their hearts are with their treasures and their treasures are of earth, the possession of which does not satisfy nor bring peace."

This mother, in her endeavor to teach a lesson to her child, touches upon a theme that may well be considered by those of maturest thought. Where do we live? Some one has said that we do not have to die in order to be in heaven or in hell, but that one or the other of these places may be our abode while on earth. "In him we live and move and have our being." Even though the earthly home may be broken up; even though we may lose much or all that is dear to us; even though we may pass through the valley and shadow of sorrow, yet we can have a home of greater peace, of greater restfulness, of greater happiness than any earthly home can be. We can make God our home and can give him a dwelling-place within us. Some of us are kept away from this true home for one reason, some for another. Some of us look back over the past and allow its failures, its omisions and commissions to so discourage us that we give up in despair. Some of us do not take time to think about it, or we allow our environment to hold us down, bound as it were, hand and foot. Some of us are appalled by the outlook for the future, and draw back afraid.

Two boys on their way to school passed through a forest of magnificent trees. But the way was long and rough and stony, and there were some tiresome hills to climb. To Joseph the unpleasant features alone were seen, and they were seen in such a way as to shut out all that was pleasant. To Henry the unpleasant things presented themselves; he was conscious of them, but he did not allow them to close his eyes to all that was pleasant. Indeed, the things that were pleasant he loved to dwell upon, and he did dwell upon them to such an extent that he almost lost sight of all the things that were not pleasant. One especially trying morning, as they trudged along through the heat, Henry remarked:

"How high these trees are. I look up and up, until it seems that their topmost branches are lost in the clouds. How beautiful they are. Don't you think so, Joseph?"

But Joseph answered: "I have never looked high enough to see the tops. I have seen only the trunks, and there is certainly nothing beautiful about them. They are gnarled and knotted and twisted, and parts of them are even decayed and far from pretty to look at."

"But look upward, Joseph."

"I can't," was the reply. "There are so many sticks and stones and hills in the way that I have no time to look up."

How significant! How we do plod along in the valley, vexing our very souls over the petty things of life, when we might be living on the mountain tops! How we do crawl and creep along, weighed down by daily annoyances, when we ought to live far above them. We live in the tomb, when "He is risen."

"What seek ye?" Usually we seek the things that we think about most, and Paul tells us to "set our minds" on the things that are above. If we do this we will seek the things that are above, and in seeking for the things that are above we are seeking for the things that endure while God lives. And if we seek, we shall find—riches that are more precious than rubies—purity, meekness, self-control, love, righteousness, peace. Wealth and power are not to be compared with these characteristics.

O, that we might lift our eyes above the twisted, worm-eaten trunks, and rest them upon the beauties of the green, graceful branches that tower up to the clouds. Happy, indeed, are we if the question "Where do we live?" is settled in such a way as to bring to us the joy and the peace that passeth all understanding.

Irish Wit.

At a recent licensing case in Dublin a certain well-known ecclesiastic was being cross-examined, according to a writer in the Nineteenth Century. I am sure the genial dean of Chapel Royal will forgive me mentioning his name, as he is an Irishman, with more than an Irishman's fund of wit.

Scene—A police court. Applicant—A bibulous innkeeper. Witness—The dean appearing on behalf of the Church of Ireland Temperance Society.

"And you, Mister Dane of the Chapel Royal, were in that public house?" came the first question.

"I was, sir," came an unblushing answer.

"And may I ask, Mister Dane of the Chapel Royal, did you take anything in the public house?"

"I did, sir."

Great sensation in court.

"Oh! you did, Mr. Dane, did you! And may I ask, Mr. Dane of Chapel Royal"—with a strong and derisive accent—"what you took, sir?"

"I took a chair, sir," answered the quick-witted witness. "And, further than that, I took notes, sir; and here they are, sir."—Union Gospel News.

"I don't object to Fanny having religion,' said Mrs. Clarmont; "I've got as much as anybody, and I think it a good thing; its the kind she's got that won't do at all. She's taught my Vega a lot of nonsense about church members having to love each other, till upon my word, what does Vega do, but begin to speak to Mrs. ——. But you don't know our people, of course. Anyway, she speaks to this person that I haven't spoken to for years! Vega goes out of her way to accost her! Fancy—a sister that doesn't more than give me a stiff bow—like there were icicles on her bonnet she was afraid of breaking off if she unbent, and Vega has thawed her out! But she needn't come around me," added Mrs. Clarmont, looking belligerent. "The Clarmonts from all time, have had some pride and some ideas. And are they all to be swept away by this Fanny Nobody?"

"There's one thing certain," spoke up Ronald: "before Frank came, Vega was always unhappy, and I'd as soon have thought of entertaining a starving, shipwrecked sailor by playing him a tune on a French harp. But Frank came along and she got Vega interested in things—the Bible you know; and it seems funny to think of a person being interested in the Bible—well, Vega is all different; kind, gentle and thoughtful. She made us keep the piano stored away, because she was deaf and it made her mournful to see it; she used to love to play. Well, she has had that piano brought down, it's in the parlor now, and that's my sister, Clara, playing on it. And since I've been laid up, what does Vega do but sit by me for hours, entertaining me. She's all changed, and she's the best sister now that a fellow ever had!"

Mrs. Clarmont put her arm around Vega, who had doubtless been wondering what they were saying. "No, my son," said the mother; "it's only that you are beginning to understand her. For my Vega was always the dearest and sweetest girl in the world; she never gave me any trouble. Of course, she had the blues—no wonder! But she has always been as good as gold."

Now Vega spoke: "Isn't it wonderful, mother, how things have turned out, and now my Frank Douglas will soon have her father and mother? Oh, how I wish you hadn't sent her away, so I could have seen her when she met them!"

"What does this mean?" Mrs. Clarmont demanded sharply.

"It means," said Mr. Douglas, "that Frank is our daughter."

"How can that be?" retorted Mrs. Clarmont. "Remember, her name was given to her accidentally. She is not a Douglas. She is a nobody."

"Madam," said Mr. Douglas, drawing himself up, "she belongs to one of the best families in Kentucky. She's my wife's daughter, and my wife is the child of a Kentucky king; yes, madam, a Kentucky king!"

"Then Frank's mother is a queen!" cried Ronald, laughing in his joyful surprise, while the tears came to his eyes. He reached out his arm toward Mrs. Douglas, "Your majesty, I would like to shake the hand of Frank's mother!" he cried. Then Frank's mother sprang to her feet and kissed him. There was not much conversation after that, for Mrs. Clarmont did not like the turn things had taken. She gave the St. Louis address, adding that was all she knew of "Fanny's" whereabouts. The travelers arose, promising to bring Frank to see Vega and Ronald when they found her—this to the eager invitation of the children. Mrs. Clarmont's face intimated that she would not be "at home" when that visit took place.

The next morning Mr. and Mrs. Douglas arrived in St. Louis and were driven at once to Brother Wilton's lodging house on Washington Avenue. The minister was at home, and they were soon deep in mutual explanations. The impatient parents learned that Frank and Mrs. Dew had rented a small cottage in a village where the minister held one of his monthly services. Brother Wilton told them that as there were not many cottages in the place, it could be readily distinguished; it was painted green, stood next to the only church in town, and in the sideyard was a pole crowned with a pigeon-house. He told them that Mrs. Dew was adding to her slender income by taking in sewing, and Frank would soon be able to help in the work. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas could hardly wait for the next train going to this village, but everything considered, it was best to do so; accordingly, they waited. But they went to the station a long time beforehand and walked up and down the great halls with feverish impatience. They stood at the iron door like caged lions, waiting for it to be opened so they could be the first to board their train. And after they had started, their thoughts flew a thousand times faster than the engine, then came back to where their bodies were, and told them they would never reach their destination! But they did. The name of the village was called. The train stopped. They had agreed to walk to the cottage, and talk to Frank some time before letting her know who they were. It was easy to find the church; they could see it from the platform. And here stood the green cottage and the pigeon-pole in the yard! They knocked upon the front door and waited.

PRECEPTS AND PROMISES.*

After the beautiful introduction to his discourse which we studied last week, in the lesson on the beatitudes, Jesus proceeded to instruct his disciples in the principles and laws of his kingdom. This kingdom is to exercise its saving influence through them, whom he will now prepare as salt for the world's corruption, as light for its darkness. His mission is not one of destruction, but of completion. The precepts of the law, which the scribes had overlaid with their traditions and obscured by their mechanical interpretations, he would exhibit in their true spirit and scope. Murder need not be accomplished in actual deed to bring guilt upon the soul. To hate one's brother was virtually to kill him, so far as one's own character was concerned. Adultery could be committed in the heart, even where worldly prudence or lack of opportunity prevented the overt transgression. Profanity, so common among the Jews of that day, and alas! so frequent among us now, he forbade as an insult to Jehovah. Vengeance must give place to mercy, and hate to love. As children of God we must imitate him by loving even those who returned our affection with indifference and scorn.

The Pharisees made great show before the people of their piety. To give alms to the poor with much parade; to stand and pray aloud at the street corners; to advertise their frequent seasons of fasting by the sadness of their countenances and the uncleanness of their persons—such were the ways in which they sought to impress their superior sanctity. To Jesus this was rank hypocrisy, and he taught his disciples to avoid every semblance of pretense in their worship and benevolence, letting this portion of their lives be a sweet secret between their Father and themselves. He gave a simple and exquisite model of prayer, whose lesson has for all the ages since been taken to the hearts of those who petition in his name, and has saved countless souls from the folly and impiety of vain repetitions. He enjoins the duty of laying up treasures of righteousness rather than of riches, and urged that trust of the Heavenly Father which is suggested by his loving care for even the least and lowest of his creatures. To seek first God's kingdom and God's righteousness ensures the child of God every needed blessing for time and eternity.

Then follow the precepts and promises of our present lesson. No vice was more common among the Jews of Jesus' day than that of censorious judgment. The man whose opinions and practices did not accord with theirs, even in the minute regulations of daily life, met with condemnation at their hands. How ready are we, oftentimes, to denounce the man whose opinions and actions differ widely from our own. Political, social and religious intolerance are not yet banished from among men. Jesus lays down the law that severe judgment will be rewarded in kind. God will forgive us only as we forgive others. "Judgment is without mercy to him that hath shewed no mercy." If the Searcher of hearts is willing to treat with forbearance and forgiveness our many sins, we ought cheerfully to refrain from hasty and bitter condemnation of our fellowmen. Perhaps there are circumstances unknown to us which make their wrong-doing less flagrant than our own. We may be caviling at the tiny dust-mote in another's eye, while a beam of wood is destroying the vision of our own. Let us first endeavor to rid ourselves of the fault that mars our character, and then we shall be prepared, both by clearer vision and gentler spirit, to correct another.

Then follows an injunction which seems to have little connection with what precedes it. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." The connection is probably about this: Try as you may to correct gently the faults of others, there will be some whose natures have been so depraved by sin that they have lost all desire for better things. The holy impulses that stir in your souls are folly to them. As the dogs of the street would devour the very flesh from the altar, if thrown to them, and then ravenously fall upon you with their base cravings yet unsatisfied, so these men will listen to your message of truth only to answer with hate and death. The jewels of grace and beauty that adorn the doctrine of the kingdom of God will be to them as pearls cast before senseless swine. They will trample them beneath their feet, indifferent to their infinite value. The meaning of this proverb becomes somewhat plainer when we remember that its literary form is that known as introverted parallelism, in which the first and fourth lines answer to each other, and the second and third:

"Give not that which is holy unto the dogs,
Neither cast ye your pearls before swine,
Lest they [the swine] trample them under their feet,
And [the dogs] turn again and rend you."

Jesus found it necessary at times to turn away from those who heard him only to cavil at his words. Paul and Barnabas preached to the Jews at Antioch in Pisidia, as recorded in Acts 13th chapter, and when their own brethren rejected the message they boldly said: "It was necessary that the Word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." When the message is despised it is time to take it elsewhere, to those whose hearts will open to its coming.

Then follows the cheering promise to those who ask for God's favor, that he will freely grant it. A father will not deny his children the things they need, even though he be himself a sinner. How much more will our Heavenly Father bestow upon us the gifts which are his in abundance, and which we so sorely need. Especially will he bestow the Holy Spirit, chief of the "good things" in his kingdom. But we must ask in faith, we must ourselves be willing to forgive our enemies, we must ask, not that we may consume the blessings upon our lusts, but that we may use them to his glory, and we must seek to ask according to his will. Then will our prayers be answered.

While seeking good at the hand of God we are to be careful to give good to our fellowmen. The Golden Rule is found in substance in a number of places in ancient literature, but generally in negative form. One instance is that of the answer of the celebrated Jewish rabbi, Hillel, who was asked by a Gentile to teach him the whole law while he stood on one foot. Hillel replied: "What is hateful to thee do not to another. This is the whole law, all else is only its explanation." Jesus filled up the meaning of this ancient saying, gave it positive force, showed its true meaning, as a measure of neighborly love, and imparted to those who believed in him the spirit in which alone it is possible of realization.

The closing precept of our lesson urges the necessity of entering the narrow way of the divine will, a way which leads to sure life and peace. The broad way of sin deludes by its seeming liberty, but at the end is straitened into the narrow gate of perdition, whose hinges swing only inward. The way of righteousness grows both brighter and broader as we advance upon it, and it ends at the twelve wide gates of the New Jerusalem into which, with songs of joy, the hosts of the saved do enter. There were few in Jesus' day that walked in the narrow way. But the number is ever increasing, and the time may soon come when his words of warning can be changed into an utterance of rejoicing, and we can say of the way to destruction, "Few there be which go in thereat;" while of the way of life we can gratefully declare, "Many there be that find it." Let us labor to this high and holy purpose.

PRACTICAL painters say that when they come to repaint a house which has been painted with ready-mixed paint or combination White Lead (so-called), it costs more to prepare the surface than to apply the paint.

The moral is to use only Pure White Lead, because it is not only more durable, but is always in good condition for repainting. These brands are genuine.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 8.

CHRIST OUR MISSIONARY MODEL.

(John 4:5-15.)

(Quarterly Missionary Meeting.)

There is no activity for which we are called upon in which our Lord is not for us, in some way, a model. In missionary work, too, as in all else, he gives his example.

Personal work we have all come to recognize as the most effective in every undertaking. A political candidate may do much upon the platform, but more from the buttonhole. He may gain votes in the great meeting, but more in private interviewing, either by himself or by his henchmen. A promoter of business enterprises, likewise, will do his best work closeted with individual men. The Christian worker who would bring men and women into the church must talk with them privately. Jesus here set us his example. He spoke some of his best and most deathless words to single auditors—Nicodemus, Mary, the woman of Samaria.

Fear not, then, if the flock be small! He who will work serenely with a flock of fifty, fifteen or five, shall shine serenely as the stars. The great preacher, Alexander Procter, I went to hear one Sunday night through a storm. Lightnings and thunders were in the air, and few hearers, about a dozen, braved the night. Procter arose, lifted his great Jovelike head and said:

"You few people deserve credit for coming out in such a storm, and I want to give you the very best I've got." He took for his text, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" and that sermon rings through my soul to-day, after years. Many a time, as well, under the trees, of a long summer afternoon, has he talked in quite as moving and profound a way to a single hearer—and that only a boy.

Far out in our pioneer West are many, no doubt, following in their Master's steps, preaching to the few. Many weary miles they ride, as weary miles he walked. Into many lowly doors they enter, as into many entered he. Many nights under stars they pray, as many nights, all night, prayed he. They are doing his work, as he himself did long ago.

Jesus, like these our missionaries, began his work in the home field. To the people of Judea and Galilee first, the lost sheep of Israel, did he go. He could not shut up his compassion from an occasional Samaritan, Gadarene, Syro-Phœnician and certain Greeks; but his bended energies were given to the strategic point to be gained, the house of Israel. Is there not philosophy here for us? Our home mission day approaches; yes, should it not always be with us? If we would follow our model missionary, to the lost sheep of the house of America must we go.

Again, Jesus employed agents to do his work; first twelve, later seventy, later one hundred and twenty, and later thousands. If our missionary work would profit from his example, it must adopt his generalship. "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Organize, equip, instruct and send! Jesus was one who got work out of men. He knew how to administer in order to minister. By companies, by ranks, he seated men to feed them, through his agents. Shall not we also?

Jesus never lost an opportunity to come into touch with a soul of man—without intrusion. Some people intrude and imagine they are fulfilling a mission. If we copy the meekness and self-restraint of Jesus, we shall not err here. Henry Ward Beecher was noted for his kindly and tactful Christian approach to people, and he never lost an opportunity to draw near. On the 'bus-top, under the dripping eaves while waiting for a car, in the stores, wherever he met people, he drew near them, and for their good.

Finally, Jesus' activity was universal. He never stopped short in his notions of the winning of all men. For all was his good news destined, and perhaps no word is more characteristic of him and his great follower, Paul, than the word "all."

Bethany Reading Courses.

SOME REASONS FOR MISSIONS.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

The baptism of Jesus marks the beginning of his active earthly ministry. From that event onward his life rushes to a climax. Its whole course is marked by the sweetest and strangest intermingling of the human and the divine. The natural and the miraculous are one with him. His sermons, his parables and his miracles flow alike with naturalness from his radiant and majestic soul. They are his sermons, therefore they are unrivaled; they are his parables and prayers, therefore they are perfect and matchless; they are his miracles, therefore they pass beyond the miraculous into the higher natural, since he is the explanation of them.

But, whatever his sermons and parables and miracles may be, the climax of his life is not in them. Nor is it in his death, since his death is but a piece of his life. Nor is it his resurrection, for that is but the climax of his death. These are wonderful facts and everlastingly meaningful, but suppose all had ended there in the empty tomb—even at the empty tomb! Suppose the disciples had remained there, helpless and inactive, with great wonderment, and looking out upon a blank and hopeless world with these facts before them, but no direction given to them: what then could it all have amounted to?

One feels that there must be somewhat a sequel to all this, and the sequel must not be a letting down from the height attained by the resurrection. Standing there by the empty tomb, and standing there by the risen Christ, one feels that there is something more to follow, that there is a height yet to be reached, that the climax has not come. The resurrection creates expectation. But what can pass beyond it? What can be more astonishing? What can be a climax to such climax?

How strangely great and imperative, how awful, how dreadful, if not heeded, must be the words spoken by the lips of the One "who was dead and is alive," and who cries out, "Behold, I am alive forevermore!" Christ's commission is Christ's climax to his resurrection. This is his supreme monologue, standing in the New Testament over against the Decalogue of the Old. Under this one blessed and fearful and imperative mission and commission he places the whole host of his believing ones. That is their law, enacted (let it be repeated) in climax of the resurrection, by the One all-authoritative in heaven and on earth. To our little earth there is but one sun in heaven, and to the disciples of Christ there is but one law given—there is for them but one supreme code of action. It is this: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

For the disciples, for the church, to fail in this is to fail utterly. This commission is the revelation of all that Jesus was and did. It is the coefficient of all his work. It is the bringing together and fusing into one great and meaningful whole of what might otherwise lie scattered; it is the summary and the substance of the gospel; it is the link between Christ and the world; it is a command and a promise; it is both history and prophecy. It alone is a sufficient reason for missions. If we had no other reason, that one is sublime and imperative. "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great"—a commission!

Another reason for missions is suggested by the Apostle Paul when he says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, to the Jew first and then to the Gentile." Now that is a declaration of its universality. By that the apostle says the gospel is international or inter-ethnic in its character. There is something about it that appeals to the heart and mind of man as man. This cannot be said of all religions, but it can be said of all truth. Two and two are four the world around. The shortest distance between two points is a straight line in China as well as in America. Christ's love is universal; his truth is universal; his character is the realized ideal of the whole world; his manhood appeals everywhere and everlastingly to the innate godliness of mankind; Christ finds the soul of the saint and of the sinner wherever the soul of either is still in the "image of God." He finds the soul of the sinner that it may become saintly, and the soul of the saint that it may be saved.

Because of this inter-ethnic character of the gospel, he who has it becomes a debtor (that is Paul's word) to those who have it not, and there is a reason for missions. We do not hold the gospel in "fee simple." It is not deeded to us "in perpetuity." We are simply trustees for China and India and Africa and all the world that has it not. And a faithless trustee who can abide? Has not the Savior spoken of the "outer darkness" and the "gnashing of the teeth" awaiting the "wicked and the slothful?"

Notes and News.

Saving the West Creighton Avenue Church of Christ, Ft. Wayne.

For five months we have been struggling to save this property. We now have on hands the $3,000 which the church was to raise, but the church cannot raise any more. It has been taxed to its utmost capacity in order to do this. The district has raised $435, and in order to raise the amount necessary to the carrying out of the plan will have $65 yet to raise.

Now, brethren, it seems to me that this ought to be done without having to canvass any further for it. I think our brethren can appreciate the importance of this matter and surely will not be slow in doing their part. I am now ready to help Bro. Legg in the raising of the $600 which is asked of the state.

By making partial settlement we have been able to extend the time of final settlement to the tenth day of April. This is the best we could do; it must be done by that time. Considerable expense could be saved if the churches would take hold of this matter and help without waiting to be canvassed. A little help promptly given will save this property to our cause. Remember these facts:

1. We are within $665 of saving the property.
2. The church has raised $3,000. This is $500 more than was counted on at first, and in order to do this every possible dollar was raised. If the saving of the church depends on the people here raising any more the property will simply have to be sold.
3. The district has raised all but $65 of its part. This must be raised in order to the saving of the property.
4. Final settlement must be made by the 10th day of April. Therefore it is important we act promptly. Do not wait on the church to act, nor do not withhold your help because it is small; 600 Disciples giving $1 each would raise the necessary amount. Send your offering to W. W. Dygert, 50 Miner St., Fort Wayne, Ind.; or you can give it to the field secretary, Bro. Legg, or myself when we are making the canvass, as directed by state board.

Secretary Denny on Iowa Misions.

There is no uncertain sound about our call of "Iowa Missions to the Front."

April first is the day for the Iowa offering.

Hear the watchword, "5,000 souls and $10,000 for Iowa in 1900."

Iowa missions must be made prominent, for they are important.

Yes, we have 432 congregations in the state, but there are are places where there are no congregations, not even a band of Disciples.

Fifteen counties have no church.

Eleven counties have only one church each.

Thirteen counties have only two congregations each.

Thirty-nine counties where we are practically unknown.

In 1890 we had 240 congregations, 215 houses of worship, 153 preachers, 19,853 members and $2,407.33 for the I. C. C.

In 1899, 432 congregations, 379 houses of worship, 357 preachers (including Bible students), 50,000 members and $4,443,08 for state missions.

In ten years, through the agencies of the I. C. C., 12,635 souls have been added to the Iowa churches.

Excel in Superior Tone, Perfect Construction and Great Durability
THE ESTEY CO., 916 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.

We have 53 homeless congregations and more than 100 groups of members looking to us for help. A little money goes a long way in some of these fields.

Will you not join our dollar crusade and become a contributor to our Francis Winlock $1.00 Memorial Fund? We want 1,000 names.

The I. C. C. is employing five men for full time and six men a part of the time thus far this year.

We have given aid in quarterage to eight churches. Four of these can take care of themselves without further aid from us.

Last year 187 churches contributed to state work, a gain of 44 churches over the previous year.

Last year 245 churches gave nothing to state work.

We hope to secure an offering from 350 churches this year. See that your church is in the number.

Our I. C. C. is doing a glorious work, but without more money it will break down.

Sustain state missions and then all missions will have a basis on which to live.

Let me know if I can send you facts, figures, tracts or envelopes—all of them helpful in taking the offering—the largest Iowa has yet known for state missions.

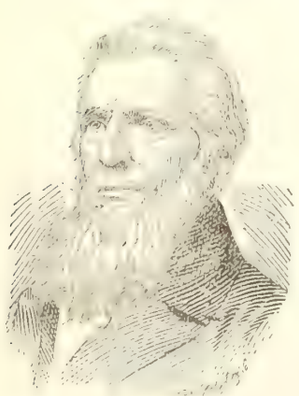
Debate on Roman Catholicism.

For four centuries the conflict between Protestantism and Romanism has raged. There have been battles innumerable, of one kind or another, but ONLY ONCE have representative champions of the two faiths met in fair, open, public debate. This debate was held in Cincinnati between

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL,
The Great Reformer of the Century.

JOHN B. PURCELL,
Archbishop of the Roman Church.

This debate has been aptly termed "A Battle of Giants." Purcell was one of the brightest minds in the hierarchy in America. Campbell was a master of learning, logic and eloquence. For eight days they battled. What was the result? Though challenged again and again, and yet again, Rome has never permitted another champion to meet a representative Protestant upon equal terms in public debate. Before the Campbell-Purcell debate, the contestants agreed that the debate should be stenographically reported, published in book form and distributed. This was done, and to-day we have the great argument, reported verbatim, in the form of the volume "A Debate on the Roman Catholic Religion," now published by the Christian Publishing Co. It is a great book, which will never grow old. Romanism is a live question to-day. Americans are having brought to their attention the Romanism of Porto Rico and the Philippines Our government will have the Roman problem to deal with at an early day There is no better book than this from which to learn of the nature and spirit of Romanism.



A REDUCTION IN PRICE.

"A Debate on the Roman Catholic Religion" has been sold for $1.50, and never less. A number of persons have recently urged us, in view of the value of the book and need of its wider circulation, to reduce the price We have decided to do so, and now offer the splendid volume of 360 pages, bound in cloth, red edges, for One Dollar.

ANDERSON.

Your committee, appointed to draft resolutions on the death of Bro. F. M. Anderson, which occurred on March 14, 1900, submit their resolutions, as follows:

Whereas, We have received the sad news of the unfortunate accident by which Bro. F. M. Anderson, a member of this congregation, was called from his earthly toilings to his eternal reward and and rest; and whereas, we desire to express our highest appreciation of his life and labors; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we bow submissively to the ending of his useful life and career, we are deeply and sorely grieved, but sorrow not as those who have no hope.

2. That in his death this congregation has lost a most valuable and exemplary member, a wise counselor, a tireless laborer, a liberal and unselfish supporter, a devoted brother in Christ, a faithful exponent of the religion of the Master and a beloved former pastor; and that our state missions have sustained the loss of a great and successful worker and the Christian Church a devout and faithful minister.

3. That we tender his family our profoundest sympathy, and sorrow with them in their great affliction and loss, and earnestly pray God to bless, comfort and sustain them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, sent his family, and request that the same be published in the Christian Tribune, the Christian Standard, the Christian Guide and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

J. A. SPENCER, chairman.

Patton St. Christian Church, Danville, Va., March 19, 1900.

BARCLAY.

W. H. Barclay was born near Toronto, Canada, in the year 1846, and departed this life Feb. 18th, 1900. He had been sick for about a year, but confined to his bed only a part of the time. Heart trouble was the cause of his death. He lived a consistent Christian life. He leaves a wife, two sons and two daughters to mourn his loss. F. L B.

CLARKSON.

As previously mentioned in these columns, Sister Loulie C. Clarkson, of this city, departed this life on March 6, after a long and painful illness. Sister Clarkson was born in Virginia in 1847. In her early girlhood she confessed her faith in Christ and was baptized under the preaching of one of the Virginia pioneers. After her marriage in Richmond, Va., in 1866, to James L. Clarkson, they moved to Adel, Ia., where they resided until their removal to this city, about 18 years ago. Sister Clarkson was an active worker in the church, which she loved devotedly, and was a woman of deep religious conviction. She was a most tender and affectionate mother. She possessed large Christian hospitality, characteristic of the people of the South, and she delighted to make people welcome in her home. In the church she was accustomed to greet strangers and give them a hearty welcome. For many months she had been a great sufferer from an incurable disease. She herself, however, was hopeful and spoke of lines of church work she desired to take up when she recovered. But this was not to be. And when the inevitable became known to her she told her family that she was not afraid to die. She met death as she had met life's duties, with a brave heart and an unwavering faith. The funeral services at the Central Christian Church were largely attended, for there were many who knew and loved her. Some words of comfort were spoken by the editor of this paper, an old-time friend, and two of her favorite hymns were sung very sweetly and tenderly by Charles Humphrey, after which the remains were deposited in our beautiful Bellefontaine Cemetery. Sister Clarkson leaves a husband, two sons and three daughters, all of whom she lived to see reach years of responsibility and most of them married. Her sister, Mrs. Stacy, of Richmond, herself a widow, was present during much of her sister's illness and was permitted to be with her at the closing hours. Our deepest sympathies go out to the bereaved family. They have a rich legacy, however, in the memory of a noble and consecrated Christian life. They are consoled by the fact that their temporary loss is her eternal gain. Thank God for the country whose inhabitants never get sick, and in which there shall be no more pain, neither sorrow nor death. J. H. G.

JORDAN.

Harvel Jordan was born in Bedford Co., Va., Nov. 15, 1815, and died at his home, Hannibal, Mo., March, 11, 1900. His grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution and his father in the war of 1812. His parents moved to Monroe Co., Mo., in 1831, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in a log schoolhouse. He farmed until 1846, then he came to Hannibal. He was one of the most prominent citizens, and during the dark period of the civil war suffered great financial loss, but gained in the strengthening of his real manhood. He has been a member of the Christian Church since 18 years of age. He was a liberal giver to the church and the needy. He was always kind and unusually thoughtful for the welfare of others. He lived so high up in the atmosphere of truth that he was never tempted to violate conscience for financial gain. Though quite deaf in later years it did not keep him from the house of God. His faithful Christian companion preceded him about six years ago. He leaves two children, Mrs. Smiley and Mrs. Darlington, who tenderly cared for him in his brief illness. He will be greatly missed in the home and in the church. His life has been a benediction to our city. LEVI MARSHALL.

RHEA.

Miss Kate Rhea was born Nov. 10, 1856, and died March 4, 1900. Miss Rhea was a Kansas pioneer, lived a life crowded with toil and achieved much for one of her sex, even in this age of women. At 16 she began teaching school in this (Woodson) county and taught continuously until 1886, when she was elected county superintendent. In 1890 she was re-elected. Not a politician, she had an acquaintanceship exceeded by few men, and she had an abiding influence in county affairs. Baptized by Elder Cottingham in 1872 and a charter member of the Yates Center Christian Church. She gave freely of her time and money in Sunday-school work. For some years her health had been breaking, the to-be-expected result of so strenuous a life. Elder G. H. Lamb conducted funeral exercises at the farm house, which had been her home for thirty years, and paid an eloquent tribute to her worth and work.

M. A. RHEA.

RULE.

Died, at the residence of her son, A. E. Rule, in Pike County, Mo., Feb. 28, 1900, Mrs. Sarah M. Rule (nee Atkisson). She was born in Louisville, Ky., Aug. 22, 1822, and came to Missouri at the age of 18. She was married to William Griffin Rule on Feb. 7, 1846. To them were born three sons and one daughter. Her husband died in 1890. One son, and also the daughter, had passed into the unseen before her, leaving two sons and and many kindred and friends to mourn her absence. Sister Rule united with the Baptist Church in 1839. About 1860 she and her husband united with the Christian Church. Something over six years ago she put her membership in the Christian Church in Louisiana, where she remained an honored member to the hour of her death. In the relation of wife, mother, neighbor and Christian she was ever found among the faithful. Her memory will ever be sweet to her sons and kindred, while the hope of meeting her in the home above will be a strong incentive to a Christly life. The funeral was conducted in the Presbyterian Church at Grassy Creek, March 2nd, by the writer. E J. LAMPTON.

SIMPSON.

Georga Riley Simpson, county superintendent of schools at Faribault, Minn., died at the Sanitarium in Chicago, whither he had gone for treatment. Bro. Simpson, although living for a number of years in a community in which there was no church of his own faith, remained a devoted adherent to his own convictions, while at the same time he was an active worker in the Methodist congregation. He was born in Richland County, Wis., in 1851 and was graduated from Carleton College in 1880. Since then he has been engaged in public school work in Minnesota. He filled a large place in the life of the community in which he lived. His wife and two children survive him.

WOOD.

David Polland Wood was born in Amherst County, Va., Feb. 2nd, 1818. He was the second son of nine children. He came to Franklin County, Mo., in 1831 and lived there until the day of his death, March 16th, 1900. He married Miss Mary E. Ming Dec. 28th, 1842. He was baptized about two years ago by Elder R. B. Havener. He leaves to mourn his departure four sons and one daughter, also two brothers and one sister. The writer conducted the funeral services, at his late home near Villa Ridge, Mo., Monday, March 19th, 1900. W. F. HAMANN.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

EDDYVILLE, NEB.

J. F. Bridges, an isolated Disciple of Christ, who attended the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, after his return to his place of labor as agent for the U. P. R. R. at Eddyville, Neb., decided to make some efforts towards planting a Church of Christ in that place and requested T. A. Lindenmeyer, pastor at Lexington, Neb., to come over and preach a few sermons and get our plea before the people of that place. After considering the matter it was decided to hold a short meeting, which was begun Nov. 21st and closed Dec. 4, 1899, and resulted in temporarily organizing a church of nine members. A second meeting of three weeks closed Jan. 30, 1900, and resulted in 12 being added by confession and baptism, and six by letter and statement. Of these six are mothers and five fathers of families, two are teachers in the public schools, and one a young lady who will soon be a teacher, and four were school children from about 10 to 16 years old. A permanent organization was effected, and arrangements will be made to let them have preaching one-half or all of the time. Bro. J. F. Bridges, who is a son of Geo. T. Bridges, one of our Illinois preachers, very ably conducted the song service for both meetings and T. A. Lindenmeyer did the preaching. Of the number added one was from the M. E.s and one from the Catholics.

Asheville, North Carolina.

DEAR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Bro. Jno. Brooks Taylor has just left us after a month's stay and gone back to his pastorate at the "North Side" Church in Chicago, where he and his assistant pastor, Miss Eva Lamert, have done a great work. Sister Taylor and Baby Henry Myers Taylor are still with us. She was speechless with bronchitis and had to be carried when she arrived, and she now seems to be entirely restored by this climate. Bro. T. preached at "Refuge" one Sunday for the writer while he remained here with his sick wife. Sister Mary Walden Williamson (the daughter of our lamented Bro. J. C. Walden) has an excellent select school in Asheville, and she contemplates enlarging it very soon. Since we are in receipt of letters from all over the country from brethren who want to send their sons and daughters who are in delicate health here to school and for health, we do hope the brotherhood will in some way aid the college enterprise here. Also we hope that Bro. James Coggins, of Independence, Kansas, who had already had some endowment for a school here in his native land, will combine with the experience and prestige of our widowed Sister Williamson, and together make a permanent school at Asheville. The patronage of that school is now ready, both local and abroad. There are four small Christian Churches within a radius of a few miles of Asheville. A number of excellent families of Disciples have moved and now reside in Asheville. We had six accessions by letter and three by baptism at two of these country churches recently. One hundred thousand visitors come to Asheville and vicinity within a year. There is not another such place to scatter truth. Geo. Vanderbilt and his wife are a model couple for plainness and for charity. They reside in the finest country residence in America and they both attend church regularly at Bittmore, a small church in a village adjoining Asheville, and he acts deacon, passing the contribution box each Lord's day. It would take many columns to tell of his hunting preserve of 86,000, acres covered with every species of wild game, and his nursery and stock farm, which cost $7,000,000. Hundreds and even thousands of people are coming here to invest and to improve and to live, and please allow us to say to a multitude of inquirers that everything here is advancing in price and hundreds are forced to build because they can't rent. Some fine bargains are had here because sick persons who are wealthy come here and improve at great expense, and then lay down and die, and their remaining relatives offer their fine properties at a sacrifice. Several of these are here now. But those who write must "come and see."

The ladies of the C. W. B. M. have leased an elegant hall in the middle of the town to meet in. Our own church house has been rented out for a good price. Featherston, Williamson and Bernard have worked most nobly with only a very few men to and them. The "good women not a few" are the main dependence, but it does look now like they will succeed. We have some fifty or more Disciples now in Asheville, and no people stand higher socially, and they are not all poor. Bro. Button, who has resigned the presidency of the college at Morehead, Ky., has made us a visit, and we hope for his early return to begin the buildings for a Christian college for delicate young ladies. We are also hoping for the removal to this place of Bro. Simmons, of Clintonville, Ky., and Bro. Blakely, of Bloomington, Indiana, and indeed, many others who have written us to that end. We can say to all who have written for information that a church and a college are most sure to succeed here, and those who desire homes here had better secure them as early as possible. You will readily see the reason for this if you will visit this place. There have lately been nine additions to our churches in the country near by.

Another Chance.

So many requests for an extension of time from churches which have not yet completed their clubs of subscribers have reached us, and these petitions have been accompanied with such unmistakable evidence of interest and activity, that we have felt compelled to comply. To avoid any partiality in dealing we have decided to make the opportunity general and our club rate of one dollar will, therefore, be continued during the month of April. Your church ought to have a club of readers, and a further chance is now given for forming it.

Growing is a mild name for the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Booming is a word that has been overworked, hence we hesitate to use it; but it about expresses the state of affairs.

"The Second Congress" was a pronounced success. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was represented by four members of its force. CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST read-rs were present in large numbers. Fact is, nearly all if not all of the "congressmen" study our columns weekly. It's the way to keep posted.

Remember, you may obtain, without a cent of cost to you, a cloth-bound copy of "In His Steps." How? New subscribers to this journal may send $1.50 for a year's subscription to April 1, 1901. Old subscribers pay arrears to April 1, 1900, and one year in advance to April 1, 1901. Subscribers who are paid in advance now, send $1.50 for another year's credit. We make you a present of the book.

If you want to join with other friends of Christian literature in rejoicing over the splendid increase in the circle of influence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, you have now an unequaled opportunity for doing so. Your church needs a club of readers if there is not one already in your congregation. See that it is formed before April closes. If a club of twenty-five cannot be formed, take advantage of our offer of one year's subscription and a cloth-bound copy of "In His Steps" for one dollar and fifty cents. The book and the paper will be great helps towards the Christ-life. Write to us for samples, advice or information. We'll be glad to send any of them.

The past week has been a splendid one in the matter of subscriptions. They have come from almost everywhere; singly, in pairs, in bunches and in clubs. No wonder, when we think of the kind of a paper we are offering to our readers and the low price we are asking for it. We feel sure that, everything considered, the offers we are making cannot be duplicated.

Topeka, Kan., adds sixty to our list; Bloomington, Ill., sends thirty-eight; Fulton, Mo., reports twenty-five; Centralia, Ill., twenty-five; Beatrice, Neb., twenty-eight, and Joplin, Mo., twenty seven. Jacksonville, Ill., adds nine, making the list in that city sixty-eight; Springfield, Mo., increases the list there thirteen, making a total of eighty three. Hannibal, Mo., now has fifty families reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, having added eleven this week. Notable additions have also been made at Sac City, Ia.; Rockwell City, Ia.; Glasgow, Mo.; Waupun, Wis.; Auburn, N. Y.; Sturgis, Ky.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Belleville, Kan., and Buffalo, N. Y.

MAP OF THE TRAVELS OF JESUS.

NOTA BENE: A few weeks ago we advertised that we had several hundred copies of Stout's Map of the Travels of Jesus, which we would sell, while they lasted, at the reduced price of Three Dollars per copy. This offer was appreciated, and we have already sold about half our stock. The remainder will not remain long on our hands. When they are gone, the price will go back to Five Dollars. If you wish the map, order quickly.

TOO GOOD TO LAST.

We secured our present stock of these maps in a bankrupt stock, at a price considerably below the regular wholesale price. We are sharing the benefit of our bargain with the Sunday-schools. We cannot get any more as cheaply as we got these, and so cannot sell any more as cheaply as these are being sold. The former price was Five Dollars, and that will be the price when those now on hand have been taken.

PAST $5.00
PRESENT $3.00
FUTURE $5.00

AN INDISPENSABLE AID.

The International Sunday-school lessons will continue on the Life of Christ until the Third Quarter of 1901, Fifteen Months from now. You need this map in order to properly teach these lessons to the children. By its help the teacher can begin at Bethlehem and follow Jesus through his earthly ministry, pointing out every spot where the foot of the Saviour trod, up to the Mount of Transfiguration.

JUST WHAT THIS MAP IS.

It is a handsome map, mounted on cloth, varnished, with rollers, all ready to hang up. It is six feet long and three feet wide. It is a carefully corrected map of Palestine at the time of Christ. Colored lines show the journeys of Jesus. Every spot which He visited is shown in its proper chronological order. Accompanying the map is a chart, which gives in proper order, the places visited by Jesus. The plan is so simple that a child can easily comprehend and use the map.

The Map of the Travels of Jesus is the result of many years of study and research by Rev. A. P. Stout. It is a better map than others which are being sold for twice the money. Our price for this map, until the present stock is exhausted, is Three Dollars, charges prepaid. Send your order at once.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Senator Beveridge's speech on the Porto Rican bill was not listened to with as much respect as the senator and his friends thought he had a right to expect. The galleries were well filled, but most of the senators were in the smoking rooms. The position which he took was in defense of the proposition that Congress has a right to govern our colonial possessions without regard to the provisions of the Constitution. He maintained that if this power is denied it would be better for us to give up Porto Rico and the Philippines than to attempt to govern them under the necessity of giving them free trade with the United States. Senator Pettus, of Alabama, the oldest member of the Senate, made a humorous speech in which he directed the shafts of his ridicule against the young senator from Indiana and his eloquence. A test vote was taken in the Senate on Thursday of last week, on an amendment offered by Mr. Pettus to strike out the tariff feature of the Foraker bill. It was defeated by the unexpectedly large majority of 33 to 16. This makes practically certain the passage of the bill in its present shape when it comes to the final vote on Tuesday of this week. In its present form, as reported by Mr. Foraker, the bill removes the duty on foodstuffs imported into the island, but retains a duty of five cents a pound on coffee imported; it provides for the free admission of books and pamphlets printed in English; and limits the operation of the 15 per cent. tariff (i. e. 15 per cent. of the Dingley law rate) until such time as the Porto Rican Government shall make other provision for the raising of revenue, or until March 1, 1902, at latest. Governor General Davis, of Porto Rico, who is now said to be the originator of the idea of levying a duty on commerce between the United States and Porto Rico and the author of the original bill which has been ascribed to Secretary Root, estimates that it will not be possible to raise revenue for governmental expenses by internal taxation within eighteen months or two years. The necessary expenses of government, including public works to give employment to some of the destitute inhabitants, will be about $2,000,000 a year.

It appears that the purchase of the Danish West Indies by the United States is not likely to come up for serious consideration for some time yet. It is true that Denmark possesses some islands which may perhaps be valuable to us. The principal ones are St. Croix, St. Thomas and St. John, which lie a short distance east of Porto Rico. But there is certainly no reason to be in a hurry about the matter, and there are plenty of reasons to go slow. It is said that Denmark will not make any definite proposition to sell the islands until assurance has been received that the proposition will be favorably received. This would require that Congress pass a resolution authorizing the President to negotiate for the purchase of the islands. The question of authorizing the purchase of foreign territory is one which would be sure to give rise to prolonged debate and would perhaps cause fresh divisions in the majority. There are too many other matters of more pressing importance to be settled and too many other differences of opinion in the Republican ranks. It is not worth while to raise a new issue over a matter which can wait just as well as not.

The Boers have gained an unexpected victory in the neighborhood of Bloemfontein. Col. Broadwood with a detachment on a scouting expedition about thirty miles west of Bloemfontein fell into a Boer trap and was forced to retreat. On the retreat he fell into a worse ambuscade and lost all his baggage, seven guns and 350 men killed, wounded and missing. In his retreat he fell back upon the Bloemfontein waterworks, seventeen miles from the capital, but was subsequently dislodged from this position by an attack from a strong party of Boers who destroyed the waterworks. It is reported that President Kruger has boasted that he will be in Bloemfontein within a week. This prophecy seems comparable to the boast which was attributed to Gen. Buller some time ago, that he would be in Ladysmith in a week, and perhaps it is equally without foundation. It seems like a wild prediction, but at any rate the Boers have gained a decided advantage by this victory.

The death of Gen. Joubert, last week, was a severe blow to the Boer cause. For many years he has been the military leader of the Transvaal. Born in Cape Colony, sixty-eight years ago, and trekking north at an early age, he received an education of which the chief points were to shoot straight and to hate the British. It was he who organized the army on such a unique and perfect system that every man, without leaving his farm, received military training. As a result, the South African Republic, without the expense of maintaining a standing army, was able to mobilize an effective army as numerous as the entire body of its citizens, within forty-eight hours of the call to arms. His loss will be felt the less because his work was one of preparation rather than of active leadership in the field in the present war. It was he who defeated the British at Majuba Hill in 1881. He has been known as an impetuous and impulsive leader, whose headstrong measures often needed to be offset by the calmer counsels of Pres. Kruger. The British generals who have fought against him have paid the highest tributes to his military genius. Gen. Joubert will be succeeded in command by Gen. Botha.

The Delagoa Bay Railway award has been received with general dissatisfaction by those interested. A number of years ago a railway was constructed by British and American capital connecting Delagoa Bay with the interior. The work was done under a concession from the Portuguese Government, but the government imposed impossible conditions upon the builders and, when these were not met, confiscated the road. The value of the property is enormous, since it furnishes the most direct communication between the Transvaal and the coast. The stockholders in the road put in a claim for damages and the three governments, Portugal, Great Britain and the United States, submitted the case to the arbitration of a Swiss tribunal. They have consumed ten years in coming to their conclusion—perhaps it would be unfair to suspect that the arbitrators in their delay have had an eye to the $25,000 salaries which they have been drawing for their services—and the decision which they have now rendered gives the claimants less than one-fourth of the amount which had been generally expected. The amount awarded is 15,314,000 francs, or about $3,000,000. It is stated in many quarters that the delay and the apparent unfairness of the award have given a hard blow to the cause of arbitration.

Webster Davis, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, has placed his resignation in the hands of the President. During his visit to South Africa, from which he has just returned, he has become convinced that the attitude of the present administration in failing to interfere in behalf of the Boers is deserving of censure. He believes, as the result of the acquaintance which he formed with them during his stay in the Transvaal, including a sojourn in Pretoria as the guest of the nation and a journey in President Kruger's private car, that they are a worthy people and that their cause deserves the support of the American people and government. Therefore he declines to continue his connection with an administration which does not espouse their cause. He will take to the lecture platform and tell the people what he has found out about the Boers.

INDIANAPOLIS CONGRESS.

The second Congress of the Disciples of Christ has now become history. Like its predecessor, it was pronounced most successful and beneficial. If there were lacking anything of that high enthusiasm which at times marked the St. Louis Congress, that could be easily accounted for by the special interest which always attaches to a first successful experiment. But there was no perceptible lack of enthusiasm, and this was particularly true of the closing session, when the growing interest reached a fitting climax.

The first session opened on Tuesday at 2 P. M., the general chairman, Allan B. Philputt, calling the Congress to order. After introductory remarks, welcoming the delegates, he introduced the chairman of the first session, Z. T. Sweeney. The writer was not present to hear the introductory speeches of the general chairman and of the chairman of the first session, but vouches for the happy character of each.

The first session was devoted to the "History of Doctrine," and Hiram Van Kirk, of the Disciples' Divinity House, University of Chicago, read the first paper, on "The History of the Doctrine of Sacred Scripture," and was followed by Prof. G. A. Peckham, of Hiram, on "The History of the Interpretation of Sacred Scripture." These were both able and scholarly papers, showing research and painstaking care in preparation. We cannot give space to even an outline of these excellent papers. They impressed upon all our minds the truth that the Bible must be an inspired book to have successfully withstood the treatment it has received from both its enemies and its friends, particularly of the latter. Suffice it here to say that both papers recognized the methods and results of modern critical scholarship while they magnified that revelation which ages of criticism and study have shown to be divine.

The Tuesday evening session was devoted to the subject of "Education." We have deemed this topic and that of "Biblical Criticism" to be of sufficient importance to justify a little fuller treatment, and we have asked two different brethren to report the two sessions devoted to them respectively.

Wednesday evening was devoted to the discussion of "The Limits of Christian Liberty," based on the motto: "In matters of faith, unity; in matters of opinion, liberty; in all things, charity." Two able papers were read on the subject; one by J. B. Briney, of Paris, Mo., and the other by Robert Moffett, of Cleveland, O. Owing to the fact that these two writers took the same general view of the subject, and that there was no time immediately following for volunteer discussion, the treatment of this theme was perhaps less satisfactory than that of any other before the Congress. This was not the fault of the writers, but is due to the failure of the program committee in securing writers representing different views of the subject. There was a brief time set apart before the regular hour of meeting the next morning for the discussion, but only a few were present and the special interest had departed. The position of the two papers might be fairly characterized, we think, as favoring creed-extension from the personal, historic Christ, to include certain things taught by Him—the things "most surely believed among us." The opposite view, which made Christ the sole object of faith, was presented in the volunteer discussion briefly, but inadequately.

UNIFICATION OF OUR MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

On Thursday morning the question of the unification of our missionary interests was taken up and discussed, J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, Ill., presiding. Unfortunately, there was no definite issue to which the arguments were directed. On the program the theme was "The Consolidation of our Missionary, Educational and Benevolent Enterprises"—a scheme which has never been proposed, so far as we know, by anybody. No one has seriously proposed, so far as we know, the consolidation of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions with our other missionary societiets, and very few, if any, believe in the consolidation of all existing boards into one board. The practical issue is whether it would not be better to unite our home and foreign societies, having one convention, one set of officers, one set of committees, and have all the present secretaries and boards to be the secretaries and boards of that one society. This we believe to be entirely practicable, much simpler, and would permit a wiser use of our secretarial force than the present order, besides removing whatever friction may exist. The discussion was led by A. McLean, in a well-prepared paper, which was launched against the theory of consolidation. It was an able speech, but the trouble was that perhaps two-thirds of it had no bearing upon the real question as we have stated it above, though it did have a bearing upon the question as printed in the program. Bro. McLean was followed by an address by F. G. Tyrrell in favor of the unification to which we have referred, but as he was arguing for one thing, and as Bro. McLean was opposing another, there was no conclusions to be drawn from the arguments pro and con. Bro. Tyrrell dealt forcibly with the general principles involved, showing that unification was the tendency of the times, and that it was in the direction of simplification, specialization and in harmony with economic laws. The volunteer speeches were about equally divided for and against unification or consolidation, according as the speakers interpreted it, and the Congress seemed to be divided in sentiment in about the same proportion. We are quite sure, however, that if there could have been a clear-cut issue on the advantage of having one instead of two societies, using the existing boards and secretaries as parts of that one society, there would have been a preponderance of sentiment in favor of such unification. According to our way of thinking there is as much need for a fifth wheel in a wagon as there is for two distinct societies made up of the same people, to conduct our missionary operations. L. H. Coleman, of Springfield, read a very well-prepared and ingenious paper, in which, under the figure of a family, with the American Society as mother, he regarded the Foreign Society as a son, the C. W. B. M. as daughter and the various boards as so many grandchildren born into the missionary family. The logic of his paper was consolidation rather than unification, which is hardly practicable under the existing conditions.

SOCIOLOGICAL STUDIES.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to the above topic. Geo. A. Campbell, of the Christian Century, was chairman of this meeting. A. W. Taylor read one of the ablest papers of the Congress on "The Social Ideals of Apostolic Christianity." Any attempt to present an outline of this excellent paper would do it injustice. Suffice it to say that it was on the one hand thoroughly loyal to the Bible and to the spirit of Christ, and on the other to the new interest in sociological questions and to the demands for a higher social order than the present. The time which was to have been devoted to the discussion of this question was devoted to a special phase of the social problem in a brief address by A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, on the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, having its headquarters in St. Louis. He told of what had been accomplished in this line and pointed out the need for greater activity in benevolence to complete our effort to restore primitive ideals.

CLOSING SESSION.

The closing session was held on Thursday evening, with Jabez Hall as chairman. Bro. Hall gave a graceful introduction to the speaker of the evening, Prof. Graham Taylor, of the "Chicago Commons" and of the Chicago Theological Seminary. Prof. Taylor's theme was "The Civic and Social Obligations of the Church." It was a great address—great in its ideals, great in the moral earnestness and power with which he pressed those ideals upon us. The threefold function of the church in discharging its social and civic obligations was (1) to lift up the true ideal of life in the person of Jesus of Nazareth, through its worship; (2) to initiate efforts for the realization of this ideal, but not to be the executor of these efforts; (3) to supply the sacrificial spirit by which this work is to be carried on. The address was listened to with profound interest and was punctuated with frequent applause. The evangelical churches, he said, seem to have reached what is known in mechanics as the "dead center," and there is little or no progress being made, while some of the larger denominations are actually decreasing. He admitted that the religious body represented in the Congress seemed to be an exception to this rule, but warned us not to rejoice unduly at this fact, as we were yet in the dew of our youth, and that the time might come when we would be in the same condition. What was needed, in the speaker's view, was more of the sacrificial spirit of Jesus Christ in the church to multiply its power and its usefulness in the world.

Prof. Taylor is always a welcome visitor to any gathering of the Disciples of Christ. We like the man and believe he has a mission and a message for the church universal. In his introductory remarks he said that when one summered and wintered with a people he came to know them pretty well; that he had been summering with a number of our people for some time, and for the last few years he had been wintering with them in their conventions, and if this kept up much longer he would begin to feel that he had at least the spirit of adoption.

Following Prof. Taylor's address there were a few short talks from brethren, expressing their high appreciation of the address to which they had just listened, and of the harmony and courtesy which had marked the entire Congress. The universal feeling was that it had been a blessing to us all. A committee was selected on place and program for next meeting, consisting of F. D. Power, of Washington, chairman; Hiram Van Kirk, of Chicago, secretary; S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati; Prof. R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka College, and Geo. A. Miller, of Covington. The time will be the same as this year, and the place remains to be fixed by the committee. We understand that Chicago, Cincinnati and Denver have been mentioned, though the field is still open for bidders.

When the speaking had ended the congregation sang, "God be with you till we meet again," Prof. Jabez Hall, of Butler College, pronounced the benediction, and the Second Congress of American Disciples had come to a happy end.

THE CONGRESS AND THE EDUCATIONAL PROBLEM.

One of the most practical and certainly not the least important of the discussions of the Congress at Indianapolis last week was that on the education problem among the Disciples. This is one of the pressing and burning questions of the hour as shown by the programs of all our recent important gatherings. In the session devoted to its consideration at Indianapolis J. H. Hardin, late president of Eureka College, led off in a timely "statement of the problem," followed by F. D. Power, of Washington, and C. C. Smith in powerful addresses, concluded by a telling speech by Helen E. Moses. An interesting general discussion followed, showing that the Congress felt a deep interest in the progress of education among us. Bro. Hardin's "statement," printed in the official program, will give the reader an idea of the trend of the discussion, and the feeling uppermost in the minds of the brethren in regard to the duty of the hour on the question of education:

I. Endowment Funds.—What they are and why needed. Methods of conducting our educational institutions without endowment. We must give our colleges endowment, or they must perish.

II. Unity of Action.—Our people able to give. Mistaken ideas as to basis on which our colleges rest. They are to rest on much the same basis as our missionary societies. Local interests too influential in management of our educational interests.

III. Patronage.—Out of an estimated 25,000 young people of college expectancy we have fewer than 2,000 in our own institutions. Where are the others, and why not in our own colleges?

IV. The Remedy.—How are above unfavorable conditions to be changed? The answer thought to be in one word—leadership. Value of this in other departments of the work of our people. Our need of an educational secretary. How shall such leader be selected, and how supported? Answer to this not easy. Our committee appointed at Cincinnati will, no doubt, report the wisest course.

V. Shall we Organize a Graduate Institution?—This subject must sometime be taken up in earnest by our people. Shall we form such an institution, or shall we settle upon the policy of sending our young people to institutions already in existence for their advanced culture?

It was manifest that the leaders of education among us feel intensely and increasingly that a more liberal endowment must be provided for our colleges. Several of the speakers advocated the organization of a national education association to look after educational matters as our missionary societies look after missions. The "leadership" spoken of would necessarily involve the appointment of an able man as educational secretary to such an association, whose business it should be to superintend the whole field and look after the endowment of all our institutions of learning. Unification of forces and churches on this question is as necessary as it is in world-evangelization. Our colleges must be more liberally endowed, and must more generally secure the loyalty of our people in providing them with students, or we shall fall miserably short of our duty to this day and generation. No more important problem confronts us for solution than this.

C. C. Smith justly deprecated the pessimism that deplores the little we have done and the inadequacy of the provision we have made for education. He thinks an optimistic outlook and a hopeful tone, giving ample recognition and credit to what has been done, is more likely to get money than preachments of failure. If nothing succeeds like success and nothing fails like failure, we ought to preach success in order to win success. We have not done our duty by any means, but we have done well in consideration of the newness of our body and its lack of large wealth when compared to older bodies. It was felt on all hands, however, that the time is here for a great forward movement in the endowment and better equipment of our schools and in the larger enlistment of the sympathies of the Disciples in their educational affairs, and this is bound to come.

BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

The sessions of the Congress Wednesday morning and afternoon were devoted to textual and higher criticism; J. J. Haley, chairman. The opening address was by D. R. Dungan, on "Textual Criticism." The speaker characterized four incorrect and illegitimate methods which are sometimes employed, as the apologetic, hierarchical, dogmatic and rationalistic methods. The first is not a method of criticism, but a plan to prevent it. The second is based on a superstitious faith in the church and the priesthood, and presupposes a blind credulity. The third forces from the Scripture confirmation of preconceived doctrines. The fourth, which is only a variation of the third, starts with a presupposition that the supernatural is impossible. The true method, which has done all the good that has been done in this department, is the inductive method, which gathers the facts and puts them together. In illustrating these several methods the speaker did not confine himself to textual criticism, but dealt largely with interpretation and historical and literary criticism.

The first paper on Higher Criticism was by H. L. Willett. After showing how the critical and scientific spirit, of which the higher criticism of the Bible is a manifestation, was an outgrowth of the Renaissance, and that it has its roots in the same causes which produced the Protestant Reformation and the modern era in literature, art and science, the speaker distinguished between textual and higher criticism, and defined the scope of the latter as including investigation into the following points: (1) Integrity: Is the book the work of one author or many? Is it in its original form, or edited and rearranged, and if the latter, can its parts be separated? (2) Authenticity: Does the book contain within itself the name of its author, and if so, was it put there by the author, or inserted by a later editor? (3) Literary form: Is it poetry—epic, lyric or dramatic? Or is it prose—history, prophecy, fiction, wisdom, apocalypse? And what are its characteristics of style? The literary form helps to determine the purpose of the writing and the proper method of interpretation. E. g., is the early part of Genesis prose or poetry? Is the Book of Jonah history, like Kings, or parabolic fiction, like the parables of Jesus? This is primarily a matter of literary form. Qualities of style help to determine unity or diversity of authorship. Judgment of style is largely a matter of literary instinct and subjective judgment, and is attended with great danger of error, especially in matters of detail. (4) Credibility: Do the statements in the book accord with known facts? Had the author a bias or a special purpose which would color his narrative? Had he facilities for accurate knowledge? It cannot be demanded of the critic who seeks to determine these points that he shall first believe the Bible, but only that he shall approach it honestly and apply the scientific method rigidly. Belief of the statements made in the Bible is the result, not the presupposition, of criticism, The speaker gave a summary statement of some of the results of criticism which he considers fairly established and generally accepted by scholars. The Hexateuch is Mosaic in core and spirit, but in its present form it is a composite work, containing four documents of later date. In the historical books (Samuel, Kings, Chronicles) criticism has furnished notable confirmation of the biblicalnarrative. The Book of Psalms was the hymn-book of the second temple; David, though not the author of all of them, perhaps not of any great number, set the pattern and was the true father of Hebrew psalmody. Solomon's relation to the Book of Proverbs is similar to that of David to the Psalms. The date and authorship of Job are utterly unknown. The Song of Songs is a drama of a time much later than Solomon and has a value which well entitles it to a place in the canon. Criticism has sustained the authenticity and integrity of many of the prophetic books, e. g, Amos, Hosea, Ezekiel, Jeremiah. The same methods which confirm the unity of these lead to the conclusion that Isaiah is the work of two prophets, the latter of whom, unknown by name, lived a century and a half later than Isaiah, son of Amoz. Jonah is probably post-exilic; the miraculous element is no bar to credibility. Daniel, which was not placed among the prophets by the Jews, belongs to the second century, B. C. On the results of the higher criticism there is already beginning to be built a new Biblical Theology, and this in turn will be the foundation for a new Dogmatic.

The second address on Higher Criticism was by J. W. McGarvey, who represents a different standpoint from that presented above. Prof. McGarvey did not attempt to give a survey of the entire field, but devoted the greater part of his time to arguing a few points and exhibiting the errors into which the more radical critics have fallen. His definition is: "Higher Criticism is the art of determining the date, authorship, credibility and literary characteristics of documents." It includes historical and literary criticism. The history of criticism began with Ezra, who, according to tradition, began the formation of the Old Testament canon. The speaker here took up the argument of the date and authorship of the latter part of the prophecy of Isaiah, pictured with considerable detail and with some humor the scene when Ezra, Nehemiah and Zerubbabel met to fix the place of this prophecy in the canon. The argument turned upon the point that these men, or their contemporaries, who inserted this prophecy must have personally remembered the prophet if he had lived near the end of the exile[as Prof. Willett stated], and in that case would certainly not have attached the prophecy to that of Isaiah. [Prof. Willett, in his reply, showed that Ezra and his contemporaries did not live within a century of the date which is assigned for the activity of the unknown prophet; that there is only the faintest Jewish tradition to the effect that Ezra had anything to do with the formation of the canon, and no evidence at all that any one before his time had anything to do with it.] Prof. McGarvey, pursuing the history of higher criticism, showed how the criticism of the New Testament had begun in the second century with the attack of Celsus on the credibility of the Gospels, and especially the miraculous element in the life of Christ, and the defense by Origen. Origen himself questioned the Pauline authorship of Hebrews, then generally accepted. Porphyry in the third century assigned Daniel to the Maccabean period. Some objections to methods sometimes practiced by higher critics were stated: (1) Some critics deny the recorded facts because they do not fit their theories. E. g., they deny that the worship was centralized before the reform under Josiah, although Josh. 22 indicates that it was centralized while Joshua was yet alive. (2) Some assume facts which are imaginary. E. g., the existence of writers whom they call J, E, D and P, of whose historical existence there is no record [any more than there is of the writers of Job or Samuel or Kings]. (3) The argument from silence is overworked and misused to prove that laws did not exist because there is no specific record of their observance.

The discussion of the subject which followed the addresses was participated in by Bros. J. B. Briney, Shepherd, D. Sommers, R. Moffett, W. R. Jinnett, Henry R. Pritchard, B. C. Deweese, G. A. Peckham, D. R. Lucas and Z. T. Sweeney. Both the leading addresses and the discussion were marked by the greatest frankness of statement and by a careful regard for Christian courtesy which has sometimes been lacking from discussions on this topic. There was, from first to last, no insinuation against the Christian character, vital faith, or intellectual honesty of any one. The terms "moss-back" and "infidel" did not figure in the controversy, and only once were the words "rationalist" and "higher critic" used apparently synonymously.

Hour of Prayer.

BACKBONE.

(John 9:13-18; 24-34.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, April 11.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Blessing received from Christ should inspire boldness to bear witness for Him in the presence of His enemies.

A great and unexpected boon had been conferred upon a man who had been born blind, and who all his lifetime had groped in darkness; one who had never looked upon the glory of a sunrise or a sunset, gazed with rapture upon some charming landscape or stood awe-struck under the starlit dome while his soul took in the wondrous vision of shining worlds, floating like islands of light in the vast sea of immensity. He had met with the Prophet of Nazareth who anointed his eyes with clay and bade him go wash in the Pool of Siloam. He had obeyed the directions and had received his sight.

What a change! The world was all new to him, including the very faces of his friends. What a beautiful world it must have seemed to him! How grateful he must have been to his new-found but as yet unknown friend! How he must have despised the Pharisees' objection, that this miracle of healing had been wrought upon the Sabbath day! What better day could have been selected for so gracious an act? But the Pharisees, who cared more for their traditions than for human welfare, were offended, not only at Jesus for healing the blind man, but apparently at the blind man for permitting Jesus to heal him!

They first doubted his identity. "I am he," said the man with the newly opened eyes. His parents were interviewed and confirmed his testimony. "How were thine eyes opened?" A straightforward answer is given. (See v. 11.) In a few moments they repeat the question and he repeats the answer (v. 15). They then interrogated the man as to what he thought of the man who had opened his eyes. This, after all, was what they feared. The answer was direct and pointed: "He is a prophet."

When the parents had been appealed to, and they had confirmed the story of their son having been born blind, and his sight having been restored, but had referred to him for particulars, the Pharisees once more turned to the man whose eyes Jesus had opened, saying: "Give God the praise; we know that this man [Jesus] is a sinner." "Well," said the sharp-witted man, whose mind seems to have been opened along with his eyes, "however that may be, one thing I know: whereas I was blind, now I see." On that basis of fact he was prepared to stand.

Blessed is the man who has a basis of fact in his religious experience, and can say to all doubters: "Whereas I was a liar, or a libertine, or a drunkard, or a thief, or an ungrateful, worldly-minded man, living a selfish, sinful life, or a self-righteous man who felt no need of repentance, now I see my relation to God and to my fellowmen, am rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven and in daily, conscious fellowship with God."

Once more they ask: "What did he do to thee? How did he open thine eyes?" (v. 26.) Here was an evident purpose to get the man away from his stronghold of fact to some explanation or philosophy of the fact. If he had said, "I think there was some virtue in the clay and spittle," or "It was probably the effect of the mind acting on the visual organs," what an opening there would have been for argument! And in disproving his theory they would have felt that they had disposed of his fact. He declines to be caught in that trap, and soon has his questioners on the defense. They say: "We know that God spake unto Moses; as for this fellow we know not whence he is" (v. 29).

It is now his opportunity: "Why, here is the marvelous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes!" This is more marvelous than the miracle that offends you—that a deed of infinite power and of tender grace like that is no credential of the man who performs it, and he may be of the devil! When did Satan turn benefactor and go to relieving the afflictions and sorrows of men? Who gave Satan the power to open blind eyes, even if he desired to do that sort of work? To the honest mind of a man whose eyes had been opened the proposition was absurd in the highest degree. Only God, and those whom God endorses, can open the eyes of one born blind!

And so he who had received sight from Jesus bore testimony for Him, even though he was cast out of the synagogue for so doing. Would you have done as much? Are you bold enough to give your witness for Christ and for His truth, when and where it is unpopular, and may cost you position, popularity, friends? Are you willing to speak a word for Him, even in the prayer-meeting, surrounded by sympathetic friends? Christ came into this world to open the eyes of our understanding, to give us moral and spiritual vision. We are indebted to Him for whatever spiritual light we enjoy and for whatever improvement there may have been in our lives and characters since we came to know and love Him. His power to give us a vision of God and of spiritual realities is the proof of His divine character and mission. Let us bear our testimony to Him who hath delivered us from the kingdom of darkness and hath translated us into the kingdom of light.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, most gracious Father, that Thy Son came into this world to open the eyes of the blind and to give us spiritual understanding. We are grateful for all the light and life which we have received from Him, and we pray for courage to bear witness to Him always, and for grace so to live as to show forth the divine power that is in Him. In His name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

If the Easy Chair were composing a prayer for daily use it should contain a petition like this: "Lord, deliver me from being a partisan in politics, religion, or anything else, and help me to maintain an open door and a cordial welcome for all truth!" The more we see of the baneful effects of partisan bias in paralyzing the mind and unfitting it to weigh facts and principles, the more do we deprecate the prevalence of party spirit. This is saying nothing against having political convictions and acting with the party most in harmony therewith; and nothing against having religious principles and being associated with that religious body which most faithfully stands for these principles. No man can effect any great good, either in politics or in religion, who does not do this. It is the subordination of truth and principle to mere party ends that is to be deprecated and prayed against. If any of our readers are skeptical about this being done, even by professed Christians, let them keep their eyes wide open during the next six months, and they will see an object-lesson in the political world. We do not have to wait to see it in the religious world. Like the poor it is always with us.

It is due to most of those who allow themselves to become the dupes of a party and slaves of party spirit to say that they are often unconscious of the abdication of reason and conscience at the behest of the partisan boss, political or religious. They are the victims of the partisan microbe, which is scattered among the people by a partisan press and by partisan leaders. The Easy Chair reads two leading daily papers, representing the two leading political parties of this country. The mere layman in political bacteriology, even without a microscope, can see the partisan microbe crawling over the pages of each of these papers. Even the news columns, especially the headlines, receive their color from the particular variety of the microbe. Being of opposite politics, the two varieties of microbes neutralize each other and no dangerous effects are observed. If one cannot find a perfectly reliable, independent paper that will view every question on its merits, regardless of its party bearing, the next best thing to do is to take two of opposite political faiths. He may not be so zealous a partisan by so doing, but he will be a more intelligent and useful citizen.

Speaking of political issues, we ought to have an exceedingly interesting and profitable political campaign this fall. Not for years have there been questions of such far-reaching importance before the American people. They are so difficult of solution and so vital in their relation to our future welfare that the people ought to rise above mere partisan feeling and prejudice, and give their best thought to these problems. They demand our wisest statesmanship, our loftiest patriotism. It is no year for sectionalism, nor old, worn-out political shibboleths. New issues are to the front, and the men who cannot deal with them in a broad, statesman-like way should be relegated to the rear. The two standard-bearers are already selected. The political conventions will only ratify what the people have already decided. Wm. McKinley and W. J. Bryan are to lead their respective parties in this great contest. They are both men of recognized moral integrity, and of a high order of ability. Why should we not have a clean, dignified campaign of education, in which there should be more light than heat? The partisan microbe is the only hindrance. To the extent that lies in our power let us neutralize its pernicious activity.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

It takes a favorable environment to supply a local attendance of appreciative listeners to supplement that from abroad in order to secure the highest success of a religious congress. Indianapolis supplied this, and gave us fine audiences at each session.

The local management of the Congress by the Central Christian Church couldn't have been better. The meals supplied for noon and evening were satisfactory, prompt, ample. The entertainment at the homes of the people was cordial and Christian. The music supplied was excellent. The pastor of the church, A. B. Philputt, who was also the general chairman of the Congress, was an ideal host and presiding officer, assisted as he was by his good wife. We all fell in love with Pro. Philputt, and—if he will permit it—with Mrs. Philputt, also.

The venerable and saintly Mrs. Zerilda Wallace was a regular attendant upon the sessions of the Congress, taking a deep interest in all that was going on. When she was introduced to the Congress by the general chairman as the only surviving charter member of the Central Church, and an associate and colaborer with Campbell, Scott, Creath and other early reformers, she was received by the audience standing and waving handkerchiefs. She made one of the best speeches of the Congress, and just to the point, and with a voice audible in every part of the building, though more than fourscore years of age, we believe It was a sight worth seeing and a speech worth hearing.

It was reported during the Congress that John S. Sweeney, state auditor-elect, of Kentucky, had been arrested for alleged conspiracy in the Goebel assassination, though we have seen no confirmation of the report. The feeling of indignation in the Congress for this reported assault upon the reputation of one so widely known and respected was high, and when Prof. Willett, of Chicago, read a telegram of sympathy and confidence, which he moved be sent to Bro. Sweeney, it was adopted, after brief speeches by Bros. Briney, Lucas and Harvuot, by a unanimous rising vote. It will take more than $100,000 to break down the reputation of John S. Sweeney, or to hire enough perjurers to convict him of any dishonorable act in connection with this unfortunate and disgraceful state of things in Kentucky.

One truth received a special emphasis during the Congress, which will probably be remembered: Our brethren are loyal to our colleges, and believe they ought to be patronized by our brotherhood; but no attempt to create a class prejudice against those who afterwards avail themselves of a university course will be tolerated. It is so contrary to the free spirit of our movement that nothing would sooner blight one of our colleges than for it to become known that it was opposed to its graduates going to a university for some special courses when they had completed its own curriculum. Some of the denominations used to warn their members against attending our meetings. They have probably learned better than that now, except in the extreme backwoods. The attempt to keep our young men and women from going to any of the great universities belongs to the same class of acts. It is not indigenous to our soil.

The following colleges were represented at the Congress:Butler by its president, Scot Butler, and about all the faculty; Kentucky University by Pres. McGarvey and Prof. Deweese, of the Bible College; Hiram by Pres. Zollars, Prof. Peckham and Agent Hertzog; Eureka College by President Hardin and his successor to the presidency, Prof. Hieronymus; and the Disciples' Divinity House, University of Chicago, by Dean H. L. Willett and Instructors Hiram Van Kirk and Errett Gates. The press was well represented: The Christian Standard by J. A. Lord; the Indiana Christian by E. B. Scofield; the Christian Guide by John T. Brown; the Christian Century by G. A. Campbell, C. A. Young, A. McKinnon; Briney's Monthly by J. B. Briney, and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by J. H. and W. E. Garrison. The Octographic Review, which, we are told, is still published, was represented by Daniel Somers, who told conservative members of the Congress that those of them who favored organs and missionary societies were in the same boat with the higher critics, only they were in the rear end of the boat, while the critics were in the front end!

THE PHILOSOPHY OF OPINIONISM.

CHAS. LLOYD GARRISON.

The last few years have witnessed the coming up of a new word, namely, "opinionism." It will not be found in the Standard Dictionary at present, but the concrete noun, "opinionist," is there; and it is only a question of time until its abstract cognate will find recognition among philologists. It is desired to express the idea of unreasonable or stubborn persistency in particular conclusions; the dogmatic and arbitrary enjoining of them upon others. To cover this idea, or association of ideas, the word opinionism has been coined. The process is not new under the sun. It is as old as language. The case instanced is perfectly legitimate and natural. Incidentally it furnishes a good illustration of the growth of words. Neither egotism, dogmatism, nor bigotry is adequate; hence this word was forthcoming. How it shall fare with opinionism in the uncertain struggle among words cannot be known at present, but it seems to start out with an inherent right to survive—at least as long as the idea for which it stands shall prevail among men—which, please God, may not be for aye.

Opinionism, let it be conceded, is indigenous to the soil which produced the restoration. We have no systematic theology, in the usual acceptation of the phrase; we have no confessions of faith; we have no rigid theological formulas—all of which produce a stultifying effect upon originality and preclude the possibility of vigorous, normal growth. It is the glory of the enlightened Christian that "he careth for none of these things." The theology of Paul and James and John is sufficiently systematic for us, in that it makes the way of salvation so plain that the "wayfaring man, though a simpleton, need not err therein." The basic confession of a personal faith in a personal Christ is the burden of our catechism. Everywhere spontaneity, richness and variedness of utterance are encouraged by the very genius of our position. But, as might have been anticipated, this very freedom has given rise to abuse. It is not worth while to grow hysterical over the matter, nor rend our few garments unnecessarily, but rather let us calmly and dispassionately inquire into the causes thereof. There is no lack of data upon which the philosophically disposed may reason at length.

Perhaps it will be not difficult for the reader to call to mind certain young men within the circle of his acquaintance who are predisposed to novelty in the matter of opinions. This outreaching after the new, the startling, the pungent, characterizes every department of thought and activity and betrays the restless, energetic spirit of our time. To aver that it is symptomatic of evil would be about as far from the truth as to declare that in itself it is necessarily good. Its moral qualities must be determined by other considerations. When undergirded by an abiding faith and directed along proper lines it will lead men out into broader and richer fields of truth, and should, therefore, be encouraged. If it recognize no anchor nor stop at any length, it will be productive of disastrous consequences, and should be discountenanced. It is with the legitimate manifestations of this spirit that we are concerned at present. Hence, the instances before your mental vision must be men of earnest piety, having at heart the best interests of our Master, emulating the example of Paul in their efforts to "preach Christ and him crucified." It is sufficient for our purpose that they have unusual notions, which may be so or not; but we assume that they are of secondary worth. Those by whom they are cherished, let us say, are convinced that they are essentially true and truly vital. Friendly discussion so far from dislodging them, has driven them deeper and deeper. Without scriptural warrant for so doing, unconsciously and by imperceptible gradations, they have come to regard these opinions as a part of the gospel which they stand pledged to declare. Unfriendly reception of their opinions they mistake for disloyalty to Christ. This begets distrust in them of their fellowmen and fosters a bitter and resentful spirit.

Not less difficult will it be to call up older men otherwise minded toward novelty in the matter of opinion. To complete our antithesis they must be orthodox and ultraconservative. As a rock preserves its fossil impressions of bygone ages, so these types, to meet our requirements, must retain the opinions of earlier days; albeit larger and better views may have obtained. They must be consistent with a vengeance. Of course, we remember that a right eminent essayist of modern times has urged that consistency is not unqualifiedly wise. We know that a wise man, who finds that the thing which he said with such gusto yesterday, is inadequate, distorted, false, will say differently to-day. But these ultraconservatives before us will not concede that they can have been mistaken. Hence, they seek in a dogmatic and arbitrary manner to enjoin their opinions upon others. By so doing they have put themselves out of sympathy with some of their brethren, developed their pugilistic propensities and all but lost the spirit of love which their Master so beautifully exemplified.

With these two distinct types before us, which have existed time out of mind, and not infrequently been arrayed, the one against the other, to the disparagement of both, let us seek for underlying causes. When a young man is "stung by the splendor of a sudden thought" it occurs to him that all men need exactly that thought to round out life and make it worth the living. When an old man becomes wedded to an opinion, by the law of association, it grows more and more dear to him, and he cannot understand how the world should get on without it. There have always been those who looked askance at the new. There will ever be those who lightly esteem the old. But the philosopher knows that neither age nor novelty can redeem the false or invalidate the true. An old lie is no less damnatory than a new one, while a new truth is not one whit less valuable than an old one. Intolerance is too often characteristic of both schools; and there are not wanting those who cannot brook opposition—who construe as disloyalty, heresy, iconoclasm anything and everything which savors of opposition. Because some men assert their individuality and accept or reject opinions at pleasure, certain "prophets of Israel," amongst both the older and the younger class, are disquieted and embittered. They feel that the time is out of joint, that all things are going awry, and that Israel is bowing the knee to Baal. May it not be that some of our prophets are smitten with an exaggerated idea of their ability? May it not be that this inflated conception of individual worth and insight causes men to confuse matters of opinion with articles of faith? It was doubtless a manifestation somewhat analagous to this which the old theologians were pleased to call will-worship, or self-imposed homage. And when a man reaches that state he will propagate his contented opinions hardly less enthusiastically than inspired truth. The truth, being of divine origin, finds acceptance with men; but his opinions, being human, are not always and everywhere received. Failing himself to draw the line of demarcation between the two, he feels that refusal of the latter is nowise less fatal than rejection of the former; and thus his righteous soul is perplexed and is spirit is soured.

Now is there not "a more excellent way"? So reason would suggest. It cannot be denied that every man of us has an inherent right to that thought which God has vouchsafed to him, and the further right of expressing that thought to others with what power soever may reside within him. But here his authority ceases. He has no recourse to compulsion. When a certain course of action or a peculiar view of religion seems to a man eminently right and highly beneficial in its tendency, or, on the other hand, thoroughly wrong in itself and profoundly ruinous in its effects, he does well to uphold the one or to condemn the other. Nay, more: it is his solemn duty in the sight of highest heaven no uphold the one and to condemn the other. But first of all, let him be assured that the view he maintains is in itself a right view, and sufficiently important. If this be so, the man stands for a principle. One of the grandest sights in the world is that of man—conscientious, persistent, heedless of opposition—standing for an eternal truth. He merits the respect and encouragement of all right-thinking, truth-loving men. But when the view is at most fanciful or frivolous, and altogether disproportionate in importance to the strength and persistency with which it is championed, it becomes a hobby—a perennial target for ridicule. It is a ludicrous sight, but withal a sad one—a man with a hobby; an opinionated man. Poor fellow! he chanced to stumble on a scintillation of divine truth, but his perspective was false. It assumed to his ken colossal dimensions. "He mistook a blazing tar-barrel for a great burning sun;" and, utterly oblivious to all views else, deaf to reason and remonstrance and related truth, he abides by his cherished view. His horizon becomes contracted, his vision limited, and the man sinks into a rut. Worst of all, he seeks to draw others after him. Because you will not relinquish your views forthwith and prove recreant to yourself; because you cannot see precisely as he, he rails on you—calls you a blockhead, a knave, a heretic.

There are matters about which men have no right to entertain opinions. With regard to man's salvation certain truths were revealed once for all through men supernaturally qualified for their work by the indwelling presence and power of the Holy Spirit. These inspired writers have clarified problems which hitherto baffled men; they have proved the sinfulness of sin and man's need of a Savior; they have shown how wonderfully the Christ of God meets that need; they have specified authoritative commands about which it were perilous to equivocate; they have laid down certain great, basic principles with which we are intrusted for application to particular and individualized cases in the infinitely varied and complex minutiæ of life's duties. By faith a man accepts these truths of God. In so far as his exegesis is right, the Holy Spirit is his authority, and the man apprehends truth with which he may challenge the world and by which he must stand or perish. But with regard to men's intellections it is otherwise.

And here it seems expedient to recur to a thought before suggested. There are those who fail, it would seem, to discriminate between matters of opinion and articles of faith. Upon questions confessedly not within the range of inspired utterance there must, in the very nature of things, be latitude for individualism. All men are not cast in the same mold. "Universal equality" is universal twaddle. That old inane catchword which the rabble has wrested to its own hurt is utterly at variance with facts and subversive of truth. In the marvelous diversity of gifts and individuation of mental traits we see both the wisdom and the benevolence of God. It is diversity in the earth's surface, alternate heights and depths, which lends charm to the landscape; it is diversity in the flora of earth which invests it with perennial interest for man. Likewise it is diversity in mental characteristics which makes social intercourse delightful and profitable. Growing, then, out of the very nature and constitution of man, designed of God with reference to his own well-being, there must be endless diversity of thought and infinite range of view. Yet, so constituted are we that our very own in the matter of thought and view is peculiarly dear to us. A close and vital connection subsists between our reasoning faculties and our emotional nature. It is given us to love these children of our thought. Some of them, alas! are misshapen, abortive, untimely brought forth, yet we love them as Touchstone loved his ill-favored wife, because they are our own. We love to dress the little ones in gaudy attire and present them to our admiring friends. If they fail to elicit praise commensurate with our ideas of their importance, we are deeply wounded.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

Without and Within—I.

A. B. JONES.

Man has a body and a spirit. The body is without, the spirit is within. "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. 4:16). The body is visible and material; the spirit is invisible and immaterial. The body is a reality and the spirit is a reality.

Religion, like man, has a body and a spirit. And this body is without, visible, material and a reality; while the spirit is within, invisible and immaterial, but also a reality. The Savior says: "Did not he who made that which is without make that which is within also?" This he said as a rebuke to those who gave undue importance to the outward forms and ceremonies in religion, while they neglected the more important part—that which is within, the ethical and the spiritual, a sound morality and a pure religion. "You make clean the outside of the cup and the platter," says the Master, "but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness" (Luke 11:39,40). And again he says: "Ye pay tithes of mint, anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone" (Matt.23:23).The body of religion is in the sphere of its objective life, the spirit is in the sphere of its subjective life. The body is composed of ordinances, rites, forms and ceremonies—the ritual observances of a man or church. The spirit consists of all those mental, moral and spiritual activities, enjoyments and experiences that are within the soul of man, and which form for him a Christian consciousness—a conscious Christian life and felicity.

Man's dual nature of outward and inner self is suited to his present life, is indispensable to his enjoyment under the conditions of this world. He needs his body. This puts him in touch with the material world around him. Through his physical senses he receives and appropriates what God offers him in the natural world. Earth, rocks, trees, flowers, water, air, light and electricity are all,through our senses, made subservient to our comfort and happiness. And this is the physical basis for his higher, spiritual perceptions and pleasures. What capacity the spirit has for enjoying this world, except through the body, we know not. But we do know that our loftiest spiritual powers are intimately associated with our physical organism, and through its senses we commune with nature and with nature's God.

In the same way the body of religion—the ordinances of the church and the forms of worship—becomes the means through which its spirit, its thoughts and feelings, its faith, hope and love, finds expression. This dual nature is here also indispensible. We cannot conceive of abstract spiritual forces disseminating and propagating themselves except through outward forms and ritual service of some sort. And when "that which is without" and "that which is within" are thus joined together, we no longer have religion in the abstract, but in the concrete.

There is also an interaction and a consequent reciprocal influence between the body and the spirit. This sensuous, physical nature of ours, while it may be the medium through which the spiritual man finds access to his noblest achievments and highest delights, yet it may, by carnal tendencies and self-indulgence, blockade the way of spirituality. On the other hand, the spiritual man may so diffuse its moral influence and power over the carnal nature as to bring it into subjection to the law of God. And in this way the highest attainments are made of both the physical and spiritual man.

This fact is especially noteworthy as applied to the interaction and reciprocal influence of the body and spirit of religion. How easy it is for our religious life to become formal; for us to be satisfied with observing the ordinances of the church; for all spirituality to be lost in ritualism. How frequently baptism is administered, the Lord's day observed, the Lord's Supper kept, without the heart being stirred and moved by the sublime thoughts and memories which these institutions were intended to make sacred and to perpetuate. And this sort of worship blights the spiritual discernment of men and dries up the fountains of reverence and devotion. A congregation thus led by a godless preacher will soon be in spiritual bankruptcy and moral decay, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." On the other hand, where there is an intelligent understanding of the ordinances and of their real significance and importance, they are not only divested of all fictitious and misleading values, but become the means of awakening the heart continually to richer experiences of spiritual life. The very consciousness on our part that we do a thing reverently because God has appointed it, serves to increase that feeling of reverence for him and all his institutions. It is thus we "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." A wise adjustment of the external and the internal elements of religion and their scriptural association insure, by their helpful action and reaction upon each other, a healthy and robust Christianity. But to maintain this normal condition of things, this just proportion in the importance of that which is "without" and that which is "within," to quell all discontents of the outer against the inner, and all tendencies to mutiny and riotous inclinations of the inner against the outer—here is an "irrepressible conflict." And here, too, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This contention for supremacy between the spiritual and the ritual forces of Christianity is a present and perpetual influence in every individual heart, in every church, in every religious body and in every age. It is, indeed, historic. A cold, lifeless formation on the one hand, and a spiritual, mystical fanaticism on the other, are the extremes between which the pendulum of religious thought and religious life has vibrated in all the past.

In 1831 Alexander Campbell, in replying to some criticisms of Andrew Broadus, a Baptist minister of Virginia, on Mr. C.'s teachings with regard to the nature and functions of the ordinances in Christianity, thus speaks:

"There are no acts of worship or of religion ordained by Jesus Christ that are at all to be regarded as outward or external bodily acts. 'God is a spirit, and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.' Vocal prayer and praise, though they are exercises of the larynx, the tongue and the lips; the bending of the knee, or the standing erect or falling upon the ground; the eating of bread, the drinking of wine or any other exertion of one or more or all of our organs, mental or corporeal, are not to be regarded as acts of religion except that they are exercises of the understanding and the heart; and no man of any sense pleads for these, as bodily acts, as of any importance whatever."

And again, in his debate with Rice, in 1843, he says:

"All outward ordinances (and all ordinances are outward), prayer, praise, the Lord's day, the breaking of the loaf, fasting, etc., have each a peculiar grace or intercommunion with Christ in them."

In the former case Mr. Campbell says: "There are no outward or external, bodily acts in religion;" in the latter case he says: "All ordinances are outward." And yet there is no contradiction here. In the former case Mr. C. was making the point that ordinances do not consist of "outward, bodily acts" merely, but as religious ordinances they necessarily involve "the exercises of the understanding and the heart." In the latter case he spoke with reference to the obvious distinction between "that which is without" and "that which is within" in Christianity. Notwithstanding there may obtain a legitimate, scriptural relation and co-operation of the internal and external elements of religion, yet the distinction and the difference between the outward and the inward can never disappear in any intelligent, adequate consideration of the subject.

Liberty, Mo.

For the following poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," we are indebted to Prof. Graham Taylor, who read it at the close of his address at the Congress of the Disciples at Indianapolis. Prof. Taylor himself lives "by the side of the road," at Chicago Commons, in a part of that city where men most need a friend, and the race of men not only "go by," but come into that house and are blessed by it.

THE HOUSE BY THE SIDE OF THE ROAD.

["He was a friend to man and he lived in a house by the side of the road."—Homer.]

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place of their self-content;
There are souls, like stars, that dwell apart
In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highways never ran—
But let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by;
The men who are good and the men who are bad;
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban—
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
By the side of the highway of life,
The men who press with the ardor of hope,
And the men who are faint with the strife.
But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears—
Both parts of an infinite plan—
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead
And mountains of wearisome height;
That the road passes on through the long afternoon
And stretches away to the night;
But still I rejoice when the travelers rejoice,
And weep with the strangers that moan—
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish—so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat
Or hurl the cynic's ban?—
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

SAM WALTER FOSS.

CHRIST AND THE SAMARITAN WOMAN.

T. H. BLENUS.

The conversation of Christ with the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well (John 4) reveals in a wonderful manner the spirit and genius of his splendid mission. The circumstance shows to us the Master in the double light of a Savior and an Instructor of divine truth. In this conversation with the Samaritan woman we have a model of great wisdom, in which we both learn what is to be taught to the sinner and the method of instruction. We are brought very close to the Savior in the suggestive fact of his weariness. We are brought in close touch with his human nature, his relationship in the flesh to ourselves. Christ seemed to forget his hunger and weariness when this woman with her sins and her future possibilities came before him. He sinks the wants and needs of the body before the demands of the human soul now in his presence.

Many a Christian worker would feel that he was justified by the circumstances in refraining to have anything to do with such a character as this woman was, an outcast, ostracised from decent society. Christ knew from the first the character of the one before him, and without waiting for more congenial surroundings, a more convenient season or a larger audience, he at once kindly, skillfully and in a wonderfully wise manner awakened in her sinful heart a realization of her condition and of her great need of salvation. From the thoughts and the use of the water from Jacob's well he directed her mind to the water of life. The woman is at once impressed by the wisdom and insight of the Teacher. At first inclined to stand upon the etiquette of her race in the presence of a Jew, she soon opened her heart to this remarkable Instructor and began to be an eager listener. She met Christ as a careless, indifferent and deeply stained sinner. At the opening of the conversation she inclined to captiousness, but soon this inimitable Teacher arouses in her mind a deep desire to know more of this wonderful information. She desires to understand. Her carelessness is soon gone, the caviling spirit leaves her, her mental faculties are at work and she asks for an explanation of the Savior's remarkable words. The Master has led her along till, with eager questioning, like a thirsty being, she asks for more and further light, and utilizing this element in her present condition he led her into deeper and more important investigations till her sinful soul is convicted of its sinfulness and as the sequel shows, she was converted.

The whole story is a splendid illustration of successful work. Though dust-covered, hungry and weary, the fearful, sinful and lost condition of one human soul overcomes all thought of personal comfort and personal needs in the Master, and he seizes the opportunity, oblivious to all else but the accomplishment of the one purpose, the leading of a soul out of the darkness of iniquity into the light of truth. He did not need a "big crowd" or a "big meeting" to enthuse or inspire him; one soul with its needs and possibilities was enough. He did not shrink from contact with this sinner, although he well knew her character and the nature of her sinfulness. His mission was to seek and save the lost, "respectable" or otherwise. What a lesson we here have presented to the Christian worker! Let us carefully study the methods of this divine Preacher. Let us imitate the skill and wisdom of his teaching. As he was not above putting forth energy, even in a time of bodily weakness, perchance to rescue one soul from sin, let us not wait till we are able to gather a host before we preach. It is often the individual, lowly, wayside work that counts most and best for the kingdom. It is the hand-picked fruit of the church that most honors the Master and is the most useful, the most spiritual and the most reliable.

Let us study the Master's ways. Let u imitate his lowliness. Like him, let us become unconscious of our own pleasure and happiness, yea, even of our own comfort, when we come in contact or become acquainted with the spiritual wants and needs of those around us.

PROFESSOR FAIRHURST ON EVOLUTION.

I. B. GRUBBS.

Two years ago the splendid treatise by Prof. Fairhurst under the title of "Organic Evolution Considered" was presented to the public. I read it with great interest and profit and promised myself the pleasure of a second reading. I have lately carried out that purpose and propose now to state the impressions that the work has made on my mind. I regard it as a most opportune and exceedingly valuable contribution both to the religious and to the scientific literature of our day. It is a scientific treatment of the subject in hand, skillfully conducted on distinct and various lines of thought, and a modest but strong and lucid refutation of evolutionists in different ways and on a number of grounds.

The author facilitates his task and handles his subject the more successfully by rightly distinguishing between two theories of evolution—the atheistic and the theistic. "Evolution," says he, "in the belief of the theistic evolutionist is due to secondary agencies working according to established law through all ages, under the guidance of the divine mind. The action of natural causes has been continuous, and it is believed by evolutionists generally that they are sufficient to account for the present condition of things in the universe. On the other hand it is evident that a failure in the sufficiency of secondary causes to produce a known result renders it necessary that the primary cause should come to their aid."

Those who take this view adhere to the teaching of their founder, Darwin, who speaks of "life with its several powers having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one," and all the rest evolved.

In the course of this admirable work even this objectionable theory is scientifically disproved, while the atheistic hypothesis is shown to be absurd, though entertained by some evolutionists. These contend that "beginning with protoplasm derived by spontaneous generation from inorganic matter, the process of evolution, acting through secondary agencies alone, has from this primordial protoplasm by ordinary generation and by processes strictly natural, but in no case supernatural, derived the countless multitude of animal and vegetable species that have appeared upon the earth." What becomes of this stupendous air castle after its foundation, "spontaneous generation," has been ruthlessly swept away by Tyndall's "thousand experiments," through which "he proved to the satisfaction of the scientific world that spontaneous generation does not take place from organic infusions; that so far as experiments show anything, it is that a living organism must have had a parent organism." Thus the very root of the whole system, instead of being a scientifically established fact or principle, is shown to be a very unscientific theory.

"There is no greater chasm in nature," says Prof. Fairhurst, "then that between dead matter and a living being, unless it is that between mind on the one hand and matter and force on the other. It is a gulf which science can not bridge. We have not even the aid of analogy when we try to explain the origin of the first living being."

Discarding, then, the atheistic theory of evolution, let us inquire whether there is any satisfactory scientific ground for the theistic view of Darwin and a number of his followers who suppose the Creator to have "breathed life into a few forms or into one," and thus started evolution to bring forth the existing multiplicity of higher forms. First of all, it is clear that common sense is on the side of our author in the following statement: "If the Creator could 'breathe life into a few forms or into one,' as Darwin thinks he did, without violating the law of his own being, and in accordance with the laws which he has established, it seems evident that he might at other times breathe life into other forms in accordance with his laws. I see no necessity for a logic that would compel the Creator to confine the number of his creative fiats to a few or to one, nor which would limit the fiats to one time." But the evolutionist, as the Professor shows, instead of scientifically maintaining the theory that the creative fiat was limited to the beginning of animal and vegetable life on the globe proceeds with a series of enormous assumptions, some of which not only extend into the realm of the improbable but reach far out into the region of the impossible. For instance, in order to account for the absence of a process of evolution by connecting links, "a lost interval is assumed, in which organic beings were numerous on the earth, but of which we have no fossil remains." "Here, then," says the author, "at the threshold, as a necessary part of the theory of evolution, we are asked to believe that the first half of the history of life is lost, and that during this almost infinite period evolution was steadily going on until it resulted in the various organic forms that are found in the Primordeal. I know of no facts to justify this boundless assumption. Besides, we shall find that this is only one of an endless number of similar assumptions that must be made in order to render possible a complete theory of evolution." Further on he adds: "That the record of this enormous period, during which the animal kingdom made at least one-half of its total progress, could have been entirely lost, while its ancient progenitor, the Eozoon, composed of similar materials, was preserved, seems impossible. Evolution says, however, that all these highly organized and widely different forms were evolved, and so she interpolates a record to supply the necessary unknown, equal in length of time to the whole geological record since the Primordial. By this wholesale method of manufacturing evidence geology is made to support a theory."

But the author, I believe, is even more succesful in testing the merits of evolution in considering the production of instinct in the lower orders and of the intellectual and moral faculties in man. And here the field of thought broadens out before us and we must commend to the reader a careful perusal of the able discussion of this branch of the subject in the treatise itself. Let us be content at present with some of the Professor's comments on the instincts of the honeybee, and conclude this notice of a most interesting and valuable work. It is well known that bees co-operate in well-organized communities in which there is a complete and accurate division of labor for which the different classes are specially qualified by remarkable and peculiar instincts adapting each class to its own sphere of labor and to no other. This co-operative work all goes on at once and results in the welfare of the whole community as though foreseen and intended. Now hear what our author says: "A colony of bees is not like a community of human beings, in whom many of the wants are artificial and which may remain unsupplied with simply a certain amount of discomfort, but the wants which the instincts of bees supply are imperative, and, therefore, the instincts themselves as a whole are necessary to the existence of the bees. Their instincts are all linked together as a necessary chain, so that if one should fail the community would perish. Each kind of work is perfectly done, and yet the workers are totally unconscious as to what will be the results of their labors. For the most part they work for future generations of their colony and not for themselves, and yet they are as careful and diligent as if they were guided by the highest intelligence and the most selfish motives." Further on he adds: "A colony of bees with their peculiarities of structure and their numerous instincts adapted to their organization is like a complete machine from which if a single wheel were omitted the whole would be rendered useless. It is just as inconceivable to my mind that a colony of bees could be evolved with all their highly developed and perfectly adapted instincts and structures as that a watch could be thus produced."

The workers among bees possess most of the important instincts—instincts that do not belong to the queens and drones. But the workers are neuters and leave no offspring. It is therefore evident that their instincts could not have been gradually built up by inheritance through many generations.

We have here, as viewed from the premises of the evolutionist, not only the impossible, but absolutely the inconceivable.

Scientia locuta est: Causa finita est.

Of late I have felt that the church was approaching a great crisis, and that while we have been discussing the nature of inspiration and petty critical problems, the great world, weak and broken-hearted and choked with fog and mist, has been asking whether or not there is a personal God; and while we have been trying each other for heresy, the multitudes have been turning away from the threshold of the Christian Church to wander in the darkness and storm. If I have seemed critical of the creed, it was because I feared that an overemphasis of creeds was making theology to be associated with scorn and contempt on the part of business men.—Dr. Hillis to the Chicago Presbytery.

Our Budget.

—The Indianapolis Congress was a great success.

—Good attendance from abroad and from Indianapolis and suburbs.

—It marks a step forward in our religious progress.

—Many of the papers read were of very superior value, and like those of the First Congress, should be put in permanent form.

—The demand for "Our First Congress"—the handsome volume just out—indicates that there is fresh interest being awakened among us in these living questions of to-day.

—It is none too early for the churches to begin to lay their plans for the May offering for Home Missions As the banner of the Foreign Society went forward, and not backward, following the Jubilee Year, so let the banner of the old American Christian Missionary Society be advanced beyond the heights gained last year.

—Great meetings continue in various parts of the country. The gospel, unchained and unencumbered by human traditions, is as potent to-day as in any age of the world. Presented plainly, truly and lovingly, with all the vast motives for righteous living which it contains, it seldom fails to accomp ish most beneficent results, and then only when it is not allowed a fair chance at the heart.

—At Watertown, N. Y., where E. S. Muckley ministers, the church held its third annual roll call and rally on the night of March 9. The rally was a success. A larger proportion of the membership responded than at the former rallies. The purpose of the rally was to raise $300 to apply on debt on church building. Three hundred and twenty-eight dollars were raised. The sum-total raised at the three rallies is $1,123. At each rally the people gave more than the amount asked for. During the last three years $1,250 has been paid on the debt and $250 raised for improvemen s and repairs.

—Elder Newton Hill, of Grenola Kan., at the close of a ministry of constant service as a pastor for twenty-one years, has been led to retire from active service and has taken charge of a lumber yard at Elk Falls, Kan., belonging principally to one of our brethren, C. A. Beurgan, of Moline. Bro. Hill says that this will give him opportunity to resume mission work at Elk Falls and Farmersburg. Bro. Hill is still preaching for the church in Grenola, where he has been pastor for the past eighteen months. Three of the junior members of the Bible school united with the church within the past ten days, and a deep interest prevails in the church. The Grenola congregation has some noble workers in it and some consecrated minister will find an excellent field in which to work.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian Board of Publication has decided to advance the subscription price of their church paper from $1.50 to $2.00 per annum on and after April 14th. This they say they are compelled to do on account of the increased cost of paper and the enlargement of the journal. This ought to convince readers of church papers that they are not bonanzas to their publishers. It was an exceedingly difficult task to make a church paper pay its own expenses prior to the advance in paper and labor, and of course, that task is greater now. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ought never to have been reduced below $2.00, but now that it has been offered to single subscribers at $1.50 per year we have not decided to raise the subscription to meet the increased expense as our esteemed contemporary has done, but are trying to enlarge our subscription list to offset the extra burden instead of that course, and the rate at which our list is growing shows that the plan is being appreciated. We trust that the knowledge of the course of the publishers of other church papers will still further increase the appreciation of our readers and their assistance in the enlargement of our circle of readers that we may continue to come to them at the present low price per year and yet with no lowering of our standard. There is more labor being bestowed upon the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST now than ever before and the effect is apparent in the continuous volunteer expressions of appreciation from our readers. And yet, Better and Better, is still our motto.

—A new paper has reached our table called "The Lost Friend." It is founded and edited by J. J. Stevens, of this city. The object is to establish a bureau of information concerning lost people, and this paper is devoted to the reunion of the separated or lost ones in all nations. The number of lost people in the world, people who are separated from home and friends and whose whereabouts are unknown, is far more than is realized. The number who are annually lost would even be surprising information. There is no question, therefore, about the need for such a bureau and such an organ, and we have no doubt that they will be the means of restoring many loved ones to their friends. The office of this Bureau of Information is No. 1 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo., where any information wanted within their power will be cheerfully granted.

—The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip sets forth as one of the reasons for its existence "the great need for more men in the church." This seems like a worthy object, indeed, but it strikes us that a better way to reach and remedy this evil is a more full and effective propaganda of the Christian religion. If Christianity has nothing uplifting and helpful in it for men no supplementary organization can remedy the evil complained of. We do not want to disparage the good done by the Brotherhood of A. & P., nor hinder its future usefulness, but the reason given is certainly not complimentary to the Christian pulpit. There is the evidence of degeneracy somewhere in the loss of men from the church, and we believe that the ministry is not without its share of the blame. We need a more masculine and heroic propaganda of the faith if we are to attract and hold men in the churches.

—The Ministerial Institute, of Central Illinois, will hold its annual meeting at Mason City April 10-12. Preachers of the district, take notice and be on hand, for a good institute is promised.

—Our letter from Secretary Abbott this Tuesday A. M. comes too late to appear in this paper. He states, however, that he is able to be out again and that he will attend the district convention at Springfield, Mo., this week.

—Our obituary department this week is unusually large and includes names prominent in the church. Especially are we moved at the death of Sister Benton, whom we knew when a student of the old Northwestern Christian University, of which, at that time, her husband was the honored president.

—In another place we have given a brief of each o the addresses and lectures of the recent sessions of the Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Association, at Palmyra, Mo., March 19-22. In this report we have only mentioned some of the leading thoughts of each lecture without comment or criticism. Each lecture called out a lively discussion, but of these we could not attempt a report. We should have been glad of a more extended report of the lectures, but our space will not permit at this time.

—The church at Princeton, Ill., lacked only 75 cents of giving four times as much to Foreign Missions as it was apportioned.

—Glasco, Kan., wants a preacher for half time. There are other points thereabouts also in need of a preacher. Applicants for this field should address G. W. Smail, Glasco, Kan.

—Elijah T. Butler died at his home near Salem, Mo., Thursday, March 15th, 1900, having passed his 63rd year in this life. Suitable obituary will be prepared for our columns later.

—T. C. Myers' meeting with F. L. Cook in Sedalia, Mo., has taken on wonderful proportions. The latest word by wire on Tuesday morning announces 136 additions in 19 evenings.

—Remember that we cannot publish lengthy communications that reach us on Monday and Tuesday in the paper of the same week. Such articles must go over to the paper of the following week.

—G. W. Hall says that a hustling, up-to-date doctor, who is a member of the Christian Church, is wanted in a county seat of 1,200 inhabitants. Address G. W. Hall, Ellendale, N. Dakota.

—Obituary tributes to the memory of Elijah D. Harvey, of Meadeville, Mo., and of Col. J. R. Estill and his wife, of Estill, Mo., all prominent personages in our church and educational interests in this state, have been received at this office and will appear in our next issue.

—The Foreign Society made a gain during March of 100 contributing churches. The receipts for the month amounted to $39,484, or a gain of $6,198.24. These are the largest regular receipts in the history of the society for any one month. We trust that the Home Society may have a similar good report for May.

—Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary, says that the work of preparation for the greatest offering for Home Missions goes encouragingly on. More preachers and churches have pledged to take the offering than ever before at this period. We urge all our preachers and churches to send orders for supplies, envelopes, leaflets, canvassing blanks, etc, to our secretaries, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, at once. Let us all work and plan and pray for a great offering the first Lord's day in May.

—G. P. Rutledge, pastor Third Christian Church, preached a sermon to his audience, March 25th, on the sin of slaughtering birds for women's hats. This sermon was reported in two of the leading journals of Philadelphia. The report of an order from a New York millinery firm for 20,000 birds placed with the Delaware pot hunters suggested the sermon. The sermon contains many statements worthy serious consideration by those who wear hats trimmed with bird heads, wings and feathers.

—T. W. McDonald has partially retired from active evangelistic and pastoral work. Having married the only child of a man who owns 340 acres of land in the N. E. corner of the city of Des Moines, Iowa, and who wants his daughter near him so badly that he will give them a part of the land, a new house for a home on it, horse, cow, chickens and other conveniences, has accepted the call and will enter upon his new field of labor, cares and duties about the 10th of the present month. He says that he does not intend to retire wholly from the ministry, but will work up Sunday appointments within reach of Des Moines. At present he is at Jefferson, Iowa. We trust that this information will not provoke envy on the part of less fortunate preachers. Unless poverty abounds the political creed of some parties will suffer loss. We congratulate Bro. McDonald on his good fortune and increased opportunities for usefulness in the mission field.

—The need for uniform marriage and divorce laws throughout the United States appears in the rush to such states or districts as have lax laws in these respects, especially as to the latter. It is said that "Washington, D. C., has become the Mecca for divorces," and for this reason an effort is being made in Congress to pass a divorce reform bill for that district, and the Reform Bureau is pressing the measure as embodied in the Ray-Platt bill. It is said that this bill, if passed, will also be a long step in the direction of securing a constitutional amendment looking to uniform national laws on the subject. All friends of this measure are therefore urged to express themselves to their congressmen on the subject and to urge the passage of the Ray-Platt bill (H. R. 6,641, S. 2,533).

—The Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., is the "national clearing house of all religious bodies and all Christian reform movements." Through this agency the Christian thought and sentiment of the country may be focused upon our Congress in the interest of any reform measure concurrently endorsed by the Christian people of the nation. This bureau has now been in existence for twelve years and has to its credit valuable aid in many valuable reform bills that have been secured. April 6th will be the 12th anniversary of Rev. F. Crafts' work as superintendent of this bureau and as a legislative reformer, and his work each year is an increasing evidence of his fitness for the place and the continuance of the work. But this cannot be done without the necessary support both moral and financial. The bureau is dependent on contributions from its friends and unless there is an unusual liberality the reform measures in its hands will suffer seriously. Checks for its support should be sent t Rev. Wilbur F, Crafts, 210 Delaware Ave., Washington, D. C.

—Among the papers read at the Albia (Iowa) Convention, was one on "Individual Consecration to the Financial Obligation," by Leander Lane, which received general commendation. We regret that our space will not permit us to do more than give a brief synopsis. He divided the financial obligation in two parts, one of a purely business nature, as in our dealings with our fellowmen, and the other those we owe to God. But these are alike sacred. "Centered in our inmost soul, deep as goes thought, affection and conscience, in the very intents and purposes of our being, must if we are truly Christ's burn as a refining fire, the white flame of honesty." All our outward acts are but the outcroppings of the life which is within us, and any dishonest action, therefore, reflects on the religion which we profess. The financial obligations which we owe to the cause of Christ are not made more binding by being pledged, but grow out of the relation to our Lord. This is a fact that is frequently overlooked. The building of churches, the endowment of colleges, the support of the pastor, or of the religious newspaper which bears to our homes the needed spiritual food—these are all sacred duties growing out of our relation to Christ. The example of Christ is referred to as furnishing the standard by which we are to measure our giving. Not only does our giving bless others, but it comes back to ourselves, enriching our own hearts and lives. Enlargement of heart will come from enlarged liberality. Sidney Lanier once said he did not try to develop his art; he was forever working on himself, and then he gave himself and all he developed within himself to his art. His character was thus reflected in his work. So it is with the preacher. "If the heart and mind are themselves attuned to the divine harmonies of truth and duty, the soul, as it is touched with the mighty facts and truths of the Word of God, will be as responsive as the well-tuned instrument under the hands of the master artist."

—A call has been issued to all Christian voters and friends of Jesus in the U. S. to meet in national assembly in Rock Island, Ill., on the first Tuesday in May for the purpose of formulating a plan for national action in political, social and industrial reforms upon the basis of the application of the teachings of Christ in concrete form to every function of our government, national, state, municipal and local. The movement is to be called "The Christian Political Union" and to be open alike to both men and women. A national committee has been constituted and all persons in America in sympathy with this movement are called upon to take immediate steps in the formation of state, county, municipal and local organizations and to be represented in the national assembly. We have not space for the full address of the committee, but have given enough facts in this paragraph, we trust, to impress you with the thought that there is something in this movement worthy of your consideration, and for further information and literature write at once to Wallace R. Struble, 1100 Woman's Temple, Chicago, Ill.

An Apology.

We regret that we are compelled to disappoint a large number of the readers of OUR YOUNG FOLKS, in not being able to fill belated orders for the edition of April 4, the first issue of the Second Quarter. After we had printed what we thought would be a sufficient number of copies to meet all demands, and the type had been distributed, additional orders came pouring in, and the edition was entirely exhausted, leaving a number of orders unfilled. Those disappointed in not receiving the issue of April 4, will receive that of April 11 and all succeeding issues, promptly.

THE CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.

—Missionary Tidings for April contains a fine list of offerings for the famine sufferers in India. It amounts in full to $1,032.82. The conditions in the famine districts of India are inexpressibly sad, and everything that is at all possible for Christians to do ought to be done to relieve their famishing families. The pictures you see of their distressing conditions are by no means overdrawn. Those who have been on the ground say their sufferings cannot be told. In whatever way we can send relief, then, let us do so. Whether by our C. W. B. M. or our Foreign Society it all goes to the same good purpose.

—Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president of the board of Temple trustees, Chicago, is still at work to save the Woman's Temple to the women and the cause of temperance. She says that all of the $300,000 due on the Temple has now been pledged but $80,000, and she hopes to secure this soon. She started out to get 100 subscriptions of $1,000 each and has raised twenty of them already. No subscription, however, is binding unless the entire amount is pledged, but it seems now quite probable that the entire amount will be subscribed. This shows what heroism and persistency will do.

—We are told that additions to the church last year under the ministry of our Home missionaries average 71 to each missionary so employed. Is not this a good reason for increasing their number? And this our Home board will be glad to do if you will place the means in their hands on the first Sunday in May. The board informs us that they now have more missionaries under appointment and larger appropriations than ever before in the history of the society, and yet the pressure upon the board for additional appropriations is "simply enormous." The board has had to go in debt deeply to support missionaries already in the field, and unless there is a large increase of offerings in May it will be compelled to reduce the force in the Home field. But it does not seem possible that the brethren will permit such a backward step. We need more men in the Home field, not less. So, then, brethren, it behooves us to put forth a tremendous effort for Home Missions. The time is at hand and every pastor, evangelist and member is called upon to do his duty in this hour of need.

"Charity Begins At Home."

Be kind to your body. Remember it is fed not by thoughts of what you think you'll do, but by the strong volume of vital force which the heart distributes. Treat your life's blood well. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a medicinal sister of charity, and aids to keep you in good health as nothing else can.

Pure Blood—"My blood was poor. I had headaches and but little appetite. Since taking two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the headaches are gone, my blood is in good condition and I have a good appetite." C. A. Hoffman, 580 Broadway, Long Island City, N. Y.

—The annual meeting of the 10th Nebraska District Christian Missionary Society will be held in Scott's Bluff, Scott's Bluff County, Neb., on the 13-15 of April. Free entertainment will be furnished for all who attend. Scott's Bluff is on the B. & M. Railroad, some 66 miles southwest of Alliance.

—The following information for those who expect to attend the world's conference on missions, to be held in New York City this month, will be appreciated:

The Evangelist, New York, tenders to all who may visit the world's conference on missions their courtesies of the office in the Presbyterian Building. We shall place at the disposal of our friends one of the offices on the floor with the Evangelist, supplied with writing materials and other conveniences. The room will be open at all times to those attending the conference, either as a correspondence room or for conference. A bureau of information has been established at this office, 156 Fifth Avenue, and all inquiries will be cheerfully answered. As you know, this world's conference on missions is to convene in New York, April 21 to May 1. It is probable that this notable Christian gathering will surpass in interest any Christian convention held within the past century. Persons writing to this bureau will be assisted in economizing on their expenses, and guided to such hotels or boarding houses as may suit their purses.

—Father A. P. Doyle, of New York, who has been delivering temperance lectures in various Catholic Churches in this city during the past week, took occasion in an interview which appeared in the Globe-Democrat to give St. Louis some good advice. The following is a paragraph from the interview:

What do I think of the prospect? I think the better elements of the community are not by any means pronounced enough in their condemnation of open immorality in high places as well as in low places. I have seen enough in my short visit, to know that a condition of affairs is tolerated here that would not be permitted to exist for twenty-four hours in New York. You have much that is attractive in this great city. You have a great people, hospitable, generous, law-abiding, enterprising. But at this juncture it is absolutely necessary that the men of influence and integrity speak out in no uncertain tones against the evil tendencies of city life. The American city is so constituted that it is not one bit better nor is it one whit worse than the people make it. Public officials do only the openly expressed wishes of the people. In view of this fact it amounts almost to a crime for the better citizens to be silent when gross and flagrant vice flourishes on the streets and flaunts its nastiness under one's very eyes. I never expect a public official to go out of his way to make trouble for himself, nor will he undertake a public crusade against vice through the higher motives. The ordinary run of public officials do just what they are obliged to do by the expressed will of the citizen who loves law and order.

—We have all heard of the man who, desiring to "say his prayers" every night, found one he thought appropriate and wrote underneath it, "Those are my sentiments," and pinned it to the head of the bed, which eased his conscience! Permit me to say of the recent commendations of the course of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "Those are my sentiments!" W. STEERS.

Personal Mention.

Chas E. Wells has accepted a unanimous call to serve the church in Prairie City, Iowa, and is already on the ground.

In our sketch of M. Ingels, last week, we stated that "his home is now Larned, Kan." We should have said Leanna, Kan., instead of Larned.

W. A. Meloan, pastor of the First Christian Church in East St. Louis, Ill., has been indisposed for some days and will spend a few days in the country to recuperate his health.

The church at Pine Creek, Ill., recently surprised their new pastor, D. F. Seyster, with a housewarming, when the brethren loaded the table with groceries and filled the hennery with young pullets.

R. L. Wilson, editor Register-Review, and W. F. Richardson, pastor First Church, Kansas City, Mo., called at this office last week on their way to Congress. We did not ask to see their certificates of election.

The editor of this paper, and W. E. Garrison, of the editorial staff, and G. A. Hoffmann, the field manager of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and D. R. Dungan, pastor of Mt. Cabanne Church, of this city, were all at Congress last week.

A. A. Honeywell, of Washington C. H., Ohio, has had his recent sermons on Dowie and Dowieism tracted and for sale at a low price. He hopes to counteract some of the evil influences of this ism by a wide circulation of these tracts.

The First Church, Paris, Texas, is making preparations for the State Missionary Convention, which will meet there June 12-15. J. N. Crutcher, the pastor, is now in a series of meetings with his father, S. W. Crutcher, at Pine Bluff, Ark.

J. W. Cameron, who recently went from Sioux City to Weldon, Iowa, was made welcome by an unexpected visit of the larger part of his congregation and their evidences of fellowship in the work. Bro. Cameron is pleased with the church in Weldon and its outlook.

Bro. Sargent met a warm and hearty welcome on his first Sunday, March 25th, in Mason City, Iowa, being greeted with a large and enthusiastic audience. In the afternoon and evening of that day W. F. Cowden spoke to large and interested audiences on the work of the American Christian Missionary Society.

J. M. Harris has accepted work for the church in Clay Center and Miltonvale, Kansas, one-half time at each place, but residing in Clay Center. Clay Center is a county seat, population 4,000 and a progressive city, but our forces are not strong as yet. Bro. Harris is expecting Bro. Speck to assist him in a protracted meeting soon.

Sumner T. Martin.

Sumner T. Martin, a good picture of whom we present to our readers this week, like many another good man, is a "Buckeye" by birth. He was born March 16, 1862, at Uniontown, Belmont County, Ohio. The other members of his family still live in Harrison County, where he spent his boyhood years at work on a farm, at which occupation many a man has laid the foundation for future success. At the age of seventeen he entered the McNeely Normal College, where he was a student for two years, after which he taught for the same period in the public schools near Smithfield. Reared in a Christian family he confessed Christ and became a member of the Christian Church at Hopedale, Ohio, at the age of seventeen. Soon after this his attention was directed to the ministry, and he entered Bethany College to begin his preparation for that work, in 1883. It was during this year that he preached his first sermon. After a year's stay at Bethany he was compelled to leave for financial reasons, but returned, and graduated with first honors in the class of 1887. Since his graduation he has preached at the following points: Marion, Kan., one year. It was at this place that he was married to Miss Leota Sheridan. He then located at Leavenworth, Kan., where he remained one year. After this he did some evangelistic work until February, 1890, when he located as pastor of the churches at Valley Falls and Nortonville, Kan. Two years' work at these places resulted in 250 baptisms. In 1891 he became state evangelist in Kansas and served one year. Since then he has preached at Washington, Kan., Wellington, Kan., Newton, Ia. From the latter place he went to Mason City, Ia., in 1896, where he has just closed a most happy and fruitful ministry of four years. The membership of the church at Mason City was 450 when he began work, and there was an indebtedness of $4,400 on the new church. The membership is now near 1,000, with the debt all paid and more than $1,000 improvements made on the building during his pastorate. He has baptized at Mason City 513 and received 131 by letter and statement, making 644 additions in all, besides about 100 added elsewhere. The church has grown in every department of its work correspondingly. The editor of this paper recently visited the church at Mason City, and was delighted to witness the evidences, on every hand, of the high character of work which Bro. Martin and his predecessors had accomplished. We found the most cordial and tender relations existing between the pastor and the church. He will be followed by the prayers and sympathy of the church in Mason City as he enters upon his work in the larger city of Omaha, Nebraska. The success of Bro. Martin's ministry in Mason City and elsewhere is a happy prophecy of the work he is to accomplish in his new field of labor. Bro. Martin's family consists of three bright boys and a baby-girl. He recently passed his thirty eighth anniversary, and is therefore still a young man with a great work lying before him, if his life be spared.

Explanation.

After careful and mature deliberation I have decided to discontinue the pastorate for awhile and devote my time to the Lyceum. Through the kindness of Mr. Robt. L. Taylor I have been invited to become a member of a lecture association under the exclusive management of Mr. De Long Rice, of Jackson City, Tenn. The association will consist of Gov. Taylor, Mr. Alf Taylor, Mr. Luther Manship, Mr. Geo. R. Wendling and myself. Mr. Rice has kindly consented to arrange a date for me to preach each Sunday during the lecture season, wherever my duties call me; my pulpit service will therefore continue, only in a wider field. After the lecture season closes I will devote some time to evangelistic work.

During the past few years I have given through the Lyceum about four thousand dollars to our struggling churches, and the various departments of our mission work. I hope to continue this work, and if possible increase it as the years go by. I am, therefore, not leaving the pulpit, as some suppose, but adding to that which is my very life, a broader field for the accomplishment of a grander work.

I am profoundly grateful to the brethren and friends who have stood by me in word and deed, from the day our new church was organized to the completion of our building. "It is finished" and our hearts are filled with gratitude. May our lives ever be the expression of what our lips can not speak. The sorrow of parting from the congregation I love so well cannot be expressed. A more faithful band of self-sacrificing, patient Christian workers I have never known. They have not only erected a magnificent building, but their spiritual progress has been even greater than their temple of worship. One item of their noble work is seen in the fact that the Ladies' Aid Society gave four thousand dollars in cash to the building fund, raised by their own hands, in fifteen months.

Although our struggles have been great, we have observed all the mission days and as best we could contribnted our mite to the home and foreign field of gospel work. We do not regard building a church an excuse for the neglect of missions.

The story of the Third Christian Church is the story of love, labor and sacrifice. The Recorder of the deeds of men will give to each due credit for every thought, song, word and act, and I trust above all will be written, "Well done."

Bro. Jas. S. Myers, of Philadelphia, has been heartily and unanimously called to fill the pulpit, and I am pleased to say has accepted the call and will begin the work early in April. Bro. Myers was the very successful pastor of the church in Sedalia, Mo., for about nine years.

He is one of the strongest preachers I ever knew, is a born general and an organizer of the rarest gifts. It gives me pleasure to introduce him to the brethren of Texas, and on their behalf extend to him a cordial welcome and bid him Godspeed in his new field of labor.

Historical.

The First Christian Church, Lincoln, Neb., was incorporated in 1869. It is, therefore, over thirty years old. When the congregation moved into the building (now lost to us) at K and 14th Streets, it began to call itself "Central," because of its location, but this was never its legal title; but for the whole thirty years its name was legally and properly what it now is—First Christian Church. About April of '98 some fifty members withdrew from the First Church and incorporated or organized under the name 'Central," since which time the First Christian Church has used its original name. Its membership is now about 275. We are growing and gathering new courage every week and the Master still has great blessings in store for his faithful followers. Since January 1 there have been more than 40 additions, mostly by letter, and two immersions. Our Bible-school is in fine condition, under the management of Miss Hallett and Mr. Perkins. Last Lord's day there were present 167 scholars. The church was never more in earnest or more harmonious. We have buried the past and invite all Christians to come and labor with us. This means you. "For if ye forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses."

About Women Speaking.

1 COR. 13:34 AGAIN.

If a woman may be allowed to speak in meeting, and if Bro. McGarvey can pardon her seeming presumption, she would like to see the brother from Nebraska more faithfully answered. Since the passage in question (1 Cor. 14:34) is one largely of monosyllables and "is a faithful translation," we have a right to expect that it be at least faithfully quoted. Typographical errors are not usually so accommodating as to bolster up an author in his pet positions.

Read for yourselves, you who have taken Bro. McGarvey's translation for it, and see that Paul said: "Let your women keep silence in the churches." Doubtless he meant the same thing when he wrote to Timothy, for Timothy was ministering to churches of the same type.

Any one familiar with the history of those times in Corinth and the surrounding cities knows well why such instructions were necessary.

One brief quotation will explain Paul's meaning: "It was only the women recognized as unchaste who were permitted to frequent public lectures, and to be on terms of equal association with artists and scholars" (Storrs).

Being so engrossed in the work of rescuing young men from the dangerous pits of Higher Criticism, it may not be any wonder that Bro. McGarvey has not had time to read up more thoroughly on this plain, practical and vital point. He sees no way out of the dire results which he prophesies will be thrown up to him as necessary from following the Scripture teaching. A woman takes pleasure in helping him out of this pit into which he has fallen, and also in preventing the Nebraska brother from falling in on top of him.

If Bro. McGarvey will read 1 Cor. 14:4, 5 he will find directions for the prophesying of both men and women. Let him read Peter's famous sermon and commit to memoay a short extract from it to help him out of any future dilemma of this kind:

". . . . . And your sons and your daughters suall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions. . . . . And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy" (Acts 2:17-18).

Now turn to 1 Cor. 12:28 and learn that the gift of prophecy is put above that of teaching, of healing, of miracles, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Then say in all sincerity, "Ye handmaidens of the Lord, accept the gift and use it for Christ and the church, and the Lord bless you."

If Bro. McGarvey believes that we to-day must carry out in practice every injunction of the apostles to those primitive and immature people, with their corrupt surroundings, and if this does not help the brethren out of their difficulty, a woman will gladly raise her voice in further helpfulness.

JUST A WOMAN.

[The above having been refused a place in the paper for which it was written, and dealing as it does with an intensely practical question, it is permitted to appear here.—EDITOR.]

Phœnix, Arizona.

I am now "the Bishop of Arizona," being the only preacher of the Church of Christ in the territory. Bro. L. O. Ferguson, who succeeded me as pastor of the church in Phœnix, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church in Modesto, Cal., and leaves for his new field of labor to-day. After an absence of almost two years, spent principally in evangelistic work in California and Iowa, I returned home a few days ago and will fill the pulpit temporarily till Bro. F.'s successor arrives. As soon as I have rested a little I shall go into the evangelistic work again on the Pacific Coast. The work in this city is peculiarly difficult, partly from the fact that this being a winter health resort the people are transient, and they do not take the interest they would if they expected to remain permanently. The church prospered under the ministry of Bro. Ferguson, and last fall a commodious and well-arranged house was built, but unfortunately there is a debt of $3,000. This will be a heavy burden, which it will take "grit and grace" to carry.

This is the driest season in many years, and unless there is an abundance of rain soon, which is not expected, there will be great loss of stock on the ranges during the summer. There has been no snow in the mountains and water for irrigation is becomming scarce. The outlook for the farmers and stockmen just now is anything but encouraging, but mining is paying as never before. Last year the output of copper was over 500 per cent. greater than in 1887, reaching the total of $21,000,000, and the production of gold and silver was almost as much. A very large proportion of the ore had to be shipped long distances to be smelted. Some Christian business men of Phœnix, recognizing the demand for a customs smelter, have recently organized the "Acme Smelting Co.," and will soon begin the erection of an up-to-date smelting plant. They offer excellent inducements to both large and small investors. Write the company for full particulars. Any sum invested will be absolutely safe and will bring satisfactory returns.

The congregation at Tempe, eight miles from Phœnix, has had a struggle for an existence. Twice within three years the hall in which they met was destroyed by fire, the church sustaining serious loss both times. About a year ago Bro. Hopper went to California, and since that time they have been without a minister. This is an important field, being the seat of the territorial normal school, and the church ought to have help. They own a fine lot, well located, but cannot build. It would be a most commendable work for the Master if some wealthy man or woman would sustain a suitable man at Tempe till the church there is well established. Who will do it?

His Terrible Cough.

Few things are so depressing and weakening as a constant cough. Few things are as discouraging as a cough that will not yield to treatment. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures coughs when all other medicines fail, because it is more than a cough medicine. The cough is but a symptom. "Discovery" makes new and pure blood, heals the lacerated tissues, and gives the body the needed strength to throw off disease. It cures the cough by curing the cause of the cough. There is no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotic in the "Discovery."

"I had a terrible cough something over a year ago and could find nothing to stop it, or even to do me a particle of good," writes Mr. J. M. Farr, of Cameron, Screven Co., Ga. "I chanced to see an advertisement of yours, and forthwith bought a bottle of your invaluable 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Before I had taken half a bottle I was entirely well."

Correspondence.

Colorado Letter.

The Disciples of Christ in Colorado have been peculiarly fortunate in the character of men who have served as state evangelist. Only three have served for any considerable length of time in this capacity. Their names are J. Taylor Sharrard, M. L. Streator and Leonard G. Thompson. The first-named now lives in Paris, Ky., the second in Canton, Ohio, and the third in Denver, Col. Bro Thompson is in the second year of his work as state evangelist for Colorado and the work is in better condition than it was a year ago. A rugged common sense has characterized our work in this state from the beginning.

J. Taylor Sharrard came to Denver in 1882. There was at that time no missionary organization. The Central Christian Church in Denver was not yet built. W. Bayard Craig had just come to Denver to begin his invaluable work in that city. As a result of a conference with the brethren in Denver Bro. Sharrard went to Gunnison. He was a telegraph operator and was beginning to preach. He supported himself and preached in Gunnison until February, 1883. In that year was organized the Colorado Christian Missionary Society. The American Christian Missionary Society agreed to give $500 for a year, to assist the work. Bro. Sharrard was appointed state evangelist. He had made a place for himself. His salary was fixed at $1,200. He was required to raise $700 of this in the field. After the organization of the Missionary Society in Denver Bro. Sharrard returned to Gunnison, not now as a telegraph operator, but as a preacher. His work was not confined to Gunnison; this was merely his base of operations. He took in the entire field of this great state.

He organized a church at Salt Lake City, after a three weeks' meeting. There were fifty members. Arrangements were made for regular preaching. In October, 1883, he organized a church at Salida and located a preacher. In 95 days he preached 66 sermons, organized two churches, located two pastors and raised more than $2,000 to support the work. In April, 1884, he organized the church at Grand Junction. The church at Aspen was organized in July of this year. Two thousand dollars were raised to build a house and $85 a month for preaching. As indicating the unsettled condition of everything in Colorado at that time Bro. Sharrard says that he left 85 members at Aspen, with a good man as pastor. In six months 40 of the members had moved away, the town was dead, and the preacher broke! In November, 1885, a church was organized at Glenwood Springs. The state evangelist held a meeting at Buena Vista in 1886, resulting in 35 additions and money was raised to build a house. The same influence was instrumental in organizing a congregation of Disciples in Lamar in February, 1887. A house of worship was also built in Lamar. The state evangelist spent some time in Monte Vista in April, 1887, where a church was organized. The congregation at Boulder was re organized, but the evangelist openly confesses that he failed at Ft. Collins. There are now good churches both at Boulder and Ft. Collins. In 1888 Bro. Sharrard left Colorado.

In those days the traveling preacher in Colorado was often in peril by rail, in peril in the mountains, in peril in the wilderness, in peril by water (fording swollen streams), in peril from snowslides and landslides, in peril among robbers, and last but not least, in peril among false brethren. At one place where the hero of this part of this story was snow-bound four days, the company consisted of a drummer, a doctor, a lawyer, two gamblers, a dance-house woman and a preacher. While in the midst of these perils the evangelist preached the Word with such power that the ice, which was two and a half feet thick, was cut and a penitent believer was buried with the Lord in baptism. One night the minister slept with a Mormon cowboy. At Buena Vista he met face to face Schweinfurth, who claims to be "the Christ of the Second Coming," or "the Messiah of the New Dispensation." Bro. Sharrard delivered a discourse on "The Credentials of the Christ." "The Christ of the Second Coming" was present with those who believed in him. The people became so indignant at the fraud that it was with difficulty they were prevented from laying violent hands on the arrant impostor. J. T. Sharrard is held in grateful remembrance by the older brethren in Colorado.

M. L. Streator spent fourteen years and four months in this Rocky Mountain region preaching the Word and caring for the churches. He was supported by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. His work was not in vain. The women were wise to enter and cultivate this great field. Not all of the fourteen and a quarter years were spent in Colorado. He was four years and three months at Helena, Montana. A good portion of two years was spent at Bozeman, in the same state. A house of worship worth $18,000 was erected at Helena, and one worth $7,000 was built at Bozeman. Galen Wood, now engaged in business at Cripple Creek, Col., was a coworker with Bro. Streator, under the direction of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Montana. In 1891 M. L. Streator became the Colorado state evangelist, meantime having the oversight of the work carried on by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Montana and Utah. This position he held until 1898. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, besides the payment of Bro. Streator's salary, gave $1,000 a year to the work in Colorado. There is not a state in the Union in which the Christian Woman's Board has so many friends in proportion to the Disciple population as in Colorado. When Bro. Streator began his work as state evangelist in Colorado in June, 1891, there were 30 congregations in the state; when he closed his work January 1st, '98, there were 41. Nearly all of our progress in Colorado is due to our organized work. But little has been accomplished through independent effort.

Colorado has now, in the person of Leonard G. Thompson, a model state evangelist. On him rests the care of all the churches. They are a burden on his heart. His efforts in their behalf are unceasing. In no state is our work better in hand than in Colorado. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions continues to aid the work. Year by year the congregations become more efficient and more liberal. But society is still unsettled in Colorado when compared with the East and even the Middle West. Colorado is a growing state. The field steadily increases. Everything moves out here except the mountains. B. B. TYLER.

Chicago Letter.

The session of the Missouri Lectureship recently held at Palmyra (March 19-23) seemed to be fully equal to its predecessors in attendance and vigor of thought. It was the writer's privilege to attend part of it, and meet friends of auld lang syne. The social features of our conventions alone justify much sacrifie to be among them.

The country parson has the upper hand. Think of it! He owns his home, keeps a horse and carriage, a Jersey cow and chickens, and his children play under the kindly shade of the forest trees that line his lot. He speaks to larger audiences than his city brother, and counts far more in the social life of the community. He marries more people, and his exchequer is enriched with as large fees. He has leisure for study. He has time even to incubate a book or publish a magazine.

He counts among his members the best people of the town; lawyers, doctors, merchants and bankers are members of his official board. And yet with all these riches, and more which I have not space to mention, he sometimes sighs for a city pulpit! In the words of the immortal Puck, "What fools these preachers be!"

At a recent meeting of the Chicago preachers the following books were reported as having been read by the different men present the week before: "The Life of the Spirit," by H. W. Mabie, "Growth of the Kingdom," "God's Education of Man," "Law of Psychic Phenomena," by T. J. Hudson, "The New Evangelism," by Drummond, "The Doings of Derryville," "Unity Through Diversity." Rev. Jas. W. Fifield, popular pastor of Warren Ave. Congregational Church, gave an address at the same meeting on "Thos. Carlyle and His Message." The feature of the next meeting was a lecture by Miss Mary A. Wadsworth, of Boston, on "Shakespeare's Knowledge of the Bible."

These messages from the outside are both restful and inspiring for the Monday meeting of the preachers. Miss Wadsworth gave a view of the work and worth of Shakespeare that was new to most ministers. She will spend some months in the West, lecturing on literary subjects, for which she is qualified both by natural ability and special study.

These lines are penciled in the Central Church at Indianapolis, in the midst of the second annual Congress. The sessions are highly interesting and profitable. Every possible arrangement is made for the comfort and happiness of the visitors, and they are many. Power is here from Washington, and Richardson from Kansas City, and the territory between is represented by strong, vigorous men in numbers gratifying enough. Chicago and Kentucky occupied the arena to-day (Wednesday). There was no blood shed.

The heart of Home Missions beats in the great city. At a recent Cook County convention—political—there were 265 saloonkeepers, 84 jailbirds, 17 who had been tried for murder, seven convicted of murder and jailed, 39 other penitentiary convicts, and 11 ex-prize fighters. "Come over and help us." FRANK G. TYRRELL.

Coffee vs. Preacher.

"PEOPLE POISONED BY COFFEE SHOULD LEAVE IT OFF."

"I have been a great coffee drinker for years and it has kept me in a bilious condition, with more or less neuralgia, as the result of general ill-health produced by coffee drinking, I have discovered that coffee is a rank poison to my system. Since we have been using Postum Cereal Food Coffee, we not only find it a delightful beverage, with all the good qualities of coffee, but it has none of the injurious effects.

"Any person suffering from nervous troubles, caused by the poison of coffee, should be able to get rid of the sickness in short order if such a one will leave off the cause and take up Postum Food Coffee. There has been no coffee used in our home for a considerable time.

"People who are poisoned by coffee should leave it off because, when one sins against his body, he dishonors God, 'for our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost.' It would seem that any one conscious of the bodily distress that coffee brings would have no trouble in leaving it off when Postum Food Coffee can be secured." Rev. John M. Linn, Pastor M. E. Church, South Corpus Christi, Texas.

St. Louis Letter.

We have told you of our need for a closer co-operation and better congregational equipment for successful church work in the larger cities, and we shall now speak of the need for a more effective propaganda of the faith. In the first place, our own brethren need straightening out and strengthening up on sound doctrine. Not simply on first principles in theory, but first principles of practical Christianity as well. There is a strong cry from the pulpit and religious press for deeper consecration in the work, but this can be had only upon a deeper conviction of sound doctrine in the church, and hence the need for a more effective propaganda of the faith.

There is a strong desire for successful evangelistic work to brace up the churches and renew their lease of life, but while present conditions prevail, the addition of new members from the world, even if soundly converted, is like putting new wine into old bottles. The new wine soon becomes as musty as the old. What seems to be most needed is a propaganda of gospel truth that will arouse these dead and dying churches. The present condition of churches in general may be fitly described as that of a deadlock. They seem to have gone about so far in conquering the world for Christ and then stopped, and so long as this condition remains it seems useless to go on making other converts of the same sort. The church needs to be made conscious of its condition, its surroundings and its responsibilities.

The fact is that the conduct of the church and its attitude toward the world has prevented Christianity from passing beyond the experimental state in the world's history. True Christianity has achieved great victories in the past, but it is equally true that it is confronted with greater foes to-day than at any time in its history, and whether it shall vanquish them depends upon the church. It is at this point that the church is faltering. What God will do with the church if it fails is probably best told in his letters to the seven churches of Asia.

That you may know that we are not speaking without reason, we shall digress from our theme to explain our words more fully. Take the liquor traffic for an example. Here is a gigantic evil for which there exists not even the shadow of an apology. And yet the Christian people of this land positively refuse to unite in an effort to overthrow it. Either they are unable or unwilling to do so, and inasmuch as they have not demonstrated their inability to overthrow it they stand convicted of an unwillingness to do so, and this attitude at once compromises Christianity and stupifies their sense of righteousness.

Or take again the question of municipal, state and national governments. What are the churches as such doing to purify them? Almost nothing. They persist in divorcing religion and politics, close their pulpits to political questions, discharge preachers who persist in treating these things as moral questions, stay away from the primaries, swallow their rotten party tickets and condone their party sins. Not all Christians do this, of course, but this is the rule. And yet, the wisest men of our nation tell us that these evils, unless corrected, will destroy the nation. Our position is that the present attitude of the church toward national unrighteousness compromises Christianity and defeats the purpose of its existence in the world.

Take another instance, the right use of capital. What are Christians to-day doing to turn capital into proper channels. Something, of course; but not what they might do, both in word and deed. Gambling to-day is a crime almost unrebuked in the churches; or when rebuked, reference is made to it in its least dangerous forms. There is a very weak public conscience in the land to-day on the methods of accumulating wealth, and less as to its distribution, and the question is coming to the front rapidly, whether money or righteousness shall govern the nation. The solvent we say is Christianity; but can Christianity in the hands of a faltering church do anything for which it was given to the world? is the question. If not, it or the church is a failure.

One other illustration must suffice for this letter, and that is the industrial or poverty question. That the church has never awakened to her opportunities and responsibilities in these things is evident from her persistent apologies for industrial servitude and consequent poverty. About the highest conception of duty yet expressed, of which she is conscious, is to deal out a few morsels of relief to "unworthy tramps," "footpads," "beggars" or "unfortunate fools." The rivers of joy that God would have flow upon the masses through the establishment of righteous institutions in the land is too utopian for them. These blessings they hold in reservation for the orthodox in the next world. Their ideas of national righteousness are so abstract that even the devil laughs.

Yes, we need a propaganda of the gospel; not of the gospel of truth only, but of the gospel of applied Christianity as well. The whole counsel of God needs to be preached anew to the church, and no minister's duties are half done who stops at showing the sinner the apostolic mode of baptism, or even how to find and become a member of the true church. The whole counsel of God comprehends God's righteousness in all of the relations of life. The first principles of the gospel are not faith, repentance and baptism, but sound doctrine, sound convictions and sound living; and these things can be had only under the influence of an effective, persistent and unencumbered propaganda of the faith. But of this we shall further speak in our next epistle. W. W. H.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Yesterday was a sweet, sad day in our little church in Milwaukee. In the midst of a March snow storm we closed our labors together. We had good audiences throughout the day. A most delighful spirit prevailed through every service.

This little church has some remarkable qualities. During fourteen years in the midst of many discouragements the faithful few have held up the banner of the Christ in this city of beer and pleasure. I have never found more faithful Disciples than some of the Milwaukee Church. The church is united. So far as I know there is not a ripple of discord among any of the members. If there are any offensive "cranks" in the church they kept under cover during my stay.

The two drawbacks in the work (viewed from my standpoint) are, too great a degree of conservatism on the part of the active members, and indifference on the part of many others.

The church has been kept back in its work several years for want of a suitable house in which to meet. And yet during all of these years it has been one of the most liberal supporters of our different missionary enterprises.

We have had about thirty-four additions during my stay. One lady came forward during the singing of the last verse of the last hymn of the closing exercises. Her brother is a prominent Methodist minister, and I think she will be a great help to the work.

We have recently received a valuable addition to our working force in the city in the person of Miss Matthews, who comes from St. Joseph, Mo., to take charge of the Y. W. C. A. Her work starts beautifully.

The church has not yet employed my successor, but they have their eye on a man. I enclose you a picture of our new church. Work was begun on it last week. We hope to have it completed by next autumn. The church will be under a financial pressure for a year or two, but we hope that they will be in position to move forward to do a work commensurate with our plea.

I start to Colorado Springs to-morrow. I know not what is before me there, except that I have heard many good things from Bro. Tyler and other friends there concerning the Colorado Springs Church. The call was unanimous without a visit, and I appreciate the confidence imposed, and I pray God to guide me in the work of my new field. F. N. CALVIN.

Los Angeles Letter.

George W. Muckley (which being interpreted is George Wants Money), our Church Extension secretary, spent last Lord's day with the First Church, of this city, and secured pledges to the amount of one hundred dollars per year for five years for the Church Extension Fund. He will spend two or three months in the state in the interest of Church Extension. He will visit many of the churches taking pledges and will visit a number of the churches where the society has loans and will urge upon the churches the payment of such loans. California has done a good part by Church Extension and Church Extension has done a good part by California. It was a wise business policy upon the part of the board to send their secretary to look after the interests of this field. California is a great state and is well deserving of more recognition than it receives at the hands of some of our societies.

The preachers of Southern California are about twenty-five in number, and a royal set they are. Once a month they meet together in their preachers' meeting. Their sessions are held with some church in the district. They all meet the first Monday in each month and hold forenoon, afternoon and evening sessions, discussing such subjects as are germane to the needs of the church with which they are meeting. The expenses of all the preachers attending are equalized, thus making it no more expensive for the one living one hundred miles away than for the one in whose church the meeting is held. In this manner the meetings are most helpful to the different churches in which they are held and afford a splendid fellowship to our noble preachers who are self-sacrificingly and heroically carrying on the work of our churches. I know of no other section of the country where such meetings are held on this plan. It seems a product of Southern California conditions, but one that might be profitably imitated elsewhere.

There has been a general response upon the part of our churches in this section to the call of our Foreign Missionary Society. Our churches as a rule feel resting upon them the burden of heathendom and their responsibility to share in the great work of the world's evangelization. God will pour out his blessings upon any church and any individual that will be faithful to him in this great work of the church. No church should deny to its members the privilege of sharing in Foreign Missions. If your church has not taken the March offering for Foreign Missions, do not let another Lord's day pass without such an offering.

I have recently preached two sermons upon "Baptism in the Light of Jesus' Baptism." The mode of Jesus' baptism seems clearly defined. There can be no reasonable explanation of John's presence beside the Jordan unless it was that he went there for the purpose of baptizing in its limpid waters. A very strong appeal can be made to Pedobaptists on this point. Jesus was a fit subject for baptism; he had arrived at years of responsibility and was greatly desirous of honoring God by obeying this solemn command of God and thus fulfilling all righteousness. There can be no question of the fitness of any subject of baptism who possesses such a desire This point can be forcibly impressed upon people and makes a very effective appeal. Jesus sets his followers an example in subject, mode and the results of Christian baptism. Why is not his example on this point binding upon us? After Jesus was baptized and while he stood praying the Holy Spirit in visible form came upon him and took up his abode with him. So the Holy Spirit comes to Christians after they have obeyed God in this requirement of his church (Acts 2:38). This fact has significance. It was not until his baptism that there was a public acknowledgment of Jesus as the Son of God. This fact has a bearing upon the place of baptism in the divine economy. In baptism the penitent believer comes into Christ, is adopted into the family of God and becomes an acknowledged child of the Heavenly Father. When baptism is presented in this light people, as it seems to me, will much more readily hear it.

The Disciples' Divinity House.

The Disciples' Divinity House, of the University of Chicago, has just closed one of its most pleasant terms. This was marked at its beginning by the incoming of Brethren H. P. Williams, F. F. Grim, C. L. Waite, E. M. Flinn and W. O. Thomas, all of Drake University, the two latter having studied also at Union Theological Seminary and Bro. Thomas being a graduate of Hiram College.

It has been marked at the close by the loss of three of our best men, all of whom go to take prominent pulpits—Bro. J. H. Goldner to Euclid Ave., Cleveland, B. L. Kershner, to Beaver Falls, Pa., and W. S. Goode to the Central Christian Church, Youngstown, O. Each of these men has made a signal record in the University. We should miss them more had we not the promise of the incoming of others to take their places. Bro. W. M. Forrest comes from Ann Arbor, Mich., C. M. Sharpe from Lawrence, Kan., C. A. Stevens from Trinadad, Col., and also Austin Hunter will probably come from Cleveland, O., and W. W. Frost from Hiram, O. The teaching of the past quarter has mainly been done by Mr. Van Kirk, whose course, entitled "First Principles," presents the materials for use among our people in evangelistic preaching. The coming quarter Dr. Willett will be absent on a lecture tour in London and other points in England. The residents of the house look forward with interest to the summer quarters when many prominent preachers are expected. Last summer's quarter there were 41 different men regularly registered, among whom were Jabez Hall, F. N. Calvin, C. H. Winders, P. J. Rice, W. C. Payne, J. E. Lynn and others. Besides these S. M. Jefferson, Levi Marshall, G. A. Peckham and others paid us extended visits. Our life was a continuous social, religious and intellectual feast. A like season is expected this year. The announcements are not yet out for the courses, but promise has been made of some prominent men from the East and England.

The work of the young men among the churches in the vicinity of Chicago is most encouraging. C. B. Brelos serves at Joliet, Ill, H. L. Atkinson at Batavia, W. C. Payne at Evanston, Bruce McCully at Gurnel, W. O. Thomas at Waukegan, F. F. Grim at Garfield Boulevard, Chicago, C. L. Waite at Keely Street and H. W. Hoover at Ashland Avenue. Grant E. Pike preaches at Boone Grove and Hebron, Ind., and H. E. Luck at Hammond, W. D. Vanwoorless at Lowell, John R. Givens at West Pullman, Ill., O. T. Morgan at Lindenwood, Ill

Bro. H. P. Williams, late chaplain in the Philippines, has been lecturing at points in Illinois and Iowa. We were charmed at his account of his experiences at the Hyde Park Church lately. The list is not complete without the name of Bro. Otsuka, a Japanese student, late of Bethany College. He gives lectures on his native land and people. Thus every man while laboring to store his mind with knowledge for future usefulness is patiently doing what good he can here and now. We believe that the influence of such a body of live, consecrated men will be felt for good among our brotherhood. HIRAM VAN KIRK.

A Dramatic Incident.

It was Wednesday, January 18, 1837—the fifth day of the historic debate between Alexander Campbell and Bishop Purcell. The battle between these two mighty champions of Protestantism and Romanism was waxing fast and furious. At four o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Campbell took the platform. He proceeded to read extracts from theologians of the Roman Church, proving that Romanism is tolerant of immorality, under certain conditions At the close of his half hour he said:

Once more, from Liguori, and I shall have given almost a specimen of the immorality and impiety of the Roman Catholic rule of faith, on general points of religion and morality. There is no one subject on which we could be more copious than this one: but from respect to our audience we shall give but the remotest hint:

A bishop, however poor he may be, cannot appropriate to himself pecuniary fines without the license of the apostolic see. But he ought to apply them to pious uses, which the council of Trent has laid upon nonresident clergymen, or upon those clergymen who keep nieces (Ligor. Ep. Doc. Mor. p 444).

Now if a priest should keep a niece, it is a very expiable and trifling offense; but should he marry a wife, he must be excommunicated forever. Thus the Roman Catholic rule of faith treats the Bible and annuls, at pleasure, every law and institution of heaven! Have I not, then, my respected auditors, fully proved the fallibility and immoral tendency of the doctrine and rule of faith of the Bishop's church—to say nothing of that system upon the clergy themselves, who expound and inculcate it?

Mr. Campbell sat down, and Bishop Purcell arose. He was evidently angry, and he spoke with fire and vehemence. He said:

I now pledge myself to show to every man of honor in this city that the last allegation read by the gentleman, purporting to be from the works of Liguori, is not to be found in the works of that writer. It is all a base fabrication, I will not say of Mr. C.; but of somebody. I will meet this charge with a complete and overwhelming refutation We have now come to an important crisis in this debate. . . . I have three editions of the complete works of Liguori in my library, or in this city, to refer to; and in none of them can this vile doctrine be found.

Here was a flat contradiction. The matter came up again and again, Bishop Purcell emphatically insisting that the works of Liguori contained no such passage. Finally Mr. Campbell requested the Bishop to loan him his own copy of the work. The request was courteously granted. On the very page which Mr. Campbell had cited was found this paragraph:

Mulctas Pecuniarias Episcopus sibi addicere non potest, quantumvis pauper sit, sine licentia Sedia Apos olicæ (ut ex pluribus argumentis S. Congregat evincitur in Tract De Syn. Dioec. L. 10 C. 10 N 2). Sed debent in usus pios expendi. Multo magis non possunt nisi in pios usus applicari il æ mulctæ, quas Tridentium inflixit Clericis non residentibus, aut concubinariis.

Mr. Campbell's case was proven, for disinterested and impartial scholars testified that the translation Mr. Campbell had given was correct and faithful. Mr. Campbell's point was that it was regarded as worse for a priest to marry than for him to keep a concubine, and this was abundantly proven.

"The Debate on Roman Catholicism," which contains the detailed account of this controversy, is now being sold by the Christian Publishing Company at the reduced price of One Dollar, postpaid. It is the stenographic report of the great eight days' debate—a volume of 360 pages, bound in cloth, red edges.

Free For Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, will send free by mail to all who send him their address a package of Pansy Compound, which is two weeks' treatment, with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, nueralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe and blood poison.

Lectures and Addresses Reported.

As promised last week we shall now attempt a report of the lectures and addresses of the Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Association delivered at Palmyra, Mo., March 19-22.

The opening address was by T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, Mo. His theme was "Permanency of the Pastor." It was half written and half oral, but vigorous throughout. The address as a whole was a strong plea for long pastorates. The address began with a statement of what the speaker considered the New Testament authority for the office, its place in the church, its nature and its authority. Strong emphasis was placed upon the authoritative quality of the pastoral office, even in the question of determining the continuance of the incumbent. Pastors are sometimes the best judges of the time to change. Churches were censured for their restlessness and foolish reasons for a change, but the pastors were themselves often to blame and moved when they should not. There is no question but what the address touched upon many of the weaknesses of our system of selecting, installing, sustaining and removing the pastor, and presented some valuable suggestions in the way of improvement, both upon the part of the pastor and upon the part of the congregation.

On the second day the order of the program was changed somewhat so as to bring a kindred subject in conjunction with the first address. So, instead of "Occultism," by W. F. Richardson, we had J. P. Pinkerton's excellent paper on the "Relation of Congregation to Pastor." Those who had heard the excellent address of T. P. Haley on the "Permanency of the Pastor" were wondering what remained to be said on the subject by J. P. Pinkerton. But after hearing J. P. Pinkerton's paper no question remained as to the height and depth, length and breadth of this subject and the inability of any one man to present it in its fullness in any one address. It was a beautiful illustration of the advantage of looking at a subject from different angles of vision. If the first address emphasized the authority of the pastor the second exalted the beauty of his submissiveness. If the first address emphasized the pastor's subjectivity to the Christ the second one emphasized his subjectivity to the congregation. If the first address emphasized the pulpit as the pastor's throne the second one emphasized his fellowship with the people as the secret of his power. And thus these two papers or addresses seemed to complement each the other throughout and were indeed complimentary to their respective authors.

On Tuesday afternoon, under the head of "Occultism in Modern Thought and Life," the people heard one of the strongest arraignments of Theosophy and Christian Science that has yet been given to the public from the pulpit or platform, by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo. This lecture sought to relate these modern cults to ancient ones by a similitude of doctrines and then to literally annihilate them with logic. The lecture dealt almost wholly with the contradictory and senseless nature of the leading doctrines of these schools. The only favorable concession was an indirect admission of some cures under their ministry, but these the lecturer thought were more satisfactorily explained in Hudson's "Law of Psychical Phenomena" than by Christian Science theories. It is a singular fact, however, that contradictory and senseless as are the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, Christian Science persists in living and growing. What, then, should be the attitude of the Christian Church toward it. That of this lecture was intensely antagonistic. It reminded one of the good old days when our preachers used to do up the sects. But as to the sects we have learned a better way, and it may be that in time we shall find that a less denunciatory attitude toward Christian Science will be more effective in destroying its power.

The fourth address of the assembly was by J. B. Jones, president of the Christian Orphan School, Fulton, Mo., on Tuesday night, on the Book of Job. It is proper to say that this address did not appear upon the regular program and was supplied by the kindness of J. B. Jones at the request of the program committee and proved to be one of the most enthusiastic addresses of the assembly. The speaker argued at considerable length for the Mosaic authorship of the Book of Job upon general principles and for the historic basis of the book. However this may be the speaker's grasp upon the book and its lessons was admittedly strong and evidenced no little thought and careful study in the discovery and arrangement of this thesis. The address was delivered without notes and in great earnestness, and easily held the attention of a very large evening audience to the close. Upon the lessons of the Book of Job, set forth in the address or sermon, as it might be called, there would probably be few dissenters; but as to the historicity claimed for the book in different respects the case was somewhat different. However, all greatly enjoyed the discourse and will hereafter think more of that very ancient document of sacred literature than ever before.

On Wednesday morning the Lectureship listened to a very interesting study of miracles, by W. H. Everest, dean of the Bible School of Drake University. The theme of the lecture was "The Basis of Faith in Miracles," but the lecture included a treatment of miracles in a more general and external sense. The Lectureship seemed to be particularly interested in Prof, Everest's definition of a miracle, which in substance was this: an event supernatural, superhuman, super Satanic and evidencing the presence of God. We speak from memory, and if not accurate enough we shall hope to be corrected. The lecture insisted upon the necessity for miracles in the primary origin of things and also of our acceptance of later miracles upon the testimony of credible witnessess. Not seeing a miracle must not be taken as evidence of their nonexistence and that we are not now living in an age of miracles were points emphasized in the lecture. But miracles will appear again at the last day. Miraculous events are related in the O. T., but these should not be needlessly multiplied or confused with figures of speech. Miracles of the N. T. are well attested and evidence the presence of God, the divinity of Christ and the divine character of his kingdom and holy religion.

The lecture of F. G. Tyrrell, of Chicago, on Wednesday afternoon, on "Practical Christian Communism" was intensely animating. Its portrayal of present industrial, social and civil conditions was soul-stirring. After the array of facts and figures it seemed impossible to doubt the existence of tyranny, robbery and anarchistic elements in the industrial, social and civil affairs of life. Some of the remedies suggested for existing evils, by the lecture, were the single tax, municipal, state and government ownership of railway, gas, light, water and other franchises. The communism advocated in the lecture was carefully qualified by the term Christian. Among the pauperizing forces and factors abroad in the land the lecture dwelt at length upon the rapid increase of machinery. The lecture did not treat of the liquor traffic under this head for the reason that its influence in that direction is known and conceded. The gospel of Jesus Christ preached and practiced was especially emphasized as the hope of the world. Preaching alone will not suffice. There must be an application of the principles taught by Christ to all the affairs of life. On the whole the lecture was a strong plea for practical Christianity and for the welfare of humanity.

On Wednesday night the Ministerial Association was again ably represented in the address of A. N. Lindsey, of Christian University, Canton, Mo., on the "Relation of Our Ministry to Our Colleges." The address argued at length and with force the reponsibility of the pulpit to our colleges and clearly indicated a lack of proper interest on the part of our preachers generally in respect to this responsibility. The address advocated the wisdom of Christian colleges and also the wisdom of a larger endowment and better equipment for each. Our present colleges are poorly equipped and their efficient faculties poorly paid for their services. The address suggested that an effort be made to raise a million dollars a year for five years for the better equipment and endowment of our colleges, the same to be under the management of a suitable general board elected for that purpose. It was advocated that the trustees of our colleges should consist more largely of our preachers. In short, that our preachers must come to the front if our colleges are to hold a place in the affairs of the church of the future.

The last session of the Lectureship and Ministerial Association was held on Thursday morning and the lecture was by Clinton Lockhart, president of Christian University. The subject of the lecture was "The Authorship of Isaiah 40-46." The singular thing about this lecture was that it did not argue for or against the dual authorship of the book, but sought in an unbiased way to present the two lines of argument for and against the dual authorship theory. The lecturer had prepared a syllabus of the lecture, copies of which were distributed in the audience, without cost, for future consideration and conclusions. The lecturer stated that he had his own convictions in the matter, but would not express them, that each might the better judge of the strength of the arguments presented. The lecture was scholarly in its grasp of the problem, and of the evidences pro and con, and is evidently a valuable contribution to the literature on this subject.

Thus closed what was generally conceded to be one of the most stimulating, profitable and enjoyable sessions of the Missouri Christian Lectureship and Ministerial Association. And now that these have been merged into one body, the Missouri Christian Institute, all will look forward to its first session in Fayette, next March, with unfaltering interest.

Sunday-School Literature.

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

Notes and News.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Rally will be necessary this year to those wanting the honor of one of the best banners sent out from any Association, but you can most assuredly have the Rally without the presence of one of the field force, in fact, some of the very best are with the home forces. Try it.

Yes, we mean what we say, a banner worthy of a prominent place in your school, to every school meeting the nine requirements, all of which are easy and beneficial, and are: First, Year-Round School. Second, increased enrollment. Third, increased average attendance. Fourth, observed Childrens' Day. Fifth, has furnished annual statistical report. Sixth, had Bible School Rally. Seventh, paid apportionment to State Bible-school Work. Eighth, cooperated with County Bible-school Superintendent. Ninth, had increased church membership in Bible-school.

During your spring Rally, you can easily increase your enrollment, the church membership and meet your apportionment, while the other items are matters of record and can be easily met.

John Giddens will make us such a report this month as will gladden us in the Lord's work, for he is putting in schools where results will follow.

No wiser move is made than when ladies are put in charge of many of our Missouri schools, as at Hickman's Mill, where such good work goes on under Mrs. Ida Swaney, and at Poplar Bluff under Mrs. Mary Kinyon, for womanly tact, patience and "motherly" wit seem to easily make their way.

Again, to their honor, where the ladies are in charge, the apportionments are remitted sooner or later, and always with a hearty word of cheer.

At Webb City, under F. M. Rogers, our Bible-school is coming wonderfully to the front, having increased from 70 to 240 in less than six months, while for the first time in many years, the apportionment will be paid in full, so that you see what the minister has to do with such things.

Two constant and steadfast friends of this cause are J. P. Adcock, preacher at Sheldon, and J. E. DeJarnett, in whose home I have so often had such kindly welcome. Church debts are hard to handle when burdensome, as was true at Sheldon, but now the brethren are reaching out into all fields of helpfulness, growing and enlarging their home work, giving and helping the needy, and in all this their minister delights in leading the way.

Our Rally at Drexel was one of the best of the year, O. A. Ishmael having enlisted the other schools and the citizens, so that schools were dismissed and it was made a great day every way. The sessions from early in the morning until ten at night were all crowded with a happy and joyous people, while the exercises were so inspiring that your servant forgot self in his delight in the Lord's work. The offering was not limited to our brethren but, was from all sources. Thanks to the Christian hearts that thus sought to help us honor God and reach the children, even Brother Ishmael being surprised at the good results and gladsome giving, and of course, enjoys the honor of it.

The Foster school is not slow, but the hardship of their labor is not appreciated by strangers. J. M. Claypool is giving every effort and is seeing somewhat of his efforts to thus honor God and help the children, as so many of the church membership should do. The few did us kindly, thanks.

T. A. Hedges has nearly the entire month of April engaged, but you will do well to urge him for a date, as the Rally will simply increase the interest in every department of the church, putting you in good shape for work.

For immediate help we earnestly appeal to all our schools and ministers. H. F. DAVIS.

A Telephonic Message From Florida.

Hello, CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! Give me the brotherhood, a minute, please. Who? Why, D. D. McLean, Bowling Green, Fla. All right, go ahead.

Brethren, we are but few in number down here; only twelve live, working members. The most of us are hard run to make a living. We should be very lonesome if we had time. We have no preacher, but we have a live little Bible-school which meets regularly every Lord's day, after which we "break bread" in memory of the Master, at which Bro. S. R. Woods (Dr. Woods), whom many of you know, gives us a Bible lesson which is far better and more interesting than much of the preaching that has to be borne with. But what makes us particularly glad, and what we want to tell you with the hope that it will make you glad, too, is that for our March offering we sent up ten dollars, and what is still better, we don't think that we have done anything to boast of. But we would be glad if some of you, who are well informed in regard to our strength, numerically, would make the calculation and tell us at that rate of giving, how much would be raised this year? Good bye!

[Not less, perhaps, than a million dollars; but that comes of your having an extra good teacher. —EDITOR.]

Progress in Saving Creighton Ave. (Ft. Wayne) Church.

The church at Creighton Ave., Ft. Wayne, made its first payment on the church saving enterprise on March 20. They decreased the debt $3,500. Concessions of $500 were made by creditors, $3,000 being paid by Ft. Wayne and the district. Members of the church, many of them, had to borrow the money to make up the amount. Never was sacrifice more heroic. The present indebtedness is to the Tri-State Loan Association, $3,743.

Of the $500 undertaken by the fifth district $435 has been paid and $65 remains to be raised. This will leave $678 to be raised. Responses are already coming in from the brotherhood outside of the district, the first dollar received being from a sister in Mt. Sterling, Ky. Enclosing the dollar she wrote: "I want all the churches saved in the states, especially where my boys are. You may think this a small amount. I have so many calls and so few dollars. Paper dollars are not always handy. I had saved this to send for flower seeds. I hope it may grow and bloom.—MELISSA M. CLARK."

God bless this Kentucky mother. If every mother, who has a boy to save, will send a dollar we can save Creighton Ave. Church and put fifty evangelists in the field in Indiana within sixty days. Mothers of Indiana, are your boys worth a dollar apiece? Then send the dollar. Other pledges and moneys are coming in, an itemized list of which will be published when completed.

By the settlement, in part, on March 20, the time of final settlement was extended to April 10, when full settlement must be made.

The Church Extension is ready with its $3,000. The $678 outside the district must be raised by April 10. Will not some one in each church take it upon himself to present the matter to the brethren on or before April 8? Should there be more money received than is required it will be prorated and remainder held to your order.

Remit to the undersigned, Logansport, Ind., or Bro. Zach A. Harris, or W. W. Dygert, 50 Miner St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

A Rare Opportunity.

It is not often that lovers of good books have such an opportunity of filling their bookshelves with first-class literature at small expense as is now being afforded by the Christian Publishing Company.

This company has recently come into possession of two bankrupt stocks of books. We secured these stocks at very advantageous figures. In fact, we are offering books at retail, in some instances, at less than the actual cost of production. We desire to call attention to a few sample offers from our "Special Catalogue No. 22," a little booklet containing a complete list of the books that we are selling at reduced prices, which we will gladly send on application.

Memoirs of Gen. Sherman. This book was published by the Chas. L. Webster Company. It was a subscription book. It is a splendid volume of over 500 pages, printed on fine paper and handsomely bound in cloth. In it Gen. Sherman gives, not only his part in the Civil War, and his subsequent command of the Army of the United States, but tells, in a most graphic and interesting way, of his experience as a young officer and as a business man on the Pacific Coast, from 1845 to 1858. We are offering this magnificent volume for Eighty-five Cents! We do not believe that any publisher in the United States would undertake to furnish ten thousand copies at that rate, wholesale.

Treasury of Song. A volume of piano and organ music, by such composers as Beethoven, Mozart, Bach, Gluck, Schumann, etc. This book has had a large sale at the regular price of $2.50. We are offering it, postpaid, for only One Dollar.

Bagster Teachers' Bible. There is nothing cheap or shoddy about this edition, inside or out. The leather is real leather, inside and out; the paper is fine quality. The book is divinity circuit, round corners, red-under-gold edges, silk sewed, Syrian Levant, full leather-lined. It has complete references, concordance, maps, chronological tables, etc. It is a Bible that has been generally sold for Five Dollars. We are offering to send it, postpaid, for Two Dollars.

A Debate on Roman Catholicism. Two weeks ago we called attention to this book, and orders have been pouring in on us. It is the best of all books on Romanism. Alexander Campbell met in public debate John B. Purcell, Roman Archbishop of Cincinnati, and this volume is the stenographic report of the debate. The price was formerly $1.50, but we have reduced it to One Dollar, postpaid.

Christian Baptism. By Alexander Campbell. This is an elaborate treatise on every phase of this subject. We are offering the original edition, published by Alexander Campbell at Bethany in 1852. It is a book of over 400 pages, bound in leather. We do not know the original retail price of the book, but it was probably about $2.00 or $2.50. We are offering it, postpaid, for Fifty Cents.

We have scores of book bargains as good as these. Take advantage of these we have mentioned, and when writing, ask us to send you our new special catalogue, mentioned above. You ought to keep a copy handy for reference, or you may pay somebody else $2.00 for a book that we are offering for fifty cents! Address Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

Missionary.

Our Home Field.

The greatest difficulty in the way of Home Missions is to get Christians to realize the great need of the home field.

It requires facts, statements, arguments and reflection to produce the conviction that there is need of mission work in America.

In New Hampshire there is not one church of our brotherhood.

In Vermont we have only two churches.

In Massachusetts we have only nine churches.

In Rhode Island we have only one small church.

In Connecticut we have only three churches.

In all New England we have only twenty-three small churches in a population of six and a half million people.

In New Mexico we have only six small churches.

In Arizona only two churches.

In Idaho only six churches.

In Utah only two churches.

In Nevada no church.

In Wyoming we have only four churches.

In these fourteen states we have only forty-three small churches.

There are single counties in Missouri where we have twenty churches and they would average as well as the forty-three small churches.

Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already unto the harvest.

A New Crisis.

Jesus said to his disciples, after his resurrection, that they were to be witnesses for him both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Both in this statement and in the form of the great commission preserved to us by Luke, the base of operations and the first scene of their work is made the Holy Land itself. This is always the divine method of evangelism. The base of supplies must be secured; the home field must be sown and partially reaped before the workers can be sent out with confidence to the regions beyond. There are several analogies between the early evangelistic work of the disciples among the Jewish people and the task of Home Missions as it is confronted by us. Jesus sent his disciples first to the Jews, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, because they were the most intelligent people of his time. So Christianity needs first to take hold upon America because of the very elements of civilization and power which we possess. Our lives have been blessed, not for ourselves, but for the sake of the world which waits for our ministry.

Again, the success of the gospel on Jewish soil was in a certain measure a token of its success elsewhere. If the gospel failed to transform Jewish character into Christ's image, there could be no reasonable expectation that it would succeed better elsewhere. The same is the case with the gospel in America. If Christian civilization is to fail here, if the problems of our city life, of our politics, of our domestic relation, of individual righteousness, are to fail of solution under the light of the gospel in America, what reason have we to hope that in the dark places of the earth good is to be done by Foreign Missions?

Again, the Jews were the people of the dispersion. Possessing Palestine they also possessed the uttermost parts of the earth, because their national destiny had sprinkled them over the face of the whole earth, and in every considerable city they had their dwelling-place, and were moving factors in trade. Is not this true also of the Anglo-Saxon? While America is the base of his life he has gone forth into all the world to bring the triumph of his genius as a merchant, engineer, constructor of public works, a governmental expert and a force everywhere to be reckoned with.

This outpouring of American life into the far countries is a potent factor for good or evil as the case may be. If the fountain is sweetened by the gospel at home, the influence of American life upon the nations of the world will be helpful and uplifting, but we are well aware, by virtue of repeated instances in history, that no force is so potent for evil as a conscienceless and unregenerate civilization, bent only upon selfish schemes of aggrandizement. For these reasons, as well as because of the heroism with which the gospel was first brought to this land, and which is still manifested in all the work of the home missionaries, because of the fact that the eyes of the world are upon us as we seek to work out the problems of our national life, because of the much we have received in the way of divine blessing through an illustrious ancestry both of Puritans and Cavaliers, and because of the unbounded prosperity with which we are blessed, no resources ought to be spared to make the cause of America's evangelization triumphant through the regular ministries of our missionary organizations.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Macedonian Call from the West.

There is one vast difference between the vision of Paul and the one that we see. Paul saw one man; we see and talk with hundreds who are loudly calling to our brethren to come with a reasonable gospel and to gather together the perishing thousands that are in this country. I have been deeply impressed with the rapidity with which this country is being developed I have been away one short year, and on my return I see the evidence everywhere of a great influx of people into this state. An era of great prosperity is upon this country, and this is the time for our people to strike for Christ and primitive Christianity. Brethren, the more I see of the sectarianism of this Western country the more thoroughly am I satisfied that the only salvation for it is to be found in giving them the pure gospel as we understand and preach it. Many of the people are ready to hear it as they never were before, and many others will gladly give the plea for the union of Christians a favorable hearing as soon as they know that somebody is making the plea. They do not know it out in this great West. The time is approaching when you will be called upon to make your offering for Home Missions. When that day comes remember that your kinsmen are all over this section and need your help. Remember that many of them are widely separated from other brethren, and that unless you send men and money to plant the ancient gospel out here they must go into some sectarian church or parish, so far as a religious life is concerned. Remember, that gospel must be planted here now, or in a few years it will be an expensive work for those who do it. Remember that the poor men of this country to-day will be the rich men of this section in a few years, and that if you would convert men in large numbers it must be done while they are poor. Now is the day for the successful preaching of the gospel to the people of the West. Send your men and your money now, and in a few years we can take care of ourselves and help others in large offerings.

The offering for Home Missions of last year ought to be duplicated, and if every dollar of it could be used in the Rocky Mountain country not one cent of it would be wasted. But you must remember that all New England needs as much help; the great South is a promising field, and the Middle West must be borne in mind as being the land where the gospel is taking deep root and an abundant harvest is being gathered. We only need more reapers to make marvelous growth in numbers and power. Let not this great cause be hindered for the want of money in this day of prosperity. And remember that "God is able to make all grace abound towards you, that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every goo work." B. F. CLAY.

"Housework is hard work without Gold Dust"

TO WASH BRUSHES AND COMBS

To wash hair brushes and combs, dissolve a tablespoonful of

Gold Dust Washing Powder

in boiling water; when it is nearly cold, dab the bristles up and down without allowing the backs of the brushes to become wet; when the brushes are clean, dip them in plain cold water and dry them either by the fire or in the open air. Soap turns the ivory back combs or brushes yellow. but Gold Dust does not injure them,

Evangelistic.

CALIFORNIA.

Artesia, March 25.—Three more confessed faith in Christ last Sunday at our regular services.—N. B. McGHEE, pastor.

WASHINGTON.

Palouse, March 27.—Held 12 days' meeting at Deep Creek; five confessions. One more confession at our afternoon service last Sunday. I am now helping Bro. LaDow at Tekoa.—E. C. WIGMORE.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Chandler, March 26.—Twelve months' work ended yesterday. Four added, making total number added 74. Most of these at regular and prayer-meeting services. A bright prospect for us here.—A. B. CARPENTER.

IOWA.

Shenandoah, Mar. 26.—The work here is assuming new life and the outlook is more encouraging. Eight have taken membership with us this month, and others in sight. I hope to move from Osceola to this point within a few days.—J. H. WRIGHT.

KENTUCKY.

Richmond, March 29.—Bro. Henry Clay Garrison, of Danville, Ky., preached for us 16 days in March. By confession 26, by commendation seven. The sermons were clear, forcible and pleasantly presented; 183 added within about three years.—WM. ROSS LLOYD.

MICHIGAN.

Ballards, March 26.—We closed a four weeks' meeting last evening with 15 additions; 13 by baptism and two by statement. I took the work here about two months ago, the church having been without a pastor for more than a year, but the brethren had been faithful,and I found a sweet, willing spirit in the hearts of all, and a people who are ever ready to sacrifice for the cause of Christ. We raised $50 30 for the starving in India besides surpassing our apportionment for Foreign Missions. I go to Cadillac on April 9, to hold a two weeks' meeting for the brethren there, who are weak but faithful to the trust which has been delivered unto them.—ERNEST P. NICHOLSON, pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburg, March 29.—Our meeting in the East End Church has surpassed the expectations of the most hopeful. Eight added last night, 31 Sunday, 89 to date. I spoke three times Sunday, twice here and after Sunday-school at Bro. Thurgood's church (Central), and he took 14 more confessions there, making the total at Central 251. We have had in the three meetings 613 added to date. We had a full men's meeting one week ago and will have a meeting for women only, Sunday P. M. The capacity of this house was taxed to the uttermost. Bro. Cramblet and his church are working hard and Bro. Wilson is singing excellent solos. "God giveth the increase." Praise him with us for the past and pray for us in the future, please. —CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

KANSAS.

Sedgwick, March 26.—Our meeting starts off well. The house packed at every service, good music, a fine feeling and three additions to date—one week old. The pastor, E. M Haily, is a companionable and devoted minister. Indications are favorable for a great meeting.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Chanute, March 29.—There were two additions to the church here last Sunday; one by letter and one by confession. The work here still continues to improve in every way.—W. T. ADAMS.

Norton, March 29.—The meeting at Oberlin closed last Lord's day with an organization of 30, all heads of families but two. In the midst of sectarian bitterness we entered this field. There were a few Disciples who had kept the faith and were ready to join hand and heart in the seige. The hearts of those few faithful Disciples are glad and rejoice at the bright outlook for them as a church. A board of officers were elected and a Bible school organized last Lord's day with a good staff of officers and teachers. Last week we also organized a C. W. B. M. with 13 members. Money was raised to employ a minister half time to co-operate with Dresden. Bro. Hoppas, of Dresden, helped me greatly the last two weeks of the meeting in leading the song service.—WALTER G. MENZIES.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock, March 30.—Preached a few sermons at a country church near Austin, Lonoke County, resulting in the reorganization of the church and the addition of 12 members to the number.—W. J. HUDSPETH.

INDIANA.

Bloomfield, March 24.—Meeting here two weeks old, with 16 additions; 14 by confession. We continue 10 days longer. Next meeting at Odon.—A. MARTIN AND DAUGHTER.

Bloomfield, March 30.—Twenty-seven added here to date 24; by confession and baptism. We continue another week.—A. MARTIN AND DAUGHTER.

Bedford,March 26.—Last Lord's day was a great day for the Bedford congregation. We had Bro. Z. T. Sweeney make an effort to raise $5,000 for a subscription fund to the new church building. To the joy but surprise of all, $12,000 was subscribed. The church feels under great obligations to the mighty man of God. [Architects should address Dr. J. B. Duncan.]—JAMES SMALL.

Bloomington.—With a crowded house and five accessions we closed a four weeks' meeting last night. Bro. A. P. Cobb has been our helper. His sermons were strong and most helpful to all. Including 15 who came in just before Brother Cobb's arrival we have had 123 accessions; 93 by baptism. There were only about five sermons without accessions.—T. J. CLARK.

Mishawauka, March 24.—Three confessions and baptisms last Lord's day. Baptistery has hardly been dry since January 1. Fifteen persons have obeyed the gospel at our regular services and three letters recently received. My Sunday-school class of 36 young people surprised me Thursday evening, Mar. 22, and left a large mahogany rocker in evidence. Then, the next evening the Ladies' Aid took possession of our home, and left a generous supply of table linen. Few men can boast of "two birthdays in one year." The rocker is not to lull my soul to sleep, but is, as expressed by the class, to rest the body while the inner man works. May it be a help and not a hindrance. Yours in Christ.—W. W. DENHAM.

NEBRASKA.

Harvard.—Five added at regular service last Lord's day. Our full apportionment to Foreign Missions was raised. The Orphans' Home will be remembered on Easter Sunday.—SAM'L GREGG, pastor.

Tanbury, March 26.—We closed a three week's meeting here last night. The song service was in charge of J. W. Hilton, of Bethany. He did his work well. The preaching was done by the writer. Large audiences greeted us every evening. The meeting resulted in 51 additions; 40 were by confession and baptism. The others were by statement, letter and from our religious neighbors. Our apportionment for Foreign Missions was $50. We raised it with ease. All departments of church work are in excellent condition. We are now directing our energies toward the Home Missionary Offering.—WILLIAM OESCHGER, pastor.

Avoca, March 24.—Just closed a fine meeting at Schuyler, with N. T. Harmon. He is a fine preacher and loved by all. He and his excellent wife are doing good work. Fourteen added and a house of worship arranged for, which will soon be ready for dedication. We are now here helping Bro. E. S. Chamberlain in a short meeting.—C. C. ATWOOD AND WIFE.

Kearney, March 23.—Over 13 eveings Bro. E. W. Kerr, of Ottawa, Kan., sang the gospel, and I tried to preach it with this church. Result, 13 added, 16 in all since I came here last month; eight by confession and baptism. This church's history is a sad one, because of a failure of the leading brethren to work harmoniously. And although I have received a unanimous call to the pastorate I shall be unable to continue the work unless we succeed in harmonizing and combining our forces financially.—W. T. HACKER, pastor.
